The challenge calls for a series of five games, but it is thought that when the Maroon nine is in the land of Nippon other games will be arranged with Japanese universities. The departure will be made about Sept. 15, and the athletes will not return until after Jan. 1 of next year. Last year the University of Wisconsin baseball team played a series of games in Japan, this being the longest baseball trip ever attempted by an American college representative. The trip as outlined for the Maroon team in all probability will eclipse even that made by the Badgers.

BASEBALL CHIRPS

Outfielder Paskett of the Cincinnati Reds has become one of the National league's leading base stealers.

Tom Clarke is now getting his chance to catch a fair share of Cincinnati's games and is doing it excellently.

Pitcher Barger of Brooklyn isn't the personification of poetic grace on the mound, but he can handle that sphere.

Pitcher Bill Burns' splendid work for Cincinnati has aroused wonder all over the circuit how he escaped the American league waiver gauntlet.

Hal Chase of the New York Americans makes more sensational plays around first base than any first baseman in the league. He handles poorly thrown balls with ease, and if they strike his mitt they stick there.

How to Wash Eiderdown.

Make a lather of hot water and soap jelly, a heaped teaspoonful to the gallon, and add a little liquid ammonia. Steep the quilt in this for a few minutes. Then rinse well up and down and use a second or third lot of suds if necessary. Rinse in two lots of clean water to which a little ammonia has been added and run through a wringer. If you have no wringer hang in a windy situation and squeeze the bottom occasionally, as the water drains down. Shake frequently while drying and do not dry it in too cold air.

How to Clean Ebonized Wood.

To clean and restore ebonized wood use a mixture of equal parts of powdered pumice stone and linseed oil. Rub carefully the way of the grain and polish with a dry, soft cloth.

Pearls.

Black pearls are the most valuable, pink come next in value, then white and lastly yellow.

REDEMPTION OF PARTY PLEDGES

Who are Actually Responsible for Failure to do so.

SEN. BURROWS AND THE INTERESTS

Of Which He has Been a Very Faithful Supporter.

Letter From a Former Supporter.—Mr. Townsend Would be Representative of People of Michigan.

In the discussion of the question of United States Senatorship by the friends of Mr. Burrows, too much attention has been given to the personality of the candidate, evidently with the purpose of concealing the real issue. I am a republican of life long standing, and in each of his former campaigns for United States Senator, I have supported him. This time I expect to vote for Mr. Townsend. In arriving at this conclusion, I have been influenced but little by the fact, that Senator Burrows is an old man and Congressman Townsend in the prime of life: but rather by the policies they represent.

During the last two National Administrations, the Republican party has stood for certain policies. By reason of the high character and efficient service of the men at the head of the Administration, these policies have been given their names, and today we speak glibly of the Roosevelt and the Taft policies. In fact these policies are Republican policies and were clearly set forth in our National platforms and proclaimed during the various campaigns by our leaders. Now it is a well known fact, as well known as that the policies themselves existed, that these party doctrines, or pledges have not been fully met, that they have not been carried out to the extent that Roosevelt or Taft desired or that the people demanded and that both of these leaders encountered the most violent opposition in their efforts to redeem party promises and obtain legislation demanded by the people.

The query arises, why? The answer is easy. The special interests represented by certain well-known senators, procured amendments to the bills introduced, that nullified the bills, making them of no force or value. The senate realized the wants of the people, and knew the party was pledged to remedial legislation, but they chose to consider themselves better judges of what was good for the people, than the people themselves, and the party.

Reader, you know, and I know, why these changes were made in the tariff bill, by the senate. Senator Aldrich, alone, made forty-four of these amendments, and Senator Burrows voted for fifty-three of them. This is not denied by Senator Burrows, in fact he stated in his speech here that he "would do the same thing again," and that "if the people did not want him to vote as he had voted, they must not vote for him for re-election." So, if you want to have a man in the senate who is pledged to continued support of the "interests," Burrows is the best man you can have.

The issue is thus clearly drawn. Mr. Townsend was the man selected by President Roosevelt, out of all the congress, to take charge of and push through the house, the desired measures, intended as a redemption of party pledges, and for the relief of the people, more especially the railroad regulations act, and the amendments to make more effective the inter-state commerce act. For this reason, Mr. Townsend has been attacked by the special interests he offends, called "traitor," "ingrate," "insurgent," and other pet names.

My objection to Mr. Burrows, is, he has never lifted his voice or recorded his vote on the side of the common people, when in so doing he would be opposing the other senators who stand for the special interest. If I am wrong let him or his friends point to the particular place in the record which says otherwise. His literature, spread broadcast over the state nowhere denies this assertion.

Reader, I think you will agree with me, when I say that we need a change in the United States Senate, and that in casting our vote, we should consider the issue more than the man.

It is said by the friends of Burrows and his fellows, that the Republican party stands as it were upon a precipice, and that there is grave danger of losing the control of congress, and the presidency as well. If this is true, what was it that placed the party in this predicament? The answer is plain—it was the United States Senate, and men like Julius Caesar Burrows who did it, not the men who tried to redeem the party pledges.

If we want to wreck the party completely; if we want to cause the people to lose all confidence in the honesty of our promises; if we want to place the seal of approval upon arrogant disregard of sacred pledges, and the seal of disapproval upon honest effort to give the people what they want, what they have been promised, and what justice demands they should have, then by all means let us vote to continue in power men like Julius Caesar Burrows.

But, if we want to see party pledges redeemed, if we want to give the people a champion in the United States Senate who will stand by them, and by every act do his utmost to represent the PEOPLE OF MICHIGAN, not the interest that dominate Senator Aldrich and his fellows, then let us unite in supporting Mr. Townsend.

A REPUBLICAN.

Reverned Herman J. Keyser Leaves September First

For New Field of Labor at Mt. Pleasant—A Hard Worker.

As we announced a few weeks ago, Rev. Herman J. Keyser, rector of Christ Episcopal church, has been appointed to the rectorship of the church at Mt. Pleasant, and expects to leave for his new field of labor September first.

Mr. Keyser has been in charge of the church here since June 30, 1909 and, in addition, has filled the pulpets in several other towns. During that time he has organized a vested choir of twenty-two members, an altar guild and the church has made rapid advancement. Mr. Keyser has been called upon to preach memorial sermons for the Masonic and Oddfellow fraternities as well as for the G. A. R. and last summer gave the baccalaureate address for the graduating class, C. H. S. Last season he was the coach for the high school track team which broke several records in the interscholastic meet.

Mr. Keyser, while a very earnest preacher, with a high devotion to his profession, takes an active part in all public affairs and his leaving us is a real loss to our city, and we congratulate the citizens of Mt. Pleasant on securing his services.

NEW PRIMARY LAW

Dates to be Remembered by Candidates and Electors.

Advertising and Size of Cuts is Being Regulated by Statute.

Some over zealous politicians or their friends are due for a tilt with the new primary law and unless some of them become more familiar than they are at the present time with its numerous provisions they will be facing a big fine or jail imprisonment.

It is said that in many localities larger cuts are being run in some papers than the law allows. Get familiar with the law or someone—perhaps a rival—will make matters interesting. Not knowing the law will not excuse a man. Candidates, workers for candidates and all voters should become familiar with this law.

If not familiar it is liable to causing some one a fine of not exceeding $500 and imprisonment not to exceed six months and the provisions are very strict.

Just a few reminders of the law that are of importance to all candidates and voters:

Remember the size of the cuts are limited.

All nominating petitions must be filed by 4 o'clock on the afternoon of August 22; the secretary of state to forthwith prepare lists of candidates as they will appear on the ballots.

General Primary day September 6.

County canvass September 13.

State canvass, not later than September 26.

County conventions between September 8 and 22.

State convention between September 7 and October 16, not less than 10 days after the meeting of the state board of canvassers. This year fixed for October 6 at Detroit.

County returns to be sent to the secretary of state not later than September 16.

Read Section 45 of the primary law carefully. Its a hard paragraph to digest at best but read and heed. Briefly it is intended to prescribe a penalty for hiring with money and the promise of positions, party workers election day.

Section 47 covers the posting of bills, posters, lithographs, photographs, etc.

This law cannot be read too careful and it is almost safe to say that every county in the state has already seen a violation of the law—largely through ignorance, but this ignorance will not excuse the politician or his friends if the matter gets into the courts. Not only are these people violating the primary law but many editors in both the upper and lower peninsula have overstepped some of the provisions prescribed.

FORD P. ROBBINS OF BOYNE FALLS

Candidate for the Republican nomination for Sheriff of Charlevoix County at the Primary Election, Tuesday, September 6, 1910.

Ford P. Robbins is in the prime of vigorous manhood, has been a resident of this county for the past 18 years, has been three times elected to the office of Supervisor of his township, and is fully qualified to hold the important office to which he aspires.

The only plank in his platform is the impartial enforcement of the law without fear or favor. If Mr. Robbins is the choice of the people for Sheriff they can rest assured that he will perform every duty which his high office imposes upon him, for he is a man who, when he has a thing to do, goes ahead and does it. 33-t-f-3

SWIFT ON TRIAL

Gentlemen of the Jury That Will Pass on Evidence.

In Celebrated Case. Applications for Citizenship Have Been Decided.

Circuit court opened Monday forenoon, the opening session being taken up with the reports of the probationers. Very satisfactory reports were received in nearly every case. The first case on call, the people vs. Swift, was taken up and and what is known as the Griffin case was put on trial. A day was consumed in getting a jury, both sides announcing Tuesday noon their satisfaction with the following jurors: William Wood, Thomas Shapton, George Olney, Charles Rounds, Mat Allen, Nat Burns, George Saunders, Ralph Dye, Frank Nelson, George Ager, William Seymore, Thomas Cunningham.

The case is hotly contested, E. N. Clink and Mayor Gaffney of Cadillac appearing for the defense, while Prosecutor Nicholas looks after the interests of the people.

The applications for citizenship were all granted except in the cases of Metcalf, passed; Happe, Horodyski and Seiler, continued; LaBrick witness not qualified and Kozeny, petition withdrawn.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

For August as Reported by the Secretary of State.

Aside from a few complaints of smut, correspondents quite generally report wheat of good quality and the yield above the ten year average. The average estimated yield per acre in the state and northern counties is 18, in the southern counties 17, in the central counties 20 and in the upper peninsula 15 bushels. The per cent of plowing done for wheat in the state and central counties is 12, in the southern counties 13 and in the northern counties 7.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in July at 87 mills is 100,758, and at 81 elevators and to grain dealers 130,426 or a total of 231,184 bushels, indicating that the crop of 1909 has been disposed of by the producers. Ninety-eight mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in July.

The average estimated yield of rye per acre in the state and northern counties is 15, in the southern counties 14, in the central counties 16 and in the upper peninsula 19 bushels.

The condition of corn as compared with an average in the state is 79, in the southern counties 77, in the central counties 82 in the northern counties 84 and in the upper peninsula 81. The condition one year ago was 84 in the state and southern counties, 83 in the central counties and 87 in the northern counties.

The estimated average yield per acre in the state is 30, in the southern counties 31, in the central counties 32, in the northern counties 26 and in the upper peninsula 25 bushels.

The condition of potatoes as compared with an average in the state is 72, in the southern counties 70, in the northern counties 80 and in the upper peninsula 75. The condition one year ago in the state and central counties was 86, in the southern counties 85 and in the northern counties 90.

The condition of beans, compared with an average per cent in the state is 85, in the southern counties 81, in the central counties 90, in the northern counties 91 and in the upper peninsula 70. The condition one year ago in the state was 90, in the southern and northern counties 87 and in the central counties 91.

The condition of sugar beets as compared with an average in the state is 85, in the southern counties 81, in the central counties 87, in the northern counties 90 and in the upper peninsula 73. The condition one year ago in the state and southern counties was 88, in the central counties 80, and in the northern counties 85.

The yield per acre of clover hay tons, in the state is 1.31 in the southern counties 1.34, in the central counties 1.48, in the northern counties 1.01 and in the upper peninsula 1.21.

The yield per acre of timothy hay in tons in the state is 1.13, in the southern counties 1.20, in the central counties 1.26, in the northern counties 0.86 and in the upper peninsula 0.90.

The condition of pasture as compared with an average in the state is 64, in the southern counties 63, in the central counties 68, in the northern counties 65 and in the upper peninsula 54. One year ago the condition in the state was 75, in the southern counties 76, in the central counties 79 and in the northern counties 67.

Severe frosts, ravages of insects and the extremely dry and hot weather during the month of July have so injured the apple crop that this year's yield will be the lightest in the past ten years. The prospect for an average crop in the state, southern counties and upper peninsula is 24, in the central counties 25 and in the northern counties 22. One year ago the prospects was 53 in the state, 43 in the southern counties, 61 in the central counties and 82 in the northern counties. The winter varieties that promise best, are in their order: Baldwin, Northern Spy, Ben Davis, Russet, Greening, Wealthy, Wagner and Talman Sweet. Of the early sorts the most promising are Duchess, Yellow Transparent, Red Astrachan, Famense, Maiden Blush and Pippin.

The prospects for an average crop of peaches in the Michigan Fruit Belt is 39 per cent. and in the state 40. One year ago the prospect was 77 and 67 per cent. respectively. The varieties that promise best are, in their order: Elberta, Crawford, Hill's Chili, Gold Drop, Kalamazoo, Barnard and Crosby.

PEARSON IN LINE

Will Vote for Candidate Receiving Highest Vote.

In the Senatorial Primary, on Tuesday September 6, 1910.

There has been considerable discussions over the state as to whether the senatoral primary law should be interpreted to mean that the candidate receiving the most votes in the entire state should be supported by all Republican legislators, or whether each representative should vote according to the vote in his own district.

Both of the candidates, however have gone on record as being willing to abide by the state-wide basis, though Mr. Burrows did not do so as flat-footedly as did Mr. Townsend. In order that there might be no possible doubt, however, as to how the representatives from this county would vote, this question was asked Hon. W. J. Pearson, who is at present the only candidate for representative, and below we print his reply, written to Mayor Hampton.

Boyne Falls, Aug. 13, 1910.

Friend Hampton:—Your letter of inquiry at hand. If I am returned to the legislature I shall vote for United States senator for the man receiving the most votes in the state for same, as I am sure that was the intent of the bill as passed.

Yours very truly,

W. J. Pearson.

From which it is assured, that if Mr. Townsend receives the most votes in the state, Mr. Pearson, if elected, will vote for him, and for Mr. Burrows, if he should receive the most votes in the entire state.

Doings at the Majestic

The Majestic opened Monday evening with vaudeville. Mr. Jack Murrell, Charlevoix's comedian, introduced "Dot Leetle German Band," with good jokes and monologue. Francis Swartz & Co., in their playlet, "Love's Sacrifice" made a hit. Miss Swartz displaying excellent talent as a versatile woman.

Vaudeville at Opera House

On Friday and Saturday the Majestic will be closed and Mr. Campbell announces that the vaudeville will be in the Charlevoix Theatre owing to the fact that the acts for these nights demand more stage room. A comedy triple-horizontal bar act will be one feature, also the famous Black Art act by Joe Vandervest. Boy City Band is also listed and Jack Murrell will be seen in his original tramp act. Friday night is amateur night. Motion pictures will be shown. On Monday the Majestic will again be opened as usual.

LARGE CROWD AT GRANGE PICNIC

Held Under Auspices of Pomona at Ironton, Michigan.

FINE ADDRESS BY HON. H. F. BAKER

On What the Grange Had Accomplished, and its Future.

Told of Work Accomplished by Representative Pearson. Winners in Field Day Sports and Ball Game.

The picnic at Ironton Thursday under the auspices of Pomona grange was attended by several hundred from all parts of the county. Nearly every candidate was present, mingling with the crowd, making good fellows of themselves.

After dinner the meeting was called to order by the master of Pomona and music was furnished by members of Ironton grange and prayer by Rev. H. A. Putnam, after which the speaker of the day, Hon. H. F. Baker of Weadock, the grange legislative leader, was introduced. Mr. Baker began by paying a tribute to Charlevoix's representative, Hon W. J. Pearson, for the record he made as a hardworking member who always was looking out for his constituents and how the heading off of the reforestation scheme was due to the efforts of Mr. Pearson.

Mr. Baker spoke on what the grange had accomplished in the past, through the power of organization, and what it was doing at the present, closing with a tribute to the grange as a fraternity.

Short addresses were also made by E. B. Ward, Hon. W. J. Pearson and Judge Harris.

Following are the winners in the field day sports:

100 yard dash, 1st—Albert LaLonde.

100 yard dash, 2nd.—Harry VanGorder.

Horse race, 1st—Lloyd McClanathan.

Horse race, 2nd—Frank Green.

Ironton was winner in the ball game over Marion.

The dance in the evening under the auspices of Ironton grange was a complete success and rounded up a day of pleasure.

Literary Notes

"Hardly had the betrothal of Prince George and Princess Mary been announced," says Philip Hume Foster in the Woman's Home Companion for August, "when the future queen of England had opportunity to test her sense of duty and her self control. While the Duke of Clarence had been studying statesmanship as heir to the English throne, Prince George had been slowly but surely advancing in the royal navy. As an admiral his flagship had been stationed off Malta, and here he had met, wooed and won the beautiful daughter of Admiral Seymour. Before marrying her, Prince George had written a formal renunciation of his claims to the throne of England and for a few years had lived very happily with the fair-haired, idolized English wife, who flitted from colonial port to colonial port to meet her royal husband. One winter they spent in Bermuda, where they were most popular with both English and American residents.

"When Prince George found himself almost at the foot of the throne through the death of his brother, he realized that it was one thing to renounce the throne and another to have his renunciation accepted. Queen Victoria and all the political powers behind her insisted upon the annulment of the romantic marriage, so the engagement of Princess Mary and Prince George was shadowed by this ugly cloud. The young princess did not indulge in hysterics. There were no recriminations nor unpleasant scenes for Prince George to endure. As his wife, she believed that she should and would be able to hold his affections, and she went about the task of winning the love of the man whom fate had decided should lead her to the throne. In fact, it was generally felt in England that she was more deeply in love with Prince George than with his unfortunate brother.

"The morganatic wife of Prince George was provided for, it is said, by no less a person than his mother and since then no shadow of scandal has ever entered the life of the young couple."

CABBAGE DISEASES.

Susceptibility to Rot and Infection Due to Soil Conditions.

In a bulletin on "Cabbage Experiments and Culture" issued by the Maryland agricultural experiment station it is asserted that the susceptibility to rot and disease of cabbage growing on very rich, highly cultivated land seemed to be due more to something unsuitable in the soil rather than to the direct attacks of bacteria or fungi. During very rainy weather in the heat of summer young and apparently vigorous cabbage plants will wilt and die. If the weather is moderately dry and the soil loose and well cultivated, cabbage will grow vigorously and seemingly resist disease even if the soil is known to be infected with germs. It was noticed that a patch of cabbage planted on a piece of land that had been used to grow celery for several years grew very well until heavy rains began to fall in

PATCH OF CULTIVATED CABBAGE.

August. In the bright sunshine which followed the plants wilted and died.

The crop was a failure except a portion of the lower corner, which was on a poor clay knob, and there a few good heads matured.

Due consideration was given to the fact of poor drainage and also to excessive amounts of water about the roots, to which might be attributed much of the failure. Still it seemed a plausible conjecture that there might be extraordinary amounts of soluble salts in the soil and that they would have a poisonous effect on the roots.

A piece of rather stiff clay land, one eighth of an acre in size, that had been examined and planted to truck crops for many years and upon which cabbage had grown badly the preceding year was again treated with ten tons per acre of rotted manure. This was plowed down, and the land was prepared for the crop.

Plots were marked off and treated as follows:

Plot 1—Commercial fertilizer 1,000 pounds per acre.
Plot 2—Check no fertilizer.
Plot 3—Lime, sixty bushels per acre.
Plot 4—Nitrate of potash 150 pounds per acre.
Plot 5—Mixture of potash, 300 pounds per acre.

It had been noticed in some other work under similar conditions that nitrate of potash seemed to have the effect of promoting the vigor of the plants. Fifteen varieties of cabbage were planted across the plots, nine varieties of French and six of American origin. The plants were set June 23. They started off nicely and grew well until the first week of August, at which time there were heavy rains followed by bright sunshine.

All the plants on all the plots wilted down and only a few recovered. Most of those wilted died in a short time with hardly a rot. A few hundred on, but did not make satisfactory heads.

FUNGOUS POTATOES.

Old Disease That Is Caused by Too Much Wet Weather.

Last July and early in August we had considerable wet weather. The potato tops suffered badly from a blight. However, the vine recovered sufficiently to mature a fair crop. All through the winter the query was, "What makes the cooked potato have such a sweet taste?" And again on cutting the tuber a brownish streak or blotch appears all through the tuber, resembling a marble cake. This is seated mostly beneath where the eyes are and about one-eighth of an inch from the surface. The potato shows no outward sign of disease except that the eyes do not push as rapidly on a diseased potato as they do on one free from it. These streaks are about one inch long and one-fourth inch wide.

The query was, "What caused that peculiar streaking in the tuber?" In looking over a history of fungoids and fungous disease of the potato we find that a very similar condition existed in Ireland in 1845, resulting in a great potato famine there. That year was a very wet year, and the natural moist climate of Ireland gave a great impetus to this disease. It has not reappeared to any great extent till last year. It bears no resemblance to the potato scab either on the tuber or the foliage. In this disease the leaves turn a brownish black color and dry up, while the stalk or stem may retain some vigor, even remaining erect or pilette leaves, though upon scatter. The disease, however, carried down to the tuber and is seen there as described. In dry seasons or in dry sections no alarm need be felt as to the disease spreading, but in low moist sections care should be exercised.

Affected tubers should by no means be planted. Varieties resisting blights in general are safer for planting so as to be sure that this peculiar blight gets no hold. In some parts of Europe it is bad, and no doubt but that it has been introduced into this country from there. A few years ago we received from England some varieties, but nothing wrong was noticed at that time. Should the disease appear on the foliage sprayings of bordeaux should be given every ten or twelve days through the season.—National Stockman and Farmer.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

ILLUSTRATIONS BY MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and counsellor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.

The Warning.

So quickly that Obadiah Price might not have counted ten before it had come and gone the significance of his new situation flashed upon Captain Plum as he stood under the king's window. His plans had changed since leaving ship but now he realized that they had become hopelessly involved. He had intended that Obadiah should show him where Strang was to be found, and that later, when ostensibly returning to his vessel, he would visit the prophet in his home. Whatever the interview brought forth he would still be in a position to deliver the councilor's package. Even an hour's bombardment of St. James would not interfere with the fulfillment of his oath. But those few minutes at the king's window had been fatal to the scheme he had built. The girl had seen him. She had not betrayed his presence. She had called to him with her eyes—he would have staked his life on that. What did it all mean? He turned to Obadiah. The old man was grimacing and twisting his hands nervously. He seemed half afraid, cringing, as if fearing a blow. The sight of him set Nathaniel's blood afire. His white face seemed to verify the terrible thought that had leaped into his brain. Suddenly he heard a faint cry—a woman's voice—and in an instant he was back at the window. The girl had risen to her feet and stood facing him. This time, as her eyes met his own, he saw in them a flashing warning, and he obeyed it as if she had spoken to him. As he dropped silently back to the ground the councilor came close to his side.

"That's enough for tonight, Nat," he whispered.

He made as if to slip away but Nathaniel detained him with an emphatic hand.

"Not yet, dad! I'd like to have a word with—this—"

"With Strang's wife," chuckled Obadiah. "Ho, ho, ho, Nat, you're a rascal!" The old man's face was mapped with wrinkles, his eyes glowed with joyous approbation. "You shall, Nat, you shall! You love a pretty face, eh? You shall meet Mrs. Strang, Nat, and you shall make love to her if you wish. I swear that, too. But not tonight, Nat—not tonight."

He stood a pace away and rubbed his hands.

"There will be no chance tonight, Nat—but tomorrow night, or the next. O, I promise you shall meet her, and make love to her, Nat! Ho, if Strang knew, if Strang only knew!"

There was something so fiendishly gloating in the councilor's attitude, in his face, in the hot glow of his eyes, that for a moment Nathaniel's involuntary liking for the little old man before him turned to abhorrence. The passion, the triumph of the man, convinced him where words had failed. The girl was Strang's wife. His last doubt was dispelled. And because she was Strang's wife Obadiah hated the Mormon prophet. The councilor had spoken with fateful assurance—that he should meet her, that he should make love to her. It was an assurance that made him shudder. As he followed in silence up out of the gloom of the town he strove, but in vain, to find whether sin had lurked in the sweet face that had appealed to him in its misery—whether there had been a flash of something besides terror, besides prayerful entreaty, in the lovely eyes that had met his own. Obadiah spoke no word to break in on his thoughts. Now and then the old man's insane chucklings floated softly to Nathaniel's ears, and when at last they came to the cabin in the forest he broke into a low laugh that echoed weirdly in the great black room which they entered. He lighted another candle and approached a ladder which led through a trap in the ceiling. Without a word he mounted this ladder, and Nathaniel followed him, finding himself a moment later in a small low room furnished with a bed. The councilor placed his candle on a table close beside it and rubbed his hands until it seemed they must burn.

"You will stay—eh, Nat?" he cried, bobbing his head. "Yes, you will stay, and you will give me back the package for a day or two." He retreated to the trap and slid down it as quickly as a rat. "Pleasant dreams to you, Nat, and—O, wait a minute!" Captain Plum could hear him pattering quickly over the floor below. In a moment he was back, thrusting his white grimacing face through the trap and tossed something upon the bed. "She left them last night, Nat. Pleasant dreams, pleasant dreams," and he was gone.

Nathaniel turned to the bed and picked up a faded bunch of lilacs. Then he sat down, loaded his pipe, and smoked until he could hardly see the walls of his little room. From the moment of his landing on the island he turned the events of the day over in his mind. Yet when he arrived at the end of them he was no less mystified than when he began. Who was Obadiah Price? Who was the girl that fate had so mysteriously associated with his movements thus far? What was the plot in which he had accidentally become involved? With tireless tenacity he hung to these questions for hours. That there was a plot of some kind he had not the least doubt. The councilor's strange actions, the oath, the package, and above all the scene in the king's house convinced him of that. And he was sure that Obadiah's night visitor—the girl with the lilacs—was playing a vital part in it.

He plucked at the withered flowers which the old man had thrown him. He could detect their sweet scent above the pungent fumes of tobacco and as Obadiah's triumphant chuckle recurred to him, the gloating joy in his eyes, the passionate tremble of his voice, a grim smile passed over his face. The mystery was easy of solution—if he was willing to reason along certain lines. But he was not willing. He had formed his own picture of

A Few Days Before He Would Have Counted This Walk to St. James One of the Events of His Life.

Strang's wife and it pleased him to keep it. At moments he half conceded himself a fool, but that did not trouble him. The longer he smoked the more his old confidence and his old recklessness returned to him. He had enjoyed his adventure. The next day he would end it. He would go openly into St. James and have done his business with Strang. Then he would return to his ship. What had he, Captain Plum, to do with Strang's wife?

But even after he had determined on these things his brain refused to rest. He paced back and forth across the narrow room, thinking of the man whom he was to meet tomorrow—of Strang, the one-time schoolmaster and temperance lecturer who had made himself a king, who for seven years had defied the state and nation, and who had made of his island stronghold a hot-bed of polygamy, of licentiousness, of dissolute power. His blood grew hot as he thought again of the beautiful girl who had appealed to him. Obadiah had said that she was the king's wife. Still—

Thoughts flashed into his head which for a time made him forget his mission on the island. In spite of his resolution to keep to his own scheme he found himself, after a little, thinking only of the Mormon king, and the lovely face he had seen through the castle window. He knew much about the man with whom he was to deal tomorrow. He knew that he had been a rival of Brigham Young and that when the exodus of the Mormons to the deserts of the west came he had led his own followers into the north, and that each July, amid barbaric festivities, he was recrowned with a circlet of gold. But the girl! If she was the king's wife why had her eyes called to him for help?

The question crowded Nathaniel's brain with a hundred thrilling pictures. With a shudder he thought of the terrible power the Mormon king held not only over his own people but over the Gentiles of the mainlands as well. With these mainlanders, he regarded Beaver Island as a nest of pirates and murderers. He knew of the depredations of Strang and his people among the fishermen and settlers, of the piratical expeditions of his armed boats, of the dreaded raids of his sheriffs, and of the crimes that made the women of the shores tremble and turn white at the mere mention of his name.

Was it possible that this girl—

Captain Plum did not let himself finish the thought. With a powerful effort he brought himself back to his own business on the island, smoked another pipe, and undressed. He went to bed with the withered lilacs on the table close beside him. He fell asleep with their scent in his nostrils. When he awoke they were gone. He started up in astonishment when he saw what had taken their place. Obadiah had visited him while he slept. The table was spread with a white cloth and upon it was his breakfast, a pot of coffee still steaming, and the whole of a cold baked fowl. Near by, upon a chair, was a basin of water, soap and a towel. Nathaniel rolled from his bed with a healthy laugh of pleasure. The councilor was at least a courteous host, and his liking for the curious old man promptly increased. There was a sheet of paper on his plate upon which Obadiah had scribbled the following words:

"My Dear Nat: Make yourself at home. I will be away today but will see you again tonight. Don't be surprised if somebody makes you a visit."

The "somebody" was heavily underscored and Nathaniel's pulse quickened and a sudden flush of excitement surged into his face as he read the meaning of it. The "somebody" was Strang's wife. There could be other interpretation. He went to the trap and called down for Obadiah but there was no answer. The councilor had already gone. Quickly eating his breakfast the master of the Typhoon climbed down the ladder into the room below. The remains of the councilor's breakfast were on a table near the door, and the door was open. Through it came a glory of sunshine and the fresh breath of the Typhoon laden with the perfume of wild flowers and balsam. A thousand birds seemed carolling and twittering in the sunlit solitude about the cabin. Beyond this there was no other sound or sign of life. For many minutes Nathaniel stood in the open, his eyes on the path along which he knew that Strang's wife would come—if she came at all. Suddenly he began to examine the ground where the girl had stood the previous night. The dainty imprints of her feet were plainly discernible in the soft earth. Then he went to the path—and with a laugh so loud that it startled the birds into silence he set off with long strides in the direction of St. James. From the footprints in that path it was quite evident that Strang's wife was a frequent visitor at Obadiah's.

At the edge of the forest, from where he could see the log house situated across the opening, Nathaniel paused. He had made up his mind that the girl whom he had seen through the king's window was in some way associated with it. Obadiah had hinted as much and she had come from there on her way to Strang's. But as the prophet's wives lived in his castle at St. James this surely could not be her home. More than ever he was puzzled. As he looked he saw a figure suddenly appear from among the mass of lilac bushes that almost concealed the cabin. An involuntary exclamation of satisfaction escaped him and he drew back deeper among the trees. It was the councilor who had shown himself. For a few moments the old man stood gazing in the direction of St. James as if watching for the approach of other persons. Then he dodged cautiously along the edge of the bushes, keeping half within their cover, and moved swiftly in the opposite direction toward the center of the island. Nathaniel's blood leaped with a desire to follow. The night before he had guessed that Obadiah with his gold and his smoldering passion was not a man to isolate himself in the heart of the forest. Here—across the open—was evidence of another side of his life. In that great square-built domicile of logs, screened so perfectly by flowering lilac, lived Obadiah's wives. Captain Plum laughed aloud and beat the bowl of his pipe on the tree beside him. And the girl lived there—or came from there to the woodland cabin so frequently that her feet had beaten a well-worn path. Had the councilor lied to him? Was the girl he had seen through the king's window one of the seven wives of Strang—or was she the wife of Obadiah Price?

The thought was one that thrilled him. If the girl was the councilor's wife what was the motive of Obadiah's falsehood? And if she was Strang's wife why had her feet—and hers alone with the exception of the old man's—worn this path from the lilac smothered house to the cabin in the woods? The captain of the Typhoon regretted now that he had given such explicit orders to Casey. Otherwise he would have followed the figure that was already disappearing into the forest on the opposite side of the clearing. But now he must see Strang. There might be delay, necessary delay, and if it so happened that his own blundering curiosity kept him on the island until sundown—well, he smiled as he thought of what Casey would do

Refilling his pipe and leaving a trail of smoke behind him he set out boldly for St. James. When he came to the three graves he stopped, remembering that Obadiah had said they were his graves. A sort of grim horror began to stir at his soul as he gazed on the grass-grown mounds—proofs that the old councilor would inherit a place in the Mormon heaven, having obeyed the injunctions of his prophet on earth. Nathaniel now understood the meaning of his words of the night before. This was the family burying ground of the old councilor.

He walked on, trying in vain to concentrate his mind solely upon the business that was ahead of him. A few days before he would have counted this walk to St. James one of the events of his life. Now it had lost its fascination. Despite his efforts to destroy the vision of the beautiful face that had looked at him through the king's window its memory still haunted him. The eyes, soft with appeal; the red mouth, quivering, and with lips parted as if about to speak to him; the bowed head with its tum-

THEATRICAL

"At Sunrise"

Those who have never in their lives arisen to witness a sunrise, cannot realize what they have missed. The awakening of nature in all its grandeur; the twittering of the birds, the lowing of the herd, the fell exposé of the sun upon the waters. All are grand, but when the cold blast of winter snow and ice come, it chills the heart. But when seated in an elegant theatre, surrounded with dazzling splendor, you witness a reproduction of nature, like that given by Beatrice Kinsey, in the superb role of Midget, in "At Sunrise." All trouble vanishes, as if in summer in the sunshine of her smiles. This fascinating little lady drives all sorrows away, especially so, as she is surrounded by a competent company. A magnificent leading man Mr. Jack Snyder, who is the idol of the fair sex. Still the public is not satisfied until that eccentric and fascinating comedian, Mr. Frank E. Miller appears in his grotesque dance, funny sayings and witticisms. Unsurpassed and unsurpassable is this talented comedian But another appears, The Sultan of Cork, justly named the Sultan so great is he in his delineation of Ethropian characters. Mingled with this great combination is music of the highest order, both sentimental and rib tickling, Military heroes, beautiful scenery, and costumed up to-date. This is what comprises the great military melodrama, of music, thrills and never ending fun, at the opera house on Monday evening, August 22.

CLAUDE MELNOTTE.
"The Sultan of Cork"

How and When to Plant Vegetable and Flower Seeds.

When the lilds come the grass turns green, and for the first time since the long winter the amateur gardener can go aimless; the lust for digging and planting comes. Dig as deep as you can, provided the ground is not wet and soggy. But beware of planting too early. Use manure, lots of it, but be sure it is well rotted. Green manure is poison to plants. No garden ever was dug too often or too deep. Digging makes the garden glad and gives fine crops later on. But when in doubt about its being time to plant do not plant.

It is a mistake to plant seeds or set out plants in a wet, cold soil. With few exceptions they will not grow. At best they will lie dormant. More often the cold and wet kill the tender germs and the seed and work of planting are both lost. The crop is delayed waiting for the growth which never comes.

No seed should be planted until the ground is reasonably dry, not wet and sticky. When the proper condition prevails put in the first sowing of the hardy seeds—radishes, lettuce, onions, spinach, early round smooth peas (if one must have them, the wrinkled ones are better) and the like in vegetables.

The first flower seeds to sow after the ground is reasonably dry are pansies, daisies, sweet peas and nasturtiums. Really the pansies should have been started some weeks earlier in the house, or, better still, good plants may be bought at the florist's and set out at once. It is to be noted that little pansy plants are the best. They will grow better and bloom better and longer than the big ones which have been carried over since last fall. A week or ten days after planting the first seed, if the weather holds good, the wrinkled peas, beets and other seeds may be planted. Again, a week after these, a planting of early sweet corn may be tried, although it is a little risky still. By May 20 most seeds can be planted and most bedding plants can be set out. Corn, melons, cucumbers, geraniums, asters, lobelias and all except the most tender things are reasonably safe.

Coleus and very tender plants should not be set out until early June, and, while bush beans may be planted in late May, the limas should not be put in the ground until June 1. For the extreme northern states these dates are too early, while as the Ohio river line is approached the dates are late.

Rations For Colts.

An experienced horseman has found equal parts of corn and oats ground together to be one of the best grain rations for growing colts. It furnishes elements needed for the production of fat, bone and muscle. Adding bran or linseed meal to the ration aids very much in keeping the bowels regular and avoids constipation and in this way lessens the liability of disease.

Cooling the Cream.

To cool the cream quickly and thoroughly just as soon as the separating is finished is of more importance than anything else at that particular time. The tiger and gutter can wait for their skimmilk, but bacteria in the cream wait for nothing until the temperature favorable to their growth is reduced.

PLAYGROUNDS FOR CHILDREN

Methods by Which Vacant Spaces Can Be Utilized.

CHICAGO'S MODEL SYSTEM.

If Followed by Other Municipalities They Will Find It Beneficial to the Entire Community—Means of Obtaining Land Suitable For the Purpose.

In an address before the Congress of National Playground Associations in Rochester, N. Y., a Chicago alderman had the following to say:

With a worldwide reputation for its parks and playgrounds the Chicago public has become accustomed to seeing big things accomplished by its public bodies charged with the responsibility and duty of providing for recreation, physical exercise, the welfare of the children and enjoyment of the beautiful on the part of all citizens who are within reach of the hundred and one pleasure grounds, breathing spaces, recreation and park places inside the limits of Chicago.

It is not generally known that the special park commission within the last ten years has expanded in its activities from a mere advisory board of aldermen and private citizens assigned to the task of solving the problem of providing ways and means to make possible the present model system of parks and playgrounds into an important department of the city administration.

The present function of the special park commission, composed of nine aldermen and twelve private citizens, all appointed by the mayor, embraces the establishment, improvement and maintenance of about sixty small parks, squares and triangles, comfort stations, wading pools, fifteen playgrounds, two bathing beaches and the office of the city forester, who has sole charge of the care, maintenance, planting and trimming of trees in the streets or parkways of Chicago, including the removal of dead and unsightly trees and the general beautifying of the streets.

The varied ownership of these municipal playground sites and the commission's method of acquiring playgrounds suggest several ways in which other municipalities can initiate or extend their playground system.

The first method adopted by the commission nearly ten years ago was to ascertain the pieces of property owned by the city and either unused or else available for playground purposes and arrange with the administration for such use by discontinuing some other municipal use to which the land was being put. The latter arrangement was made by moving the department which happened to be using the land or by removing certain unsightly and unprofitable residence buildings which the city happened to come into possession of. This method formed the nucleus of Chicago's present municipal system.

The second method—that of obtaining the lease of land suitable for playground purposes—has been found to be economical and comparatively easy to put in operation. In most cases where the city obtained a lease of playground sites the commission was assisted by aldermen of the wards in which the sites were located. They found the owner who was disposed to make a lease of his property on condition that he would be relieved from payment of taxes or special assessments during the term of the lease, and the proposition was submitted to the council for ratification. This arrangement is advantageous to the property owner from a monetary point of view and affords the city an opportunity to get a playground established without incurring a heavy initial expense in the purchase price of the leased land.

The next method—that of obtaining, soliciting or accepting gifts of land from clubs, private citizens and improvement associations—is always to be recommended. It costs the city nothing for the land, and the expense of improvement, equipment and maintenance is the only one to be considered.

The fourth method of establishing playgrounds is one which the commission has successfully adopted in two cases within the last year and is to be recommended to those municipalities which are restricted in their use of general corporate funds for playground purposes. This plan calls for cooperation between the city government and the board of education.

The Green Fiend.

While a number of workmen were sitting in a wineshop in the Rue de Charenton, in Paris, one day one of them, a man of forty, named Negocier, made a wager that he would drink a dozen glasses of absinth while 11 o'clock was striking. The wager was taken and the twelve glasses placed on the table. On the first stroke Negocier swallowed his first glass, and the clock had just finished striking when he drank the twelfth and last. While his companions were applauding the feat Negocier staggered and fell heavily to the floor. He was picked up dead.

A big meeting of all the directors of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, will be held in Traverse City Thursday, September 1, for the purpose of generating enthusiasm in behalf of the development of the region.

W. R. Cole of Cross Village Emmet county, Western Michigan, reports a net income of $1261 for so much of the present year as has passed. Eighty acres of hay land made a return of 150 tons and a 20 acre piece of ground has already given him 45 tons of hay, 1200 bushels of oats and 100 bushels of seed pears.

A large number of photographs of Western Michigan farm and orchard scenes are being received by the Western Michigan Development bureau and are being held for lantern slides and cuts in behalf of the advertisement of this region, which region, all things considered is one of the best on the American continent.

The Western Michigan Development bureau has just received a letter from the Argentine Republic asking for information in regard to securing a fruit farm in Western Michigan. The writer would desire a farm of about 10 acres. This letter well illustrates how far reaching the influence of the Western Michigan Development bureau really is.

A display of farm products is now to be seen at the Pere Marquette depot at Baldwin. The railroad company set aside a room for such a display and the Lake county directors of the Western Michigan Development Bureau provided the exhibit. There is to be seen hay, alfalfa, clover, rye, canned fruits, and pictures of Lake county farms and orchards.

The guessing contest, which closed at the Palace clothing store, last Saturday, on the number of collars in the window, with the following prize winners: W. E. Parmalee and O. W. Powers tied for first prize guessing 950. Milton Wetzler of Milwaukee second, guessing 800. Nicholas Wall, third, guessing 780. The exact number of collars being 981.

The Petoskey Federation of Woman's clubs has six hundred members representing eleven organizations. This Federation will hold its annual reception on Thursday, August 18, from three to five o'clock in the first Methodist church corner of Mitchell and Division streets. All ladies of the vicinity both residents and visitors are cordially invited to attend.

The Vesper service at the park next Sunday evening will be a patriotic service. Short addresses will be given by Ex-governor Filer of Ill., and Mr. Boughman of Kalamazoo. Special music will add to the interest of the service. Service will begin at five o'clock. This will close the open air services at the park for the summer. All are invited. Band concert as usual before the service.

Western Michigan is on the gain. The figures to prove this are at hand. During the five calendar years ending with 1908, there was an increase in population because of excess of births over deaths of 20,055. This is an increase of better than 4,000 a year. The number of marriages for the same five years was 25,371 and the number of divorces was but 3,113. These figures indicate that seven-eighths of the marriages are successful, which is indirect evidence that the conditions in the region for economic and social success are good.

Keen Scented Deer.

Under the most favorable atmospheric conditions deer can scent a man at the distance of a mile and a half; if he is smoking the range may be increased to two miles. They have been known to refuse to cross a man's track more than four hours after he had passed, but rain may destroy the scent in ten minutes.—St. James' Gazette.

HINTS FOR BEEKEEPERS.

If you expect to get a crop of honey take good care of your bees.

Don't imagine that you know it all and cannot learn anything by reading a bee journal.

In the production of extracted honey give seven frames in the eight frame super and nine frames in the ten frame.

Don't put on your supers before the bees are ready for them, as you gain nothing by doing so, but only render it harder for the bees to keep up the necessary heat.

The necessity of having a neat and attractive label with the name and address of the producer on every package of honey put upon the market is well understood by the enterprising beekeeper.

The long top bar is better for use in old homemade hives, as the staple spaced frames require accurate inside dimensions.

Fruit culture cannot be carried on successfully without bees to effect fertilization through carrying pollen from one blossom to another

The disposition of an unprofitable colony to store honey may be materially increased by giving them several combs of hatching brood from an industrious hive.

THE ABANDONED FARM

With about all of the free government land taken up and the hunger of folks for land increasing rather than diminishing, a good deal of interest is being shown by home seekers in some sections in what are known as the abandoned farms found in the New England states, but in larger number in the state of New York. These farms are usually found in hilly sections and comprise tracts which in the beginning never should have been reclaimed from the forest areas of which they were a part or are tracts which originally possessed no agricultural value which has been reduced and depleted as a result of a skinning and robbing system of handling. In some fewer instances these farms, possessing considerable agricultural value, are to be found in localities which are particularly remote and lonesome or at too great a distance from market. Often the neighborhoods in which these farms are found are peopled by folks of an ultra conservative and nonprogressive class, the remnant following a long period in which there has been an exodus of the younger and more progressive members of the community to sections farther west, where agricultural conditions were more inviting. The farms in question still possessing possibility of regeneration and agricultural usefulness have become unproductive as a result of improper handling, which has brought about a poor physical condition of the soil, lack in humus and soil sourness or acidity. A good deal of thought has been devoted to the possibility of reclaiming these abandoned farms, and as a result of these investigations some practical suggestions have been made. One of these investigators is Dean Bailey of the New York experiment station at Cornell, N. Y. He believes that these farms may be used for one of three purposes—the growing of fruit, the revival of animal industries and extension of dairying and for the growing of forests. Properly handled, including the raising of stock and dairying and the application of fertilizers and lime, there is little question that many of these farms could be brought to a satisfactory profit giving basis. A point in their favor is nearness to large market centers, which will continue to improve as the years go by. Many of these farms will never be reclaimed. Others, however, will be, and are deserving of the careful investigation of the land seeker who may not have a considerable amount to invest.

AN EASY WAY TO SAVE MONEY.

Bankers should be—and the vast majority of them are—conservators of business integrity and financial stability. In serving their patrons they make it a business of inquiring into the financial rating of business houses, investment companies and other corporations which seek loans of the public's money. Occupying the position they do, they are in an especially favorable position for knowing of or ascertaining the reliability of individuals or firms that seek such investment. Millions upon millions of hard earned money belonging to small investors might be saved from dissipation annually were they to exercise the simple precaution of stepping into their local bank and inquiring the financial standing of such and such company that they may think of intrusting with their money. If the banker should not be able to give the required information offhand it is safe to say that he can set inquiries afoot which will result in securing the desired information. The next time you have in mind investing your hard won coin in some investment scheme promising more than legitimate returns refer the matter to your banker. It is quite likely he can be useful to you.

The small boy may be able to muster a little more enthusiasm in the matter of waging war on the weeds in the garden patch if his daddy keeps a good edge on the old hoe.

Inherited vigor and hardiness as well as care determine both the longevity and usefulness of a horse. While the average horse is considered past its prime at twelve years old, one now and then runs across a team that are remarkably well preserved and doing their daily stint of work at twenty-five.

It is a mighty poor adaption of means to end to cut out with a hand hoe in hot weather weeds that can just as well be upturned with a single horse plow. It is quite likely that in the case of the small home garden there is a steady old horse on the place that needs just this stint of work to keep it in good rig.

We think there has been reference in this department in a previous season to the farm owner who made it a practice of paying his tenant a bonus for every acre of stubble which was plowed before Sept. 1. This was done to head off the work of myriads of weeds which usually get in their work of seed production between harvest and the first killing frost. We remember the farm in question, and the tilled fields were among the cleanest in the locality.

All kinds of vexation and a whole lot of reboiling of fruit in the canning season can be prevented if the housewife will see that she has a supply of new rubbers for her cans. After being used a couple of times rubbers become hard and inelastic and greatly increase the chance of leaking. The best rubbers cost about two-thirds of a cent apiece, while one can of fruit lost is worth from 20 to 25 cents, which makes the reason for the above precaution quite plain.

That lad was certainly an exception to the run of boys who cried because his father had considerately and properly made the necessary arrangements for him to go to the circus, preferring rather to stay home and plow corn so that he could be with the horses, which he had lately learned to drive, an accomplishment in which he took a deal of pride. If we remember correctly said boy was not compelled to put in a dull day at the circus. It may be interesting to note that this lad, now grown, is making a nice success of his farming operations.

The bee moth is a pest that is likely to lay its eggs in comb honey that is stored and not properly protected, and also does so in hives in which the swarm has made headquarters for too long a time. The super of a hive into which we looked the other evening was literally alive with lusty larvae and the newly hatched moths. When this state of affairs exists the swarm is usually done for, and the moths and larvae should be given a sulphur smudge or a dose of carbon bisulphide by placing a few drops of the chemical on a piece of cotton and inserting it into the entrance to the hive.

With the north pole tagged by Peary and the battle against the air seemingly won, as shown in the remarkable performances of aviators in America and Europe during the past few weeks, there would appear to be little else to achieve along the line of accomplishing the seemingly impossible and wonderful. Yet a large place in public esteem waits for the man who may be able to catch and conserve the sweltering heat of summer for use during the winter season, as we already do winter's cold when we store cakes of ice. Experiments have been conducted along this line, but so far they have been without result.

With meat products at a high notch as a result of a scarcity of food animals and with an ever increasing output of gold tending to still further inflate prices, the time would seem to be appropriate for a whole lot of fellows to diversify their agricultural operations by making a start with a flock of sheep. With intelligent care they are easy to raise, while a major part of their keep is furnished by the weeds—the bane and waste byproduct of most every farm. Besides very satisfactory prices which one may expect for mutton, the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, which shoved wool duties to a still higher level, will hardly be changed within a decade, hence good prices may be counted on for the fleece of the flock. To a man up a tree the sheep business looks mighty good for several years to come.

The government Crop Reporter for June contains some very interesting statistics on the fruit situation by states and for the country as a whole. The condition of apples, which outrank in value any other single fruit crop, is placed at 53 per cent as against 61.4 for June, 1909, and 69.8 per cent, which is the ten year average yield. Washington leads with a percentage of 95. Oregon shows 93 per cent, while of other important apple producing states Idaho promises 92 per cent of a normal crop, New York 75, Colorado 58, Michigan 57, Arkansas 50 and Missouri 32 per cent. Iowa was hardest hit of all with the April freezes and shows but 7 per cent of a normal prospect. The estimate on pears for the whole country is placed at 63.2 per cent of a normal crop as compared with 61.8 a year ago, while the prospect for the peach crop is placed at 62 per cent as against 54.1 per cent a year ago.

Where one is so located that ice cannot be had for a refrigerator a very good substitute may be arranged by making a cooler of the size desired with board top and bottom and screen frames for the sides, one side serving as a door. On the top of the cooler a small tank should be placed containing water, a galvanized tank being most durable. Pieces of duck cloth or other material of about the same weight should be fixed so as to hang over the screen sides of the cooler, the upper ends extending into the tank of water. As a result of the law of capillary attraction, that operates in a common lamp wick, the water is slowly absorbed from the tank and spreads through the cloths and as fast as evaporated is renewed from above. It is this process of evaporation that keeps the inclosure cool. The water should be renewed as frequently as necessary. The cooler will give the best results if placed in the shade, where there are currents of air moving, which will increase the process of evaporation.

From the financial standpoint the crown of England is worth about half a million dollars.

Neighborhood Notes

The local option question will not be submitted to the voters in Grand Traverse county until the spring of 1912.

Fred C. Warner of Penn-sula Township, Grand Traverse county, secured profits from his London Market currents this season at the rate of $287.50 an acre. He has 500 bushes set out on two-fifths of an acre of ground, and from this he obtained 93 cases, which sold at a price that left him $115 after paying the cost of picking and paying for the crates.

Charles Mickelson was arrested yesterday by Marshal Maxwell charged with violation of the local option law. He was taken before Justice Daniels and waived examination and was bound over to the circuit court. This makes three cases from Elk Rapids to come before the next term of the circuit court, and there are more to follow.—Elk Rapids Progress.

For fear that some of our readers have too readily overcome their fears and shiverings with the passing of the danger, we want to borrow your feelings a bit more by informing you that your old friend, Hally's comet, can yet be seen just above Jupiter about nine o'clock at night with the aid of a small telescope. Don't get gay too quirkly and assume to return to your old wicked life or he may get you yet.—Petoskey News.

Freil Burton, aged 11 years, living at Cadillac, noticing a large dog sleeping peacefully on a porch near his home one evening, bethought himself of a way to start a new enjoyment and standing around the fence corner began imitation of two cats engaged in a brawl. The dog became interested as the boy expected, but went further. Rounding the fence corner he bit the youngster on the left thigh sinking his teeth deeply. The wound was cauterized.

Inquiry regarding an item of $65 in the state treasurer's report as "receipts from secret marriages" developed the fact that the secretary of the state collects $1 fee from each of those marriages performed by judges of probate, and that the records are filed in a special vault in the department with strict orders to preserve the secrecy of the wedding papers. In most cases those marriages were performed to preserve the honor of young girls. The amount was the total collection of fees during the fiscal year 1909.

Attention has been called to the fact that during three successive days, Sunday, September 4th, Monday the 5th and Tuesday the 6th, the saloons of Michigan will be required to refrain from doing business. Sunday, Labor day and primary election day, days of importance and honor and value to the state of Michigan and to all its people. And because of the desire to acknowledge their importance, to retain their honor and to secure for all the best value they possess the saloons of the state are not permitted to open their doors on either of these days. The standing and the status of the saloon business is very vividly indicated in this state requirement that saloons shall be closed in order that the homes of Michigan on Sunday, the laboring men of Michigan on Monday and all the voters of the state on Tuesday shall be protected from an institution recognized by the laws of our state and by the people of our state as demoralizing and undesirable.

The state tax commission has increased in assessed valuation many cities throughout the state. Not all of this increase was brought about by reviews but investigations were made in many cities by the commission and assessing officers were ordered to make raises. In some places, however, reviews were held.

As a result of the work of the commission during the last few months an increase of close to $75,000,000 has been made in the state and an increase of over $50,000,000 has been brought about in cities of over 10,000 population.

Some of the cities either ordered to be raised or reviews held in them, with the approximate amounts they are to be raised, are as follows: Detroit $20,000,000; Flint $6,000,000; Traverse City, $3,000,000; Lansing, $1,200,000; Port Huron, $100,000; Bay City, $400,000; Battle Creek, $500,000; Ironwood, $500,000; Jackson, $1,000,000; Kalamazoo, $1,000,000; Manistee, $27,000; Adrian, $300,000; Marquette, $500,000; Muskegon, $1,000,000; Pontiac, $2,500,000.

Two cities secured a decrease, Alpena, $150,000, and Ishpeming, $200,000.

DON'T EXPERIMENT

You Will Make No Mistake if You Follow This Advice.

Never neglect your kidneys.

If you have pain in the back, urinary disorders, dizziness and nervousness, its time to act and no time to experiment. These are all symptoms of kidney trouble, and you should seek a remedy which is known to cure the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use. No need to experiment. It has cured many stubborn cases in this vicinity.

Can Charlevoix residents demand further proof than that contained in the following testimonial?

George Holbrook, Main & Danforth Sts., Mancelona, Mich, says: "Doan's Kidney Pills helped me wonderfully. I had an extremely lame back and there were acute pains in my loins when I stooped or lifted. My kidneys also bothered me considerably. After using Doan's Kidney Pills, the lameness left my back and the kidney secretions became regular in passage. Since then I have been free from kidney disorders and consequently, I have no hesitation in giving Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement."

hled glory of hair—all had buraca themselves upon his soul in a picture too deep to he eradicated. If St. James was interesting now it was because that face was a part of it, because the secret of its life, of the misery that it had confessed to him, was hidden somewhere down there among its scattered log humcs.

Slowly he made his way down the slope in the direction of Strang's castle, the tower of which, surmounted by its great beacon, glistened in the morning sun. He would find Strang there. And there would he one chance in a thousand of seeing the girl—if Obadiah had spoken the truth. As he passed down he mot men and hoya coming up the slope and others moving along at the bottom of it, all going toward the interior of the island. They had shovels or rakes or hoes upon their shoulders and he guessed that the Mormon fields were in that direction; others hore axes; and now and thea wagons, many of them drawn hy oxen, left the town over the road that ran near the shore of the lake. Those whom he met stared at him curiously, much interested evidently in the appearance of a stranger. Nathaniel paid hut small heed to them. As ho entered the grove through which the councilor had guided him the night hefore his eagerness hecame almost excitement. He approached the great log house swiftly hut cautiously, keeping as much from view as possible. As he came under the window through which he had looked upon the king and his wives his heart leaped with anticipation, with hope that was strangely mingled with fear. For only a moment he paused to listen, and notwithstanding the seriousness of his position he could not repress a smilo as there came to his eara the crying of children and the high angry voice of a woman. He passed around to the froot of the house. The door of Strang's castle was wide open and unguarded. No one had seen his approach; no one accosted him as he mounted the low steps; there was no one in the room into which he gazed a moment later. It was the great hall into which he had seied a few hours previous. There was the long table with the big hook on it, the lamp whose light had bathed the girl's head in a halo of glory, the very chair in which he had found her sitting! He was conscious of a throbbing in his breast, a longing to call out—if he only knew her name.

In the room there were four closed doors and it was from beyond those that there came to him the wailing of children. A fifth door was open and through it he saw a cradle gently rocking. Here at last was visible life, or motion at least, and he knocked loudly. Very gradually the cradle ceased its movement. Then it stopped, and a woman came out into the larger room. In a moment Nathaniel recognized her as the one who had placed a caressing hand upon the bowed head of the sobbing girl the night before. Her face was of pathetic beauty. Its whiteness was startling. Her eyes shone with an unhealthy luster, and her dark hair, falling in heavy curls over her shoulder, added to the wonderful pallor of her cheeks.

Nathaniel bowed. "I beg your pardon, madam; I came to see Mr. Strang," he said.

"You will find the king at his office," she replied.

The woman's voice was low, but so sweet that it was like music to the ear. As she spoke she came nearer and a faint flush appeared in the transparency of her cheek.

"Why do you wish to see the king?" she asked.

Was there a tremble of fear in her voice? Even as he looked Nathaniel saw the flush deepen in her cheeks and her eyes light with nervous eagerness.

"I am sent hy Obadiah Price," he hazarded.

A flash of relief shot into the woman's face.

"The king is at his office," she repeated. "His office is near the temple."

Nathaniel retired with another bow.

"By thunder, Strang, old boy, you've certainly got an eye for beauty!" he laughed as he hurried through the grove.

"And Obadiah Price must be somebody, after all!"

The Mormon temple was the largest structure in St. James, a huge square building of hewn logs, and Nathaniel did not need to make inquiry to find it. On one side was a two-story building with an outside stairway leading to the upper floor, and a painted sign announced that on this second floor was situated the office of James Jesse Strang, priest, king and prophet of the Mormons. It was still very early and the general merchandise store below was not open. Congratulating himself on this fact, and with the fingers of his right hand reaching instinctively for his pistol butt, Captain Plum mounted the stair. When half way up he heard voices. As he reached the landing at the top he caught the quick swish of a skirt. Another step and he was in the open door. He was not soon enough to see the person who had just disappeared through an opposite door, but he knew that it was a woman. Directly in front of him as if she had been expecting his arrival was a young girl, and no sooner had he put a foot over the threshold than she hurried toward him, the most acute anxiety and fear written in her face.

"You are Captain Plum?" she asked breathlessly.

Nathaniel stopped in astonishment.

"Yes, I'm—"

"Then you must hurry—hurry!" cried the girl excitedly. "You have not a moment to lose! Go back to your ship before it is too late! She says they will kill you—"

"Who says so?" thundered Captain Plum. He sprang to the girl's side and caught her by the arm. "Who says that I will be killed? Tell me—who gave you this warning for me?"

"I—I—tell you so!" stammered the young girl. "I—I—heard the king—they will kill you—" Her lips trembled. Nathaniel saw that her eyes were already red from crying. "You will go?" she pleaded.

Nathaniel had taken her hand and now he held it tightly in his own. His head was thrown back, his eyes were upon the door across the room. When he looked again into the girlish face there was flashing joyous defiance in his eyes, and in his voice there was confession of the truth that had suddenly come to overwhelm whatever law of self-preservation he might have held unto himself.

"No, my dear, I am not going back to my ship," he spoke softly. "Not unless she who is in that room comes out and bids me go herself!"

SUMMER CARE OF PALMS.

How to Protect Them From the Blazing Sun and Make Them Thrive.

It is a mistake to put palms out of doors in the blazing sun and keep them there all summer. This is a common treatment, most people arguing that, being tropical plants, they can stand any amount of heat. What is the result? The leaves blister, and the plant itself ceases to thrive.

If you have a veranda keep your plants upon them and do not let them dry out. Remember that our summer atmosphere is as drying as furnace air, and evaporation of pot plants is rapid. Give a thorough watering once or twice a day.

If you have no veranda and have a corner of your yard turn it into a protection for your palms—if you have many of them. Make a wooden frame of four posts, to which are nailed wooden slats about an inch apart.

Attach a canvas or even cheesecloth screen or blind to the frame in such a way that it can be rolled over the top and down one side.

Plunge the pots of your palms or indeed all your foliage house plants, such as rubber plants, asparagus, draczenas and graneerias, into the ground up to the rims of pots. This keeps the soil moist at an even temperature, there is less evaporation, and the tender plants are gradually accustomed to a change of temperature and different conditions of light and air.

The direct heat of the sun is kept off by the screen and by the light that filters through the slats. Less watering will be necessary than when on a porch, but it is well to give a daily spraying to keep off insects and to keep the leaves free of dust.

How to Protect Lilies From Worms.

Worms and underground insects prey upon lily bulbs. The following simple method is a preventive: Prepare the lily bed by thoroughly mixing well rotted manure with the soil. Dig holes a foot and a half apart and six inches deep. Put half an inch of sharp sand in the bottom of each hole, then put in three or four bulbs to the hole. Add enough sand to make a covering of half an inch over the bulbs. Be sure that every part of them is well covered. Fill in the rest of the hole with earth from the flower bed. The worms will not penetrate the sand.

How to Prevent Weeds.

Cover your flower bed over with salt from one inch to two inches deep. Dampen the salt occasionally and leave it on the ground for a week or ten days. This will be sufficient time to kill not only the weeds, but also all the seeds that may be in the soil or on the surface. Before planting dampen the ground thoroughly and let it stand overnight. Scrape off all the salt on the surface in the morning and let it remain until dry enough to work. Then plant your seeds and you need have no fear of being bothered with weeds.

How to Make Orange Punch.

Place in a basin a half pound of granulated sugar and a quart of lukewarm water. Squeeze out the juice of two each of lemons and oranges, add the grated rind of one orange and briskly mix with a wooden spoon for five minutes. Strain through a Chinese strainer into a small ice cream freezer, cover the freezer, bury in a tub with broken ice and rock salt and freeze for thirty-five minutes. Divide into six sherbet glasses and serve.

How to Clean a Sponge.

To clean the bath sponge, which should be a good shape, plunge it in water in which you have put the juice of a half lemon and allow it to remain overnight or about twelve hours.

HOW TO GET GOOD ROADS.

May Be Built In Systems Miles at a Time.

PUBLIC SHOULD BE TAXED.

Would Remove a Heavy Burden on Farm Property — 1,000,000 Miles of Highways Out of 2,300,000 Are Used For Rural Free Delivery and Are Thus Post Roads.

It would save a deal of time, trouble and expense if one state or community would profit by the experience of others in the matter of road building rather than persist in going forward by fits and starts and generally making a mess of it before learning what to do and how to do it. It would shorten the process, and the same end would be the sooner reached. New York began with an appropriation of $50,000, but in five years voted a bond issue of $50,000,000 and is expending $5,000,000 a year. Maryland is expending one-third as much. Pennsylvania is putting millions every year into good permanent roads. Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and other valley states should sit up and take notice.

The split log drag or its equivalent is a very valuable road tool. Its use should be encouraged. We should not, however, deceive ourselves that the road drag is a solution of the good roads problem. Nothing short of a hard wearing surface upon the main roads will meet the need of the age.

The money required to build good, permanent roads throughout the country would reach enormous figures, and if it were an item of expense that must be paid now one might well regard the task as hopeless. However, the situation when understood is not at all discouraging from a financial viewpoint. The only drawback is the reluctance of the public to study the question closely.

If the following points are kept in mind it will aid to a clearer conception of the facts involved in the good roads question:

First.—Every good road built is an asset. It adds to the property value of the country more than its cost. It increases the value of all forms of property, but farm property most of all. This receives the largest and most direct benefit from good roads. So good roads are an investment as surely as building barns, drainage or any other improvement that adds value.

GETTING THE ROAD IN CONDITION.
[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

Second.—The roads ought to be built in systems, many miles at a time. In this way better work can be secured and the cost per mile will be much less. If twenty to thirty miles are built at a time competition will be sharp. Contractors will plan to use the latest and most approved methods, and the result will be a better job at 10 to 25 per cent less money. There is apt to be better inspection and construction, consequently less cost to maintain, than if built in short strips.

Third.—The payment of the original cost of building the roads ought to be extended over twenty or thirty years. There is no valid reason why those now carrying the burden of taxation should bear the whole load. A stone, brick or even a good gravel road if well built will serve for a generation with a moderate up keep expense. Why should not those who come after us and enjoy the benefit help pay the bill? This makes the payment comparatively easy.

Fourth.—The roads belong to the public. Their condition affects the public welfare. They are used to carry the food supply of the world's market and to return a large part of the factory output to the farm. It is equitable that at least one-half the expense of building and caring for good roads should be chargeable to the public as a whole and the other one-half paid by the locality receiving the immediate and most direct benefit. This takes a heavy burden off farm property.

Fifth.—Out of approximately 2,300,000 miles of highways in the United States about 1,000,000 are used for rural delivery and are thus post roads. It is estimated that four-fifths of all the traffic the country over passes over one-fourth of the road mileage. It is these roads with the heavy traffic which should receive the first attention. If 20,000 miles of good stone or gravel roads were added to those already built it would give a complete network of good roads from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf and would serve from 75 to 80 per cent of all the traveling upon the public highways.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony grange met in regular session Tuesday evening, August 9. On account of the absence of Worthy Master J. A. Newville, Worthy Overseer H. L. Wilson presided.

A communication in regard to the attitude of the different candidates for the state legislature on questions advocated or opposed by the grange was read and referred to the whole grange for discussion at the next meeting.

The lecture hour was fully occupied, in spite of the prospect of a lunch which the well filled baskets of the ladies presented. The main feature was the question box. Several interesting questions were asked and some were answered in an amusing as well as instructive way. One question was "How was the farmer's wife classed as to occupation in the census reports?" Brother O. D. Wilson, who was census enumerator here, answered that they were classed as having no occupation, which answer was followed by a humerous poem read by Sister Marcia Burdick, naming some of the things that are required of the woman of no occupation.

We had some very good music, an excellent lunch and altogether a very enjoyable time.

The next meeting's program will be in charge of Ceres, Mrs. J. A. Newville, and will be an appropriate celebration of harvest time ending with a lunch composed of different preparations of cereals.

Visitors from other granges always welcome.

Dairy Products as Food

The products of the dairy are perhaps the most useful articles included in the human diet. A meal made up of dishes into which no product of the dairy cow enters would not be such as to inspire "the turnpike road to people's hearts I find lies through their mouths, or I mistake mankind." Take away the butter for the bread, the cream for the coffee and the porridge, the shortening in the crust and the biscuits, the milk in the gravy and in the puddings, the cream for the dessert and the various kinds of cheese which please and satisfy, then take away the cup of milk for the little one and the meal that would be left would be neither tempting, nor nutritious.

The health of our people depends so much upon an adequate supply of pure dairy products that even a scarcity is always attended by suffering and death.

Butter is sometimes referred to as a luxury, this is a mistake. Butter is not a luxury but one of the necessities of life, and its composition is such that nothing can take its place and perform the same functions. It is nature's product compounded in the maternal organs and the process is in accordance with nature's law, a law which man can imitate but cannot understand. Man can manufacture from various fats and oils a substitute for butter but it cannot take the place of nature's product because man cannot understand the needs of the human body as nature understands them.

The animal body is developed best when nourished by foods which have been little manipulated by man and machinery. Dairy products are, as a rule, consumed nearly as nature produced them. This is particularly true with milk upon which the growing body must depend. In the case of butter only a small percentage of other products are added to the fat extracted from the milk. Man only manipulates it in order to put it in convenient shape for use. It can still be termed a product of nature designed as only nature can design for use as food by the human body.

Barnard Grange No. 689.

Barnard grange met in regular session Wednesday night with a fair attendance. Worthy Master Bolhuis in the chair.

Under the head of new business, the question of building a new wall under the hall was discussed and it was decided to build. A committee was appointed to make an estimate of the probable cost of building of different materials and report at the next meeting.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with music recitations and readings. Brother D. S. Payton gave a talk on the work of the West Michigan Development bureau and the exhibit at Traverse City. Brother Payton outlined the plan to organize a county board of trade which met with an enthusiastic response from the patrons present, all expressing themselves as satisfied that the work done by Brother Payton and associates last year, had been the most paying investment ever made for the county, and as ready to pay their share if a county board was organized.

Barnard grange will give a box social at their hall Wednesday evening, August 31.

VALUE OF WATER IN BUTTER

There must be a certain amount of water in butter to make it a perfect article—not that the per cent of water must come within certain fixed or narrow limits, but the amount that is present in butter made under normal conditions where quality is the main object.

To the average consumer the water content is not greatly noticeable unless there is a small quantity of free water left in the package in which the butter was originally packed. However, this free water bears no direct relation to the amount present in butter, but it is an indication of the plan followed in its manufacture.

Butter mechanically perfect may contain between 10 and 15 per cent of water. As a rule, this extreme difference cannot be detected except by men who have made the subject a study.

The value of butter is based on its quality and general makeup and not its natural composition, except in cases where it has been carried to an extreme.

The factors in composition that will affect its quality are the extremes in salt contents or whether the salt is all dissolved.

The limit which was placed upon the water to be incorporated into butter was in part to do away with the growing tendency on the part of some to make an article that should contain the lowest possible amount of butter fat and yet bear the name of butter. If this had not been checked there would have been danger of placing the ability of the buttermaker upon the question, "Can you get us the overrun?" in place of, "Can you make good butter?" It seems as if that idea is still encouraged in certain localities.

The overrun bears a certain relation to the composition of the butter, but is not a sure indication that a high per cent of water means a correspondingly high overrun.

A buttermaker should have an overrun that checks fairly well with the fat in his butter, provided the loss of fat in the process of manufacture has been kept at its minimum. It cannot always be said that an overrun of only 10 per cent is an indication of butter having a high fat content any more than a high overrun indicates low fat content butter.

The greatest factor in overrun control is the accurate determination of the total butter fat delivered to the creamery. If more butter fat was delivered than was actually paid for it cannot help but increase the overrun, and vice versa.

Naturally the question arises, "Can butter be made to always contain less than the legal 16 per cent limit for water?" The answer is positively "Yes," with a fair margin for safety. In fact, butter can be made to not exceed even a 15 per cent limit. A good commercial product can contain 14 to 15 per cent of water. This, added to the 82.5 per cent standard for fat, makes a total of 96.5 to 97.5 per cent, leaving a balance of 2.5 to 3.5 per cent for salt, casein and ash.

Since the average casein and ash content need not exceed 1 per cent, this leaves 1.5 to 2.5 per cent for salt. This amount of salt is not sufficient for all grades of butter, nor will it meet the demand of all consumers. In order to increase the salt content there must be a decrease in the water. A commercial product will pass to certain consumers containing 3.5 per cent salt, but need not exceed 3 per cent.

It is not safe to work too close to any standard because of variation in composition due to sampling. One sample of butter taken to represent a churning may or may not be an accurate representation of the butter in question. An average variation of at least one-half per cent must be allowed with an extreme of at least 1 per cent.

MAKE YOUR STACK COVER.

Here's a Suggestion That Will Do Good on Any Farm.

Ever try your hand at making a stack cover? No. Well, here's a suggestion that will strike the industrious farmer favorably and may be the means of saving him considerable money before the summer passes.

A heavy wire is rolled into the edge of the crimp, the wire being longer than the sheet—say a foot longer at each corner. This long end is to be used to make a loop, also a cross brace for the sheet of the roof. Holes are punched in the edge close under the wire stiffener. A 1 by 4 inch wood piece is nailed across the top side of the upper end of the sheet and the underside of the lower end. The long ends of the side stiffener wires are bent around, forming a loop and stapled to the 1 by 4 inch wood pieces, and the sheet is ready to be placed on the stack (a long stack or rick). A straight pole or a 2 by 4 inch is to be placed along the ridge and a 1 by 4 inch or 1 by 6 inch along the sides. Fasten the roofing to the ridgepole with wire, and the edges of sheets are to be wired close and the whole roof fastened to the stack by wiring down to weights or stakes driven into the stack. A few heavy soft wires cut to length and all ready and a stack could be covered quickly and safely or a half up stack covered and opened again.

The cost should not be much more than good lumber and would surely be cheaper when convenience and lasting qualities are considered. In case some roofing company does not put it on the market (in knockdown form) local talent could be utilized to prepare a test quality. See that the side wire is strong and long and when two sheets are placed together they form a reasonably close joint which is high enough so that water running down the roof will not run in at the holes punched under the stiffener side wire. Use heavy soft wire to hold the seam close—say one foot long for each place.

RATIONS FOR SWINE.

Means of Avoiding the Present High Prices of Feeds.

Just now there is some very attractive money in the swine business. Feeds are high, of course; but, bless your dear soul, where do the feeds come from? Don't we raise them all on the farm? Well, yes, I suppose that is true in the abstract, but there are feeds being sold today at quite high prices that no man save the mixer of them knows where they come from.

But in the main we must not complain about the high cost of feeds as long as their cost is only relatively high to the selling price of the animal product. We must not complain because we are the producers of the feeds or the grains from which the feeds are made.

Moreover, if these feeds at the mills are so unreasonably high the thing for you to do is to buy less of them, a very simple and logical solution of a grave difficulty.

A THRIFTY BERKSHIRE.
(By courtesy of Iowa State college.)

We are not in the swine business to use up all the waste and wasteful products of the mills and food factories, although at proper prices many of these wastes in their use mean material wealth to the farmer and productive wealth to his land, but we are rather associating with hogs that we may induce them to turn the gross unsalable farm products into usable coin of the realm.

The answer to the feed question is, Buy less of it. A well constituted hog will eat almost anything that is good. As a matter of fact, he often has to secure his livelihood largely from almost everything that is not good. But this is not just a square deal for the hog or always a net profit for his owner.

CLAIM BURROWS IS A LEADER

Standing Joke of Michigan Senatorial Campaign.

BURRDWS WAS ALWAYS A FDLLDWER

How He Lead During the Last Session of Congress.

Smothered Campaign Publicity Bills and Delayed Investigation of Senate Bribery Charges in Lorimer Case.

The predicament of the Burrows managers is best indicated by the extravagant claims they feel obliged to make for their man. The latest is that Julius Caesar Burrows is to be the real leader in the senate! They might at least have spared him that. A good many things can be said about Mr. Burrows, but he would have to be on exceptionally cruel enemy who would ridicule him by calling him a "leader."

Julius Caesar Burrows, the most tractable, leadable man in the senate—a leader! Why, so far from being a leader, his value even as a subservient official has suffered a slump since his boss—Senator Aldrich is going to retire. It is undoubtedly true that in his day Mr. Burrows has had many an opportunity to lead, but has never grasped any of them. His senatorial initiative has seldom consisted in more daring ventures than the introduction of pension bills. He had a chance to lead recently, when his committee handled the bill making it obligatory on candidates to tell BEFORE AN ELECTION just how much they spent in their campaign AND WHERE THEY GOT IT. The president wanted such a bill. Every conscience-clear man in the senate wanted such a bill. Mr. Burrows did not want such a bill. He smothered the proposition and turned out a mongrel substitute that doesn't require anything in particular and that prevents the voters from finding out where candidates are getting their money. If Julius Caesar Burrows had had the first element of leadership in him he would have used it at that time.

In another recent meeting, Julius Caesar Burrows had a chance to lead. It was up to him, by reason of years in the senate, to investigate the rotten Lorimer case and to mete out justice. Did he do it? No: he let the case dally for weeks; he didn't turn his hand over to probe the charges. While the citizens and courts of Chicago and Illinois were doing their duty, Senator Burrows was obstructing the course of justice in the United States senate. It was only when the scandal of his attitude threatened to become a party issue that senatorial leaders arose and demanded either that Mr. Burrows act or the case be taken from him. He didn't budge an inch until he had to. Is that the quality of leadership?

Under three presidents, Senator Burrows has been just as prominent and just as efficient as he is today, but can you recall any president who ever placed an ounce of dependence on Senator Burrows? Can you recall one president who ever regarded him as a "leader?" William McKinley knew him as a man who would vote as he was told Theodore Roosevelt called him "an old skeezicks." Mr. Taft hasn't said out and out what he thinks of Mr. Burrows, but the fact is that Mr. Burrows was one of the Aldrich crowd that prevented the president giving the kind of tariff revision he promised, and no one has heard of Mr. Taft entrusting Julius Caesar Burrows with any task that requires "leadership."

No, the facts lie too near the surface for any Burrows man to make twice the mistake of claiming Burrows to be a "leader." He has too long a reputation as a follower. There is need for leaders this moment in Washington. When the president wanted to know for himself the sentiment of the west, did he send for Mr. Burrows? When the president wanted to know for himself the true, inwardness of the Indian contract muddle, did he ask Burrows to dig it out and report? No: at a time when the president is in need of every capable friend he has, we don't find Julius Caesar Burrows engaged in any higher patriotic duty than smothering campaign publicity bills and hindering the investigation of senate bribery scandals.

Why, the better press of the country are amazed to think that Michigan ever even thought of returning Mr. Burrows to the senate From Boston to San Francisco he is the joke of political experts. As soon would they expect Ohio to return Foraker as Michigan to send back Burrows.—Detroit News.

FORTY-SEVEN WERE DROWNED

In the State of Michigan During the Month of July.

There were 3,078 deaths reported to the department of state as having occurred during the month of July. This number corresponds to an annual death rate of 13.7 per 1,000 estimated population. An increase of eighty-one deaths is shown over the month immediately preceding.

By ages there were 703 deaths of infants under one year of age: 197 of children aged one to four years inclusive, and 837 deaths of elderly persons aged sixty-five years and over.

Important causes of deaths were as follows: Pulmonary tuberculosis 155; other forms of tuberculosis, forty-four; typhoid fever, twenty-six; diptheria and cronp, twenty-six; scarlet fever, eleven; measles, twenty; whooping cough, twenty-six, pneumonia and broncho-pneumonia, seventy-four; diarrhoea and entertis under two years of age, 321; meningitis, forty-nine; influenza four; cancer, 164; violence 269.

As compared with the month immediately preceding, a decrease is noted in the number of deaths from consumption, diptheria and croup, scarlet fever, measles, whooping cough, pneumonia, influenza and cancer. An increase is noted in the number of deaths returned from tuberculosis other than the lungs, typhoid fever, meningitis and violence. Included in the deaths from violence are forty-seven from drowning, twenty-two from heat and five from lightning. There were also seventeen deaths from tetanus, the majority of which, however, did not result from Fourth of July accidents. One death was reported from smallpox as having occurred in the city of Manistee.

There were 4,904 certificates of birth returned to the department as having occurred during the month of July. This corresponds to an annual rate of 22.2 per 1,000 estimated population. The number returned was an increase of 275 over June.

LOCAL OPTION COMMITTEE

Perfects Organization at Meeting Held in this City Monday.

The Executive Committee of the County Local Option Committee met Monday the 22nd, at the office of R. W. Kane, Charlevoix and completed their organization as follows: Chairman, E. S. Stacks of Charlevoix; Secretary, Dr. A. M. Wilkinson of Charlevoix; Financial Committee, W. H. White of Boyne City; Clarke Haire of East Jordan; R. W. Kane of Charlevoix.

The personnel of the committee in addition to those aboved named, are: W. P. Porter of East Jordan, A. B. Clark of Marion. All were present.

The committee took steps looking to the complete organization of the county by townships and the raising of an ample fund by it to defray its expenses. The reports from all over the county indicated both that the local option law was being strictly enforced and that the results were wholly satisfactory.

A large amount of routine business was transacted after which the Committee adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

SAVED FROM DROWNING

Captain Weaver Picks Up Two Boys Saturday Morning.

Were Sailing from Beulah Home to Charlevoix When Canoe Capsized.

For the second time this season Capt. Weaver, of the steamer Cummings, has been instrumental in saving lives. Saturday morning on the down trip he picked up two boys who were clinging to an overturned canoe in Pine lake. An object was seen in the water a mile or so off Ironton by one of the crew, who thought it might be a flock of wild geese and he called the attention of the captain, who, with the aid of his glass, soon made out a boy's head bobbing up and down with the waves and a hand wildly waving. The boat was headed for them, a mile or two away, and under a full head of steam soon came up to them and pulled aboard two very wet and very tired lads, who were nearly exhausted. They were Floyd Bishop and Evan Dunn, two boys from the Beulah Home. They said that they could not have stood it much longer for they had been in the water for more than three hours.

The boys left the Home at 3 o'clock in the morning in a small and frail canoe and with a home made sail rigged up. All went well until far down the lake, and when abreast of the entrance to the South Arm, when a gust of wind upset the craft and plunged the lads into the water. They both succeeded in securing a hold on the capsized boat and hung on with desperation and with alternating hope and fear, until the Cummings was sighted when they did their utmost to attract attention. For a time they felt that they were doomed to continue the struggle but finally the boat was headed their way and their joy knew no bounds.

They were on their way to Charlevoix and Capt. Weaver left them here but took the canoe to Boyne City.

Early in the season, it will be remembered, that Weaver picked up a couple of young men in the same locality who were also clinging to a capsized craft.

DANIEL S. PAYTON OF EVELINE

Candidate for renomination on the Republican ticket, to the office of County Clerk.

Mr. Payton is now serving his first term as County Clerk and it is the opinion of all, who have business dealings with the office, that Charlevoix County never had a more efficient courteous official.

As director of the West Michigan Development Bureau and chairman of the Charlevoix County display at the 1909 meeting of the State Grange, Mr. Payton demonstrated his ability as a hustler and brought this county to the attention of home seekers, increasing the value of every acre of real estate in Charlevoix County.

A GREAT PLAY

Charlevoix People to Witness a Great Chicago Success.

"Rosalind at Redgate," a dramatization of Meredith Nicholson's latest best seller, will be the offering at the Charlevoix Opera House on Tuesday, August 30th. To those who have seen and enjoyed "The House of a Thousand Candles," the present play will come like a renewal of old acquaintances, and the meeting of old friends. While it is in no sense a sequel to Mr. Nicholson's former play and book, it is nevertheless something of a continuation of it. Laurance Donovan, the friend of the hero of "The House of A Thousand Candles," being in this story the hero.

St. Agatha's School again comes into prominence, when two boarders come to stay during vacation, and Donovan constitutes himself their protector against dangers, the source of which he is much at sea about.

Two brothers through business misfortunes business misfortunes become separated; each has a daughter, and both look so entirely alike that they are constantly mistaken for the other, as they have unintentionally and unknowingly, and as strangers to each other, been brought into the same neighborhood. Like the "House of A Thousand Candles," the play is one of mystery, but solves itself so naturally that the reader wonders why he has not seen through it all the time.

Meredith Nicholson set a high standard for himself in "The House of A Thousand Candles, and in this his present play he has not, in the slightest, departed from it. He eschews the problem and is far removed from the detective story. But his books make plays that are full of wholesome excitement to tell and he knows how to arrange it in a pleasing and acceptable manner.

WHAT THEY WILL SHOW

Moving Pictures to Advertise Charlevoix and Boy City.

Messrs. Beal and Wyckoff, of the Selig Polyscope Co. of Chicago, were in the city Monday taking moving pictures of the city jail and city hall for use in connection with a juvenile court story of Boy City. The men have been at Boy City and Charlevoix for a week taking pictures for this story and the pictures here will probably be used at the beginning of the film, and will show two "bad boys looking out from behind the bars in the city jail, under the city hall. These boys represent two boys placed there by order of the juvenile officer. The picture continues with the story, going from there to the front of the city hall, where Judge Brown will be shown going up the walk and up the steps to the juvenile court in the city hall, and in a few minutes returning with the two "bad boys," holding each by the hand and talking to them with a kindly voice and manner, taking them to a Boy City. This film should prove an attractive drawing card for five cent shows and a valuable advertiser for Judge Brown's Boy City proposition.—Petoskey Record.

JURY FAIL TO AGREE

Standing Seven to Five in Swift Case After Twenty-four Hours.

After being on trial the entire week the case of the people vs. Swift went to the jury Saturday noon. The jury remained in continuous session until Sunday afternoon when they were discharged, being unable to agree. They were nearly evenly divided, the poll at the close, standing seven to five.

The case was very hotly contested, Prosecutor Nicholas ably looking after the interests of the people and making out a strong case, while the defendant's attorneys, Messrs. Clink and Gaffney, put up a strong conspiracy defense.

The outcome of the case is very unsatisfactory to everybody as it was hoped that the matter might have been decided both in justice to Mr. Swift and the people.

POMONA GRANGE MET AT NORWOOD

Mammoth Crowd Was in Attendance Thursday

MASTER OF STATE GRANGE PRESENT

Gave Addresses Both Afternoon and Evening

County Convention Will Be Held at Ironton—Next Meeting at Barnard—Three Candidates Initiated.

The meeting of Charlevoix county Pomona grange held with Norwood grange Thursday, was decidedly successful. When it is known that the lecturer's programme consisted of four formal addresses, three recitations, seven songs, five selections of instrumental music, one dialog and several impromtu talks and discussions, it's value and completeness will not be questioned.

N. P. Hull, master of the Michigan State grange made addresses both afternoon and evening, which fully demonstrated his capability as a leader of the sixty thousand organized farmers of Michigan and left an impression that must materially promote grange efficiency and extension.

The afternoon address was particularly addressed to members of the order and impressed upon them the necessity of compliance with grange laws, the calling to order on time and the taking of children to the meetings and giving them a place on the program. Brother Hull warned patrons of the danger of allowing politics to enter into the grange and defined the difference between the advocacy of principles for which grange stands, such as the tonnage tax, Torren's system of land transfers, etc., and politics.

In the evening Brother Hull spoke of the grange and what it has accomplished by organization, of the duty of every man to look after the welfare of himself and family first and how the grange, as an organization had, for its object the promoting of the welfare of the American farmer socially, educationally and financially, and how it could best be done by organized effort.

Following the evening program Brother Hull exemplified the secret work of the order.

During the business session it was decided to discontinue the practice of holding district conventions for the purpose of naming delegates to the State grange and the county convention will meet at Ironton, October 4.

Ironton grange was declared the banner grange for the second quarter, Barnard grange being a close second.

The special committee on by-laws was discharged and the matter was referred to the standing committee on by-laws.

The degree of Pomona was conferred on Brother T. A. Heaton and wife, of Pine Lake grange, and Brother George Dougherty of Barnard grange, the work being done by Marion Center degree team Sister Jennie Burns acting as master.

The next meeting will be held with Barnard grange November 17.

THE LITTLE MAN SHOULD BE WELL DRESSED TOO

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 72 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do my part cheerfully. All men and women who are helpless and seeking relief, I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study, since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71. Since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakened manhood or nervous difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE in a plain sealed envelope that you can use in your own home. I am confident that you will thank me every day in your life after you have tested it for yourself.

To the People of the County of Charlevoix

At the primary election to be held the sixth day of September 1910 I will be a candidate for nomination for Prosecuting Attorney on the Republican ticket.

I graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in 1903, and have practiced law in Boyne City nearly six years. I believe I am qualified to fill the office of Prosecuting Attorney and if nominated and am subsequently elected I will carefully investigate all complaints and will at the same time conduct the office as economically as possible.

How to Hang Pictures

"Pictures should be hung about on the general eye level, and this rule must be remembered and adapted to the eye level of a child when hanging pictures in a child's room or nursery," says Locy Abbot Throop in Woman's Home Companion for September. "The pictures will not be noticed at all if hung too high. Pictures should be grouped according to the simple rule of balance. Taking a central vertical axis on a wall pictures of equal size and general similarity of tone and color value will balance at equal distances from it; or one large picture will balance two pictures of half its size at equal distances from the center. If one has one fairly large picture in balance with several smaller ones, the heavy one is to be nearer the center, and this will keep the feeling of balance. If you watch children on a see-saw, it will explain this. If a heavy boy is on one end he moves nearer the center and several smaller boys may be needed to make the balance perfect. A large picture is usually most effective when placed alone in a space with its center coinciding with the center of the space. Two large pictures, one on each side of a mantelpiece, for instance, give a feeling of restfulness and dignity by their perfect balance. Pictures should be grouped in such a way that they have a relation to each other, are balanced on a center, and to this way are made to tell as a whole. It is a useful rule to remember that things become disconnected when they are divided by a space exceeding the width or length of the objects themselves. For instance, two pictures each one by two feet when hanging one above the other must not be more than one foot apart, and not more than two feet apart when side by side.

"Pictures should be hung from two hooks, and there should never be a triangle formed by the wire and the top of the picture-frame. The construction lines of the room are straight and the picture wires should also be straight. It is better not to have the support of small pictures show, as it makes too great a complexity of wires. Tacks or small picture nails may be used, according to the size and weight of the picture."

Primary Election

Notice is hereby given that a general primary election will be held in each precinct of the county of Charlevoix, State of Michigan at the usual polling places on for the purpose of nominating by direct vote candidates by each of the several political parties for the following offices, viz:

NATIONAL—One candidate for United States senator; one candidate for representative in congress from the congressional district of which said voting precinct forms a part.

STATE—One candidate for governor; and one candidate for lieutenant governor.

LEGISLATIVE—One candidate for senator in the state legislature for the senatorial district of which said voting precinct forms a part; one candidate for representative in the state legislature for the representative district of which said voting precinct forms a part.

COUNTY—One candidate for each of the following county offices, viz.: Sheriff, clerk, treasurer, register of deeds, prosecuting attorney, surveyor, drain commissioner; also one candidate for circuit court commissioner and two candidates for coroner.

There shall also be elected as many delegates to the county conventions of the several political parties as said precinct or township is entitled to under the call of the county committee of said political parties, which number will be indicated by the number of blank lines provided on the official primary ballots used at said election under the heading, "Delegates to County Conventions." The board of primary election inspectors will furnish delegates with credentials, entitling them to seats in the county conventions, except where there is or has been provided by the township and the county committee require the election of delegates from the townships as wholes, such delegates must be admitted without credentials.

RELATIVE TO ENROLLMENT

The enrollment for this election was held April 4, 1910, but any qualified elector in any election precinct in this state who has failed to have his name enrolled on enrollment day by reason of sickness or unavoidable absence from the election precinct, and who is qualified elector in said precinct on primary election day, or any person who may have become twenty-one years of age or is qualified elector after enrollment day, may have his name enrolled by the board of primary election inspectors on any primary election day, on making oath as provided in the general election law relative to the registration of electors on election days; or any person who was duly enrolled in the township or precinct by law, but who has changed his residence to any election precinct other than that in which he was enrolled, may be enrolled in the new precinct and may vote therein: Provided, that he has resided in the election precinct in which he seeks to be enrolled for a period of twenty days and that he obtained from a member of the enrollment board of the election precinct in which he formerly resided a certificate stating that he was duly enrolled in said precinct and that he is entitled to enrollment in the new precinct. In the absence of such certificate, if he can satisfy the said enrollment board of primary election inspectors upon making oath to such facts, according to the provisions of the general election law relative to registration of electors on election day, he shall be entitled to enrollment and permitted to vote following such enrollment.

Any person entitled to vote at any primary election whose name is not enrolled, or who shall vote at any primary election next after he has changed his party affiliation, may be enrolled on said enrollment day only.

THE POLLS of said election will be open at 7 o'clock in the forenoon and will remain open until five o'clock in the afternoon of said day of election, unless the board of primary election inspectors shall determine to close the polls at an earlier hour, not earlier than 4 o'clock, noon, for one hour, and provided that in cases where the population is over, the polls shall be kept open until such time not exceeding one hour as said board may determine.

Dated this 20th day of August 1910.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

ILLUSTRATIONS By MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1908 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.

The Whipping.

Scarce had the words fallen from his lips when there sounded a slow, heavy step on the stair outside. The young girl snatched her hand free and caught Nathaniel by the wrist.

"It is the king!" she whispered excitedly. "It is the king! Quick—you still have time! You must go—you must go—"

She strove to pull him across the room.

"There—through that door!" she urged.

The slowly ascending steps were half way up the stairs. Nathaniel hesitated. He knew that a moment before there had passed through that door one who carried with her the odor of lilac and his heart leaped to its own conclusion who that person was. He had heard the rustle of the girl's skirt. He had seen the last inch of the door close as Strang's wife pulled it after her. And now he was implored to follow! He sprang forward as the heavy steps neared the landing. His hand was upon the latch—when he paused. Then he turned and bent his head close down to the girl.

"No, I won't do it, my dear," he whispered. "Just now it might make trouble for—her."

He lifted his eyes and saw a man looking at him from the doorway. He needed no further proof to assure him that this was Strang, the king of the Mormons,—for the Beaver island prophet was painted well in that region which knew the grip and terror of his power. He was a massive man, with the slow slumbering strength of a beast. He was not much under fifty; but his thick beard, reddish and crinkling, his shaggy hair, and the full-fed ruddiness of his face, with its foundation of heavy jaw, gave him a more youthful appearance. There was in his eyes, set deep and so light that they shone like pale blue glass, the staring assurance that is frequently born of power. In his hand he carried a huge metal-knobbed stick.

In an instant Nathaniel had recovered himself. He advanced a step, bowing coolly.

"I am Captain Plum, of the sloop Typhoon," he said. "I called at your home a short time ago and was directed to your office. As a stranger on the island I did not know that you had an office or I would have come here first."

"Ah!"

The king drew his right foot back half a pace and bowed so low that Nathaniel saw only the crown of his hat. When he raised his head the aggressive stare had gone out of his eyes and a welcoming smile lighted up his face as he advanced with extended hand.

"I am glad to see you, Captain Plum."

His voice was deep and rich, filled with that wonderful vibratory power which seems to strike and attune the hidden chords of one's soul. The man's appearance had not prepossessed Nathaniel, but at the sound of his voice he recognized that which had made him the prophet of men. As the warm hand of the king clasped his own Captain Plum knew that he was in the presence of a master of human destinies, a man whose ponderous red-visaged body was simply the crude instrument through which spoke the marvelous spirit that had enslaved thousands to him, that had enthralled a state legislature and that had hypnotized a federal jury into giving him back his freedom when evidence smothered him in crime. He felt himself sinking in the presence of this man and struggled fiercely to regain himself. He withdrew his hand and straightened himself like a soldier.

"I have come to you with a grievance, Mr. Strang," he began. "A grievance which I feel sure you will do your best to right. Perhaps you are aware that some little time ago—about two weeks back—your people boarded my ship in force and robbed me of several thousand dollars' worth of merchandise."

Strang had drawn a step back.

"Aware of it!" he exclaimed in a voice that shook the room. "Aware of it!" The red of his face turned purple and he clenched his free hand in sudden passion. "Aware of it!" He repeated the words, this time so gently that Nathaniel could scarcely hear them, and tapped his heavy stick upon the floor.

"No, Captain Plum; I was not aware of it. If I had been—" He shrugged his thick shoulders. The movement, and a sudden gleam of his teeth through his beard, were expressive enough for Nathaniel to understand.

"No, Captain Plum, I Was Not Aware of It."

Then the king smiled.

"Are you sure—are you quite sure, Captain Plum, that it was my people who attacked your ship? If so, of course you must have some proof?"

"We were very near to Beaver island and many miles from the mainland," said Nathaniel. "It could only have been your people."

"Ah!"

Strang led the way to a table at the farther end of the room and motioned Nathaniel to a seat opposite him.

"We are a much persecuted people, Captain Plum, very much persecuted indeed." His wonderful voice trembled with a subdued pathos. "We have answered for many sins that have never been ours, Captain Plum, and among them are robbery, piracy and even murder. The people along the coasts are deadly enemies to us—who would be their friends; they commit crimes in our name and we do not retaliate. It was not my people who waylaid your vessel. They were fishermen, probably, who came from the Michigan shore and awaited their opportunity off Beaver island. But I shall investigate this; believe me, I shall investigate this fully, Captain Plum!"

Nathaniel felt something like a great choking fist shoot up into his throat. It was not a sensation of fear but of humiliation—the humiliation of defeat, the knowledge of his own weakness in the hands of this man who had so quickly and so surely blocked his claim. His quick brain saw the futility of argument. He possessed no absolute proof and he had thought that he needed none. Strang saw the flash of doubt in his face, the hesitancy in his answer; he divined the working of the other's brain and in his soft voice, purring with friendship, he followed up his triumph.

"I sympathize with you," he spoke gently, "and my sympathy and word shall help you. We do not welcome strangers among us, for strangers have usually proved themselves our enemies and have done us wrong. But to you I give the freedom of our kingdom. Search where you will, at what hours you will, and when you have found a single proof that your stolen property is among my people—when you have seen a face that you recognize as one of the robbers, return to me and I shall make restitution and punish the evil-doers."

So intensely he spoke, so filled with reason and truth were his words, that Nathaniel thrust out his hand in token of acceptance of the king's terms. And as Strang gripped that hand Captain Plum saw the young girl's face over the prophet's shoulder—a face, white as death in its terror, that told him all he had heard was a lie.

"And when you have done with my people," continued the king, "you will go among that other race, along the mainland, where men have thrown off the restraints of society to give loose reign to lust and avarice; where the Indian is brutified that his wife may be intoxicated by compulsion and prostituted by violence before his eyes; where the forest cabins and the streets of towns are filled with half breeds; where there stalk wretches with withered and tearless eyes, who are in nowise troubled by recollection of robbery, rape and murder. And there you will find whom you are looking for!"

Strang had risen to his feet. His eyes blazed with the fire of smothered hatred and passion and his great voice rolled through his heard tremulous with excitement, but still deep and rich, like the booming of some melodious instrument. He flung aside his hat as he paced back and forth; his shaggy hair fell upon his shoulders; huge veins stood out upon his forehead—and Nathaniel sat mute as he watched this lion of a man whose great throat quivered with the power that might have stirred a nation—that might have made him president instead of king. He waited for the thunder of that throat and his nerves keyed themselves to meet its bursting passion. But when Strang spoke again it was in a voice as soft and as gentle as a woman's.

"Those are the men who have villified us, Captain Plum; who have covered us with crimes that we have never committed; who have driven our people into groups that they may be free from depredation; who watch like vultures to despoil our women; wild wifeless men, Captain Plum, who have left families and character behind them and who have sought the wilderness to escape the penalties of law and order. It is they who would destroy us. Go among my own people first, Captain Plum, and find your lost property if you can; and if you can not discover it where in seven years not one child has been born out of wedlock, seek among the Lamanites—and my sheriffs shall follow where you place the crime!"

He had stretched out his arms like one whose plea was of life and death; his face shone with earnestness; his low words throbbed as if his heart were borne upon them for the inspection of its truth and honor. He was Strang the tragedian, the orator, the conqueror of a legislature, a governor, a dozen juries—and of human souls. And as he stood silent for a moment in this attitude Nathaniel rose to his feet, subservient, and believing as others had believed in the fitness of this man. But as his eyes traveled a dozen paces beyond, he saw the young girl gesturing to him in that same terror, and holding up for him to see a slip of paper upon which she had written. And when she had caught his eyes she crumpled the paper into a shapeless ball and tossed it just over the landing to the ground below the stair.

"I thank you for the privileges of the island which you have offered me," said Nathaniel, putting on his hat, "and I shall certainly take advantage of your kindness for a few hours, as I want very much to witness one of your ceremonies which I understand is to take place today. Then, if I have discovered nothing, I shall return to my ship."

"Ah, you wish to see the whipping?" The king smiled his approval. "That is one way we have of punishing slight misdemeanors in our kingdom, Captain Plum. It is an illustration of our intolerance of evil-doers." He turned suddenly toward the girl. "Winnsoma, my dear, have you copied the paper I was at work on? I wish to show it to Captain Plum."

He walked slowly toward her and for the first time since her warning Nathaniel had an opportunity of observing the girl without fear of being perceived by the prophet. She was very young, hardly more than a child he would have guessed at first; and yet at second and more careful glance he knew that she could not be under fifteen—perhaps sixteen. Her whole attire was one to add to her childish appearance. Her hair, which was rather short, fell in lustrous dark curls about her face and upon her neck. She wore a fitted coat-like blouse, and knee skirts which disclosed a pretty pair of legs and ankles. As Strang was returning with the paper which she handed to him the girl turned her face to Captain Plum. Her mouth was formed into a round red O and she pointed anxiously to where she had thrown the note. The king's eyes were on his paper—and Nathaniel nodded to assure her that he understood.

"I am like a gardener who compels every passing neighbor to go into his back yard and admire his first sprouts," laughed the prophet jovially. "In other words, I do a little writing, and I take a kind of childish joy in making other people read it. But I see this is not in proper shape, so you have escaped. It is a brief history of Beaver island written at the request of the Smithsonian Institute, which has already published an article of mine. If you happen to be on the island tomorrow and should you return to this office I shall certainly have you read it if I have to call all of my sheriffs into service!"

He laughed with such open good humor that Nathaniel found himself smiling despite the varied unpleasant sensations within him. "Do you write much?" he asked.

"I get out a daily paper," said the king rather proudly, "and of course, as prophet, I am the translator of what word may be handed down to us from heaven for the direction and commandment of my people. I hold the secret of the Urim and Thummim, which was first delivered by angels into the hands of Joseph, and with it have revealed the word of God as it appears in a book which I have written. Ah—I had forgotten this!" From among a mass of papers and books on the table he drew forth a blue-covered pamphlet and passed it to his companion. "I have only a few copies left but you may have this one, Captain Plum. It will surely interest you. In it I have set forth the troubles existing between my own people and the cyprian-rotted criminals that infest Mackinac and the mainland, and have described our struggle for chastity and honor against these human vultures. It was published two years ago. But conditions are different today. Now—now I am king, and the oppressors in the filth of their crime have become the oppressed!"

The last words boomed from him in a slogan of triumph and as if in echoing mockery there came from the open door the chuckling, mirthless laugh of Obadiah Price.

"Yea—yea—even into the land of the Lamanites are you king!"

At the sound of his voice Strang

Is Michigan Awake?

Michigan is one of the states to which a senator will be chosen by the people this year. Whether Burrows is returned will be decided at the Republican primaries in September. Michigan is a good state, too, but politically is it awake or sleeping? Can it be taken in by a reactionary party machine, a set of whiskers and a line of twaddle? This question assumes national importance in view of the circumstances that Burrows, if re-elected, will succeed Aldrich as chairman of the finance committee. Strangely enough, this is urged as a reason why Michigan people should vote for Burrows—as though to afflict the nation by putting a pinchbeck Aldrich in the most powerful position in the senate would somehow relieve gloom on the stair! We seem to hear cries of dissent and dismay from the other forty-five states whose legislation the finance committee will shape.—Saturday Evening Post, August 20, 1910.

New Way of Catching African Lions

From the Jungle comes the statement that the latest improved way of capturing lions is to drive them into an enclosure composed of American fence—and there's no getting out of that.

Be that as it may—it's certain that the American farmer has found the American Fence by far the best means of holding his stock—from the wildest bull to the most persistent small animal.

Most economical, too—because its simple, strong construction and "live wire" steel make it hold its place through all kinds of weather for years and years.

Together with the famous American Fences we are distributors for the American Bale Ties.—Single Loop and Cross Head.

FEDERAL AID FOR ROADS.

Senate Reports Favorably on Highway Bill Appropriating $500,000.

Aid from the federal government is possible for roadmaking. A bill has been favorably reported from the senate committee on agriculture providing for an appropriation of $500,000 to be expended in co-operative road building. States or counties receiving the beaefit of this aid would be required by the bill to duplicate the sums used in their territory.

The fundamental object of the bill is to disseminate scientific knowledge of road construction and maintenance so as to increase the interest in good roads and in the means of securing them economically. The appropriation would amount to only about 1 per cent of the total appropriation for rural delivery, and it is estimated that the resultant improvement of roads would so facilitate the travel of rural carriers as to save this amount in the long run.

The annual expenditure for country roads in the United States from all sources at the present time probably exceeds $200,000,000, and it is estimated that half of this is wasted through unwise administration and faulty methods of construction and maintenance.

The expert advice and supervision of work that would be possible with federal co-operation and the strips of good roads which their work would place for the inspection and use of the people would hasten the time of universally improved highways in this country.

DRAG HIGHWAYS NOW.

Earth Road Troubles Will Be Obviated if Work Starts In Spring.

Three-fourths of the troubles incident to the care of earth roads would be obviated if with the opening of spring the roads were dragged regularly, so that the water would run off and the surface dry out rapidly. When the frost is going out of the ground there must necessarily be a few days of bad roads.

If farmers would keep off the roads as much as possible during these few days, then just as soon as the soil settles go over the road with a drag or a harrow, fill up the ruts and chuck holes so that the surface water would run off, the earth roads would be in condition months ahead of the usual good period and a great deal of the ammunition of the loud mouthed hard road advocate would be destroyed.

Stone roads are too costly for the majority of localities in the Mississippi valley. Misguided enthusiasts and tireless promoters will not admit this, but the taxpaying farmer and the experienced road engineer know that by properly draining, carefully grading and conscientiously repairing earth roads highways of superior excellence may be obtained during those portions of the year when the transporting of heavy loads is necessary. Look after your roads, and do it now.

Consider the Children.

Look well to the sort of road that goes by a farm before you determine to buy and make your home there. Consider the young folks. "What is land worth at the other end of this road as compared with that which lies six miles away in the other direction along a smooth road? Every growa furm boy should have a good horse and a good road upon which to drive if he is worthy of so noble an animal as the horse. When the young farmer starts himself he will do well to locate on a good road. There are always enough persons who are not thankful for advice, especially if it be in print, and who want the cheap land at the end of the hilly road."

Improving Old Highways.

Frequently old roads can be greatly improved at a very little added cost. Thoroughly drain by using tile and render more efficient the open ditches along the sides. Careful attention to the road surface, keeping it smooth and free from hollows, will result in very marked improvement. Sand and gravel added to a clay road will often make it much better, and clay added to a sand road frequently is of great benefit. Filling hollows is one of the most effective methods of improving roads in a rough country. The soil is easily dragged into the hollows, and the grade is thus materially reduced.

How to Wash Irish Crochet.

Irish crochet collars and neckwear may be the most durable a girl can use or the most unsatisfactory. It depends upon the laundering. Wash in thick, hot suds made from pure white soap. Rinse through several waters and put through a thin starch water. Squeeze out excessive moisture between cloths. Pin the crochet piece to a cushion or heavily padded board. Pull out all the points and edges, fastening each one with a pin to the cushion. Allow it to remain until dry, when it will look like new. If the lace is much yellowed the cushion can be stood in the sun during the drying process.

"What a Girl Can Do"

The attraction at the Opera House for next Monday night "What a Girl Can Do" gives one an opportunity to wonder. It is said that the play is a beautiful American Drama that teaches a strong moral lesson. The title is an appropriate one. Why not give our girls a chance to see what they really can do? But in this particular instance the young girl goes out into the world to gain her own livelihood, deciding in her way to do good to her fellow man. She meets and comes in contact with a young desperado and gracefully decides to reform him and recall to memory his early teachings, that he may see the error of his wrong.

This she successfully does, and the young man decides to live an upright and honorable life for her sake. The story is exciting and well told and should create interest in the hearts of both old and young.

Good gracious, must we have such wrangling every two years. Two years ago Earl and Bradley and Warner were making ugly remarks to one another through the papers to the disgust of the people of the state, and now this year Osborn and Warner are at it, making charges of double dealing and incompetency. "You did," "I didn't," "You did." We'd spank our children if they behaved no better than that.—Mt. Pleasant Times.

C. D. McLachlan has formed a co-partnership with J. A. Vought for the carrying on a general blacksmithing and wood-working business at the stand occupied by Mr. Vought. Mr. McLachlan has a reputation all over Northern Michigan as an expert horseshoer, having been employed in this city by J. S. Baker & Co., Caldwell & Louden and for the past seven years with Sam Beaubian, while Mr. Vought is well known as an expert workman. The new firm will be a strong one.

The newspapers of northern and western Michigan, which during recent months, have been telling of the rapid improvements of this section of the state and of the great increase in land values, can now point to an official state report confirming in full their somewhat glowing statements. During the last six months 60,380 acres of state land located in northern counties were sold for more than double the price paid two years ago for lands located in the very same counties and sections. Deputy Land Commissioner Carton says that this remarkable increase is due to the increased worth of the land as demonstrated by actual results. Land that now brings $10 an acre at a state sale could not have sold a few years ago at 50 cents an acre. The value of these lands is known now, but it was not known five years ago.—Cadillac News.

Mapmaking.

Mapmaking goes back to the earliest known time. It was a branch of the early picture writing practiced by savages. In Tahiti, for instance, the natives were able to make fairly good maps for the guidance of explorers. Maps with raised lines were in use in Peru before the conquest. Even the Eskimos are not without the ability to make maps. The oldest known map is that of the Ethiopian gold mines, dating from the time of Sethos I., the father of Rameses II., long before the time of Aristagoras and his bronze tablet, on which was inscribed the circuit of the earth and all the seas and rivers then known.—New York American.

With the English the Dorking is the favorite table fowl. It is a remarkably full breasted bird and, though a slow grower, attains a large size at maturity.

The steer should be graduated from the feed lot to packing house by the time she is three, and the hen should be made into potpie when she is two years old.

The weather never is to one's liking all the time, but the way the weather clerk superintends the department probably gives as general satisfaction as if the job were turned over to some other fellow.

The boys may feel greater interest in keeping the fields clean if a new and up to date cultivator is substituted for that wabbly old rattletrap that has been doing duty for the past ten or twelve years. The growing crops, too, may give decided evidence that they appreciate the change.

Where sawdust is available it makes a very good absorbent for the liquids in stable manures. Fresh sawdust contains an acid which tends to neutralize the alkali of the manure, and, while it adds little to the soil in the way of fertilizer, when decayed it furnishes a valuable mold or humus.

The French way of slaughtering horses after they have outlived their usefulness in the harness has some advantages over the practice quite too common in this country of selling broken down animals to some heartless brute who will exact the last ounce of work from them, quite likely killing them in the process. The old country way means at least a quick and merciful death.

That humus—decaying vegetable mold—is a requisite for the proper growth of vegetable life is shown nicely when a crop such as corn is planted on spots which have been scraped off in the process of leveling a piece of land. The growth that is made is stunted and the plants are of a sickly color. It usually requires several seasons of fertilizing and tilling to bring such soils to a normal productive capacity.

Swamp muck might be used on many a farm to good advantage as an absorbent of the moisture and liquids in the stable manure. Such treatment would arrest the dissipation and decomposition of fertilizing elements, while the muck soil would furnish a type of humus that the average soil stands much in need of. For winter use in cold latitudes the absorbent could be thoroughly dried during the summer months and stored under cover where it would be available.

The housewife—it is superfluous to call her busy—can save herself a whole lot of hot work over the ironing board if she will fold the bed linen, towels and all of the underclothing and hose carefully after they are dry and put them away without ironing. If she feels that she must put a crease in them this can easily be done by putting the folded clothes under a heavy weight for a few hours. A whole lot of women are making this short cut in their work, and they are to be commended for their good sense.

That old friend the pigweed, known also under the names redroot and careless weed, is a very cosmopolitan pest. It tries the religion of the New England farmer, harries the patience of the midstate gardener and is one of the worst banes of the Pacific slope rancher. Its source of working mischief lies in its prolificacy and persistence. It will mature all the way from 10,000 to 25,000 seeds in a single season, while if chopped off in the morning there is a tradition that it will send up a shoot and mature a seed before sundown. Its roots go deep and are about as tough as that of na alfalfa plant.

For those desirous of taking up beekeeping there could hardly be available a more concise or practical publication on the subject than farmers' bulletin No. 397, entitled "Bees," recently published by the department of agriculture at Washington, whence it may be had free by sending for it. This bulletin condenses into forty-two pages the practical information and directions necessary in the proper management of an apiary, including location, equipment, general manipulations, swarm management, production of honey and wax, wintering, diseases, etc., as well as much other pertinent general information. At the close of the bulletin is given a list of all publications of the department bearing on the different phases of beekeeping.

In all varieties of apples where color is a requisite, factors of quality and size being the same, the highest prices will be received for that fruit which is the most highly colored. To secure this result sunshine and a free circulation of air are necessary, and this cannot be if the tree has a dense and thickly headed top. The way out is the inauguration of a system of pruning which will open the tops of the trees—the removal of the main leader a good distance down and the thinning of the lateral limbs. This will not only color the fruit, but it will greatly simplify the labor of spraying and harvesting it, while in years to come, if the pruning is properly done, it will mean that the fruit will be produced within a reasonable distance from the ground instead of at a height where extension ladders will be needed to pick it. Red apples are the money fetchers, and the above is the way to get them.

The slugs may be given an effectual knockout on the small cherry and peach trees by throwing a handful or two or fine dust or earth over the leaves. The same plan is good for the slug that infests the rosebushes.

If the full facts were known it is more than likely that much of the benefit resulting from the application of stable manures to the soil is due to the fact that the alkalis they contain tend to correct and sweeten a somewhat sour condition of soil, as well as to the known fertilizing elements which they contain.

Those starting in the growing of chrysanthemums should keep in mind that these plants are gross consumers of plant food, need heavy fertilizing and frequent watering. If the largest measure of success is to be attained with them. Failure with this fine flower is sometimes due to the fact that the bed in which they are set is placed too near a hedge or shrubs, which are also heavy pullers on both fertility and moisture.

If sheep had no further point in their favor the keeping of a flock of from thirty to sixty on the average farm would be amply justified from the service they render as weed destroyers. It being a matter of statistics that of more than 500 different kinds of weeds they will consume all but about fifty varieties. Along with dairying the practice of sheep raising needs introducing in many grain raising sections of the country, while it needs reintroducing into some sections where it was once in vogue.

The northeast slope has been viewed for many years past as the ideal site for an orchard location. This seems to be due to the fact that on such locations orchards are not only exposed to the cold winds of spring, which tend to retard a development of blossom, bud and leaf, but receive much less directly the rays of the warming sun. In localities where there is never danger from spring frosts these factors are not so vital, but in latitudes where this is a recurrent danger this matter of location is an important one.

With parcels post systems in operation and beneficially so in practically all leading foreign countries, it would seem to be but a short time until such a system, or a modification of it, will be adopted in this country. Country dwellers are beginning to make insistent demand for the adoption of the plan, and this means that the professional politician who has his ear nearer to the speaking tube of the express companies than the folks out in the corn, wheat and cotton fields will have to get busy shortly if he stays in office.

The New York state department of agriculture has lately issued a book of some 200 pages giving descriptions of occupied and unoccupied farms in the Empire State which are for sale or rent. Doubtless such descriptions would give a prospective buyer a fair idea of these properties; but, as is equally true in the purchase of lands in the west, they should not be bought without being given a careful first hand inspection. There is little question that many of these places are real bargains—price, quality of land and nearness to market considered—while there are some others which would hardly justify paying a price which would equal the taxes and cost of keeping in repair. Notwithstanding this they might well be looked into carefully by those who are looking for "homes on the land."

The conviction seems to be growing in the minds of those who have inquired into the matter that sweet clover—until lately viewed as a useless roadside weed—may have much to commend it as a substitute for alfalfa in sections where climatic or soil conditions seem to forbid the growing of the latter most valuable legume. No soil seems so thin and unpromising that the sweet clover does not flourish and do well on it. It is a rank grower, laughs at dry weather and yields a hay that is nutritious and that stock will readily acquire a liking for if cut before the stalks get too dry and tough. There are firms which have the seed for sale, while the conditions for sowing it are about the same one should follow in getting a start with alfalfa, including a well mellowed seed bed, free from weed seed and inoculated with soil from a spot where sweet clover has been growing thriftily. A few who have tried it speak encouragingly of the results which they have had with it. Others might well make a trial of it.

Colon C. Little, state dairy and food commissioner, has issued a circular to beekeepers relative to foul brood among Michigan bees. He says: "I request that if you are a Michigan beekeeper, whether you have one colony or five hundred, be sure you know whether you have either American or European foul brood. If you are uncertain send a sample of the comb to the entomologist at the Michigan Agricultural college or to the Bureau of Etomology, Washington, D. C., enclosing your name and address with it. Do this promptly. Ascertain whether the disease is in your bees or your neighbors' and notify the dairy and food department, Lansing, Michigan, and a capable inspector will be sent to investigate. Unless prompt action is taken in every section of the state, there is no measuring the damage that will be done to the bee-keeping industry."

Working in conjunction with a nearly full-blooded Ottawa Indian, Norbert Sero, special officer of the United States department of the Indian service, has secured evidence enough against twelve saloonkeepers of Traverse City to bind over the entire list to appear at the next session of the circuit court to be held beginning the last Monday in September. Mr. Sero, himself a French Indian, has worked in that city since August 9, with Levi Generreaux, the second actor of the plot that seems to have settled so thickly and suddenly over the saloonkeepers and bartenders of the city, and has backed his evidence as secured to prove the statements that the saloon-keepers have sold liquor to an Indian by the very bottles in which the liquor has been passed out.

Reports from the four state insane asylums show a decrease in insanity throughout the state. The number of patients admitted to the four institutions in the past year is smaller than in previous years despite the fact that population has been on the increase.

The falling off in net gain is laid to the increased attention paid by the state to mental troubles and the spread of the knowledge of hygeine. It is predicted that with a continuance of this attendance insanity will be reduced to a far greater extent.

At Pontiac tables for the fiscal year just ended show that the net increase was less than for the two years previous.

At the northern Michigan asylum in Traverse City there was a net decrease of 23 patients in the fiscal year ending June 30. The net increase in the last four years has been between 21 and 22, as against an average of 43 for the last 22 1-2 years.

The Upper Peninsula Hospital for the insane at Newberry gained 22 patients in the last year which is less than in previous years.

At the Michigan Asylum for the insane at Kalamazoo in 1910 there was a larger increase than in 1909, but a considerable decrease over the year before.

Custer township, Antrim county, is certainly having a peck of trouble over the building of its new town hall. Two years ago after a two story building had been decided on by the voters, some of them became dissatisfied and petitioned the town board to erect only a one story structure. Then the board became at "loggerheads" over the proposition and refused to do anything. Last spring the people voted to raise $1500 for a cement block one story building and the contract was let for the mason and carpenter work, the hall to be completed by August 20. After the walls had been built and the roof was about to be placed on top thereof, the cement walls caved in and had to be torn down. The town board, it is reported ordered this work done and the contractors to rebuild the hall. Then the gentle voter got in his work again and at a special election refused by a vote of 25 to 15 to be taxed an additional $1000 for the completion of the building, and now the work is at a standstill. From the present point of view it does not look as if the dedication would be held very soon, but the prospects for a lawsuit or two are promising.

And the Cable Piano Company's Greatest of all Sales will be A Thing of the Past

Never Again will such an Opportunity Present Itself to Buy a High Grade Piano at so Low a Cost

We are the Largest Makers in the World and Sell Direct from our own Factories at a Positive Saving of from $100.00 to $150.00

You take Absolutely no Chance of Getting an Unknown or Inferior Instrument when You Come to Us

Thirty-five Years of Honorable Dealings with the Public and Unlimited Capital Back of Our Guarantee

It is Better to Buy Now Than to Wish You Had Six Months From Now

Easy Payments Accepted — Store Open Evenings

Just a Word to You

You are certainly too good a business man or woman, to let an opportunity to save at least $100.00 go by. You intend buying a piano "some day," and yet you put it off from time to time, and all the while the children are getting older; their school duties are getting harder, and they won't take the interest in their music (which is just as necessary today as a common school education) later that they take today. Will it be any easier to buy a year from now than it is today? You don't have to pay all cash unless you wish—The Cable Company is big enough to carry your account, and we are willing to help you educate your child along musical lines, as we know that if we sell you a piano, you will be a living, talking advertisement for us and our goods, and so will your children. A satisfied customer is the greatest advertisement a firm can have. If that is the case, could we afford to sell you an inferior instrument? Could we afford to charge you more for an instrument than we advertise to sell them for? No—positively no. We have 12 stores in this state alone where we handle our own goods, and stores in all the principal cities in the United States, and these sales mean an increased demand for our goods in the future, at these stores. The Cable line of piano has been on the market for over thirty-five years and there are thousands of them in use in every state in the union.

Why Such Low Prices?

For the benefit of those who have not read our former advertisements we will state again—The Cable Company is today the largest manufacturers of pianos and Inner-Player pianos in the world, owning and operating immense factories employing more than two thousand men. Buying as we do such immense quantities of raw material we are enabled to effect a great saving thereby. We cut out the Jobber and the Dealer with their profits—and YOU get the benefit.

Whether you contemplate buying now or not, come in and see us, look over the line, then decide whether you can afford to let this wonderful opportunity of securing a high-grade instrument at a big saving, get away from you.

turned toward him and the sonorous triumph that rumbled in his throat faded to a low greeting. And Nathaniel saw that the little old councilor's eyes glittered boldly as they met the prophet's and that in their glance was neither fear nor servitude but rather a light as of master meeting master. The two advanced and clasped hands and a few low words passed between them while Nathaniel went to the door.

"I will go with you, Captain Nathaniel Plum," called Obadiah. "I will go with you and show you the town."

"The councilor will be your friend," added Strang. "Today he carries with him that authority from the king."

He bowed and Nathaniel passed through the door. Looking back he caught a last warning flash from the girl's eyes. As he hurried down the stair he heard the councilor pause for an instant upon the landing and taking advantage of this opportunity he picked up the crumpled paper, and read these lines:

"Hurry to your ship. In another hour men will be watching for an opportunity to kill you. You will never leave the island alive—unless you go now. The girl you saw through the window sends you this warning."

He thrust the paper into his coat pocket as Obadiah came up behind him.

"Ho, ho, Nat, my boy, I have come fast to catch you—I have come fast!" he whispered. He caught his companion by the arm and Nathaniel felt his hand trembling violently. "Come this way, Nat—beyond the temple. I have things to say to you." His voice was strangely unnatural and when Captain Plum looked down into his face the look in the head-like eyes startled him. "Nat, you must hurry away with the package!"

"So I understand—if I save my skin, Obadiah Price, I have a notion to kill you!"

They had passed beyond the huge edifice of logs, and as he stopped, hidden from the view of the king's office, Nathaniel caught the councilor's arm in a grip that crushed to the bone.

"I have a notion to kill you!" he repeated.

The old man stood unflinching. Not a muscle of his face quivered as the captain's fingers sank into the flesh.

"At the first sign of treachery, at the first sign of danger to myself, I shall shoot you dead!" he finished.

"You may, Nat, you may. From this moment until you leave the island I shall be at your side and no harm shall come to you. But if there should, Nat, or if there should come a moment when you believe that I am your enemy—shoot me!" There was sincerity in his voice that carried conviction to Nathaniel's heart and he released his hold upon the councilor's arm. Regardless of the mystery that surrounded him he believed in Obadiah. But there rose in his breast a mad desire to choke this old man into telling him the truth, to force him to reveal the secrets of this strange plot into which he had been drawn and of which he knew as little as when he first set foot in Strang's kingdom. Yet he realized even as the desire formed itself in his brain that such an effort would be useless.

"Here Comes the Man Who Is to Kill You!"

"If you had remained at the cabin, Nat, you would have known that I was your friend," continued Obadiah. "She would have come to you, but now—it is impossible. You know. You have been warned?"

Nathaniel drew Winnsome's note from his pocket and read it aloud. Obadiah smiled gleefully when he noticed how carefully he kept the handwriting from his eyes.

"Ah, Nat, you are a noble fellow!" he cried, rubbing his hands in his old tireless way. "You would not betray pretty little Winn, eh? And who do you suppose told Winnsome to give you this note?"

"Strang's wife."

"Yes, even so. And it was she who set my old legs a-running for you, my boy. Come, let us move!"

The little councilor was his old self again, chuckling and grimacing and rubbing his hands, and his eyes danced as he spoke of the girl.

"Casey is not a cautious man," he gurgled with a sudden upward leer. "Casey is a fool!"

"Casey!" almost shouted Captain Plum. "What the devil do you mean?"

"Ho, ho, ho—haven't you guessed the truth yet, Nat? While you and I were getting acquainted last night a couple of fishermen from the mainland dropped alongside your sloop. They had been robbed by the Mormon pirates. They cursed Strang. They swore vengeance. And your cautious Casey cursed with 'em, and fed 'em, and drank with 'em—and he would have had them stay until morning only they were anxious to hurry with their report to Strang. Understand, Nat? Eh? Do you understand?"

"What did Casey tell them?" gasped Nathaniel.

Obadiah hunched his shoulders.

"Enough to warrant a bullet through your head, Nat. Cheerful, isn't it? But we'll fool them, Nat, we'll fool them! You shall board your ship and hurry away with the package, and then you shall make love to Strang's wife—for she will go with you!"

He stopped to enjoy the amazement that was written in every lineament of the other's face. The red blood surged into Nathaniel's neck and deepened on his bronzed cheeks. Slowly the reaction came. When he spoke there was an uneasy gleam in his eyes and his voice was as hard as steel.

"She will go with me, councilor! And why?"

Obadiah had laughed softly as he watched the change. Suddenly he jerked himself erect.

"Sh-h-h!" he whispered. "Keep cool, Nat! Don't show any excitement or fear. Here comes the man who is to kill you!"

He made no move save with his eyes.

"He is coming to speak with me and to get a good look at you," he added in excited haste. "Appear friendly. Agree with what I say. He is the chief of sheriffs, the king's murderer—Arbor Croche!"

He turned as if he had just seen the approaching figure. And he whispered softly, "Winnsome's father!"

Arbor Croche! Nathaniel gave an involuntary shudder as he turned with Obadiah. Croche, chief of sheriffs, scourge of the mainland—the Attila of the Mormon kingdom, whose very name caused the women of the shores to turn white and on whose head the men had secretly set a price in gold! Without knowing it his hand went under his coat. Obadiah saw the movement and as he advanced to meet the officer of the king he jerked the arm back fiercely. Half a dozen paces away the chief of sheriffs paused and bowed low. But the councilor stood erect, as he had stood before the king, smiling and nodding his head.

"Ah, Croche," he greeted, "good morning!"

"Good morning, councilor!"

"Sheriff, I would have you meet Capt. Nathaniel Plum, master of the sloop Typhoon. Captain Plum this is his majesty's officer, Arbor Croche!"

The two men advanced and shook hands. Nathaniel stood half a head above the sheriff, who, like his master, the king, was short and of massive build, though a much younger man. He was a dark, lowering hulk of a creature, with black eyes, black hair, and a hand-clasp that showed him possessed of great strength.

"You are a stranger, Captain Plum?" The councilor replied quickly.

"He has never been at St. James before, sheriff. I have invited him to stay over to see the whipping. By the way—" he shot a suggestive look at the officer. "By the way, Croche, I want you to see him safely aboard his sloop tonight. His ship is at the lower end of the island, and if you will detail a couple of men just before dusk—an escort, you know—"

Nathaniel felt a curious thrill creep up his spine at the satisfaction which betrayed itself in the officer's black face.

"It will give me great pleasure, councilor," he interrupted. "I shall escort you myself if you will allow me, Captain Plum!"

"Thank you," said Nathaniel.

"Captain Plum is to remain with me throughout the day," added Obadiah. "Come at seven—to my place. Ah, I see that people are assembling near the jail!"

"We have changed our plans somewhat, councilor." The officer turned to Nathaniel. "You will see the whipping within half an hour, Captain Plum." He turned away with another bow to the councilor and hastened in the direction of Strang's office.

"So that is the gentleman who thinks he is going to put a bullet through me!" exclaimed Nathaniel when the officer had gone beyond hearing. He laughed, and there was a kind of wild expectant joy in his voice. "Obadiah, can you not make arrangements for him to go with me alone?"

"He will not go with you at all, Nat," gloated the old man. "Ho, ho, we are playing at his own game—treachery. When he calls at my place you will be aboard ship."

"But I should like to have a talk with him—alone, and in the woods. God—I know a man at Grand Traverse bay whose wife and daughter—"

"Sh-h-h!" interrupted the councilor. "Would you kill little Winnsome's father?"

"Her father? That animal! That murderer! Is it true?"

"But you should have seen her mother, Nat, you should have seen her mother!" The old man twisted his hands, like a miser ravished by the sight of gold. "She was beautiful—as beautiful as a wild flower, and she killed herself three years ago to save the birth of another child into this hell. Little Winn is like her mother, Nat."

"And she lives with him?"

"Er, yes—and guarded, oh, so carefully guarded by Strang, Nat! Yes, I guess that some day she will be a queen."

"Great God!" cried the young man. "And you—you live in this cesspool of sin and still believe in a heaven?"

"Yes, I believe in a heaven. And my reward there shall be great. Ho, ho, I am taking no middle road, Nat!"

They had passed in a semicircle beyond the temple and now approached a squat building constructed of logs, which Obadiah had pointed out as the jail. A glance satisfied Nathaniel that it was so situated that an admirable view of the proceedings could be obtained from the rear of the structure in which Strang had his office. Several score of people had already assembled about the prison and stood chatting with that tense interest and anticipation with which the mob always awaits public infliction of the law's penalties. A third of them were women. As Nathaniel had previously noted, the feminine part of the Mormon population wore their hair either in braids down their backs or in thick curls flowing over their shoulders and with the exception of three or four were attired in skirts that just concealed their knees. Obadiah halted his companion close to a group of half a dozen of these women and nudged him slyly.

"Pretty sight, eh, Nat?" he chuckled. "Ah, the king has a wonderful eye for beauty, Nat—wonderful eye! He orders that no skirt shall fall below the female knee. Ho, ho, if he dared, if he quite dared, Nat!"

He nudged Nathaniel again with such enthusiasm that the latter jumped as though a knife had been thrust between his ribs.

"By George, I admire his taste!" he laughed. The women caught him staring at them, and one, who was the youngest and prettiest of the lot, smiled invitingly.

"Tush—the Jezebel!" snapped Obadiah, catching the look. "That's her child playing just beyond."

The young woman tossed her head and her white teeth gleamed in a laugh, as though she had overheard the old councilor's words.

"See her twist her hair," he snorted venomously as the young woman, still boldly eyeing Nathaniel, played with the luxuriant curls that glistened in the sun upon her breast. "Ezra Witton is so fond of her that he will take no other wife. Ugh, Strang is a fool!"

Nathaniel turned away from the smiling eyes with a shrug.

"Why?"

"To tell our women that it helps to save their souls to wear short skirts and let their hair hang down. For every soul of a woman that it saves it sends two men on the road to hell!"

So intense was the old man's displeasure and so ludicrous the twisting contortions of his face that Nathaniel could hardly restrain himself from bursting into a roar of laughter. Obadiah perceived his inclination and with an angry bob of his head led the way through to the inner edge of the waiting circle of men. Within this circle, in a small open space, was a short post with straps attached to an arm nailed across it, and leaning upon this post in an attitude of one who possesses a most distinguished office was a young man with a three-thonged whip in his hand. An ominous silence pervaded the circle, with the exception of the hushed whispering of a number of women who had forced themselves into the line of spectators, bent upon witnessing the sight of blood as well as hearing the sound of lashes. Nathaniel noticed that most of the women hung in frightened curiosity beyond the men.

"That is MacDougall with the lash—official whipper and caretaker of the slave hounds," explained Obadiah in a whisper.

A Unique Improvement Scheme.

Says a recent writer: "I know of a local paper whose editor interviews all the mail carriers when the roads are in good condition to drag after each rain and secures the names of all the men who donate work on the drag. These are then published as a roll of honor. Of course a man doesn't drag roads just to have the good he is doing in that way exploited; but, all the same, one likes to know that the good he does is being noticed, and it certainly is by those who travel the dragged roads whether they read the paper or not."

Build For Permanency.

Land and property, said a speaker at a good roads convention, were valuable in proportion to their accessibility to market or pleasure, and whatever adds to the accessibility enhances values. The history of the country, he stated, bore witness to the most useless and wasteful extravagance in the use of money and labor on its highways, and the lesson to be learned was to build, as did the ancients, for permanency and with the utmost care and thought for the future.

Good Highways Uplifting.

There is nothing that contributes more to rural uplift than good roads. For social and economic improvement "consolidation" must be easy. Without good roads it is impossible for the people of rural communities to meet and discuss ways and means of improving rural society.

How to Check the Flow of Sap After a Bough Is Cut Off.

The following has been found an effectual method of dealing with "bleeding" when necessary to remove branches of trees that are given to bleed profusely. This is to procure or borrow a spirit or blow lamp, such as painters and plumbers generally employ for burning off old paint and soldering joints of lead pipes in inconvenient places, and with its aid to carbonize the wound until the whole surface is thoroughly charred. Follow this up with an immediate application of painter's knotting or Stockholm tar, the former for preference because it hardens more quickly than the latter and when once thoroughly hard the sap cannot penetrate or ooze through it.

The chief thing is to well char or carbonize the wood of and the bark surrounding the wound also. This takes some little time to accomplish if the sap is flowing freely, but as the wood becomes more and more charred the bleeding gradually ceases, and when seen to stop altogether the knotting or tar should at once be applied. If unacquainted with the use of a blow lamp obtain the services of a painter or plumber to do the carbonizing.

How to Pack Bottles.

A difficulty hard to overcome is the packing of bottles, especially when so many are needed on the summer or fall vacation. It should be first ascertained that the corks are sound and that the liquid will not be allowed to seep through them. Then cut pieces of small, pliable wire. Draw a piece of the wire around the neck of each bottle and make a loop, drawing tight. Put the other end across the cork, forming another loop around the neck of the bottle. When it is prepared in this way the bottle may be carried in trunk or bag without danger of leakage.

How to Make Almond Sauce.

This is an excellent sauce to serve with any boiled or baked pudding. Blanch and pound eight ounces of sweet almonds with a few spoonfuls of rosewater or lemon juice. Add to a pint of thin cream and four tablespoonfuls sugar. Allow to come to a boil. Pour over the well beaten yolks of three eggs. Stir over hot water until it thickens. Just before serving add the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff snow. It then becomes a delicious foamy sauce and may be served either hot or cold.

KELLEY MAN OF THE PEOPLE

Candidate of No Particular Section of the State.

WHAT THE UPPER PENNINSULA HOLOS

Dangerous to Place In Its Hands More Power.

"I Can See No Difference to the Mine and the Little Home on the Hillside, When it Comes to Taxation."

"I can see no difference between the mine and the little home on the hillside when it comes to taxation."

For the past two months Lieut. Gov. Patrick H. Kelley, candidate at the primaries, September 6th, for the republican nomination for governor, has been made the subject of a series of attacks at the hands of Chase S. Osborn, who appears in this campaign as the candidate of the mining interests. The northern peninsula has attempted to cloud the issues of the campaign—which is equitable taxation for mines—by shouting "Warnerism" at Lieut. Gov. Kelley. Just how sincere he is and how truthful his statement that he has always been against Gov. Warner is the following extract from a speech which he delivered at Sault Ste. Marie, during the primaries two years ago will show what Mr. Osborn said at that time:

"I want to say for Governor Warner that Michigan has never had a better governor. They have never had a governor who has striven harder to meet the demands of the people. The only thing they can say against him is their argument for a third term. Other states when they have had good governors have re-elected them for third terms. They did not swap horses in the middle of the stream."

Compare Mr. Kelley's argument with those of Mr. Osborn. The former talks state issues and dares to tell the man with the pick on his shoulder in the northern peninsula, the same thing that he tells the man behind the plow in lower Michigan. The latter shouts "Warnerism" and as the Mt. Pleasant Courier says, confines his arguments to "Love your God, love your country and vote for me."

Mr. Kelley says in part; "I favor an investigation into the methods of assessing the mines of the northern peninsula. I believe that the mining corporations should be placed upon the same level with the farms and the homes. I can see no difference between the wealthy mine owner and the proprietor of a smaller business or a little home on the hillside.

"We have great business interests in this state. We have 39,000 factories, giving employment to 300,000 men and their daily wage amounts to $600,000. These are great interests of the state and we are glad of that. We have not as yet let the power get into the hands of any particular interest of the state or any particular section, and it is essential that we do not.

"We have always given the Upper peninsula, dominated by the mines, a full share of the state government and the present time is no exception to the rule. They have justice of the supreme court; they have the Auditor General of the state, and he has in his office one third of all the patronage of the state government at his disposal. They have the Superintendent of Public Instruction, receiving a salary of $4,000 per year, one of the highest salaries in the state. They have a regent of the University; a member of the State Board of Education and a member of the State Board of Agriculture, six elective officers in one congressional district with only about half the population of Wayne county. Now in addition to these they ask us to give them also the governor of the state. This involves the power of directing legislation, of appointing a railroad commissioner, with supervision over $215,000,000 worth of railroad property and the power of appointing the Tax Commission, with general supervision over each and every parcel of land in the state which gives them power to assess farms as well as mines; the power of appointing a Banking Commissioner with general supervision over the banks of the state; with the power of appointing an Insurance Commissioner with general supervision over the insurance in the state, thus putting into the hands of a single congressional district in the state dominated by a single interest—namely, mining, practically all the vital executive powers of the State Government.

I leave it to you to say whether in your judgment such a course would be wise and prudent."

Pays High Tribute

In introducing Patrick H. Kelley to the magnificent audience which assembled at Benton Harbor to greet the lieutenant governor, Atty. Victor M. Gore, one of Michigan's best known attorneys and one of the men who was prominent in the framing of the new constitution said:

"The vast interests of the state of Michigan demand in our governor not only a broad outlook and sound integrity, but also an intimate knowledge of the state's resources, her people, her laws and institutions. By almost common consent that man is Patrick H. Kelley of Berrien county. I say of 'Berrien county' because he is our soil and our people. The people of this county have watched his growth and cheered his march from the most trying obscurity up to the most honorable, prominence and usefulness in state affairs. And that pride and loyalty will not desert him now that he is about to realize the ambition of his life, in his nomination and election as governor of Michigan.

"I most cheerfully give him and his candidacy my personal endorsement. He has the grasp of public affairs necessary in a chief magistrate and the moral courage to follow his convictions. His record is an open book. It is clean, consistent, inspiring and strong.—No apologies are necessary for him on the one hand or eulogy on the other. He is a splendid type of our best citizenship worthy of the office to which he aspires. I, therefore, take sincere pleasure in introducing as a speaker of the evening, my friend and your friend, Hon. Patrick H. Kelley. (advertising)

FORD P. ROBBINS OF BOYNE FALLS

Candidate for the Republican nomination for Sheriff of Charlevoix County at the Primary Election, Tuesday, September 6, 1910.

Ford P. Robbins is in the prime of vigorous manhood, has been a resident of this county for the past 18 years, has been three times elected to the office of Supervisor of his township, and is fully qualified to hold the important office to which he aspires.

The only plank in his platform is the impartial enforcement of the law without fear or favor. If Mr. Robbins is the choice of the people for Sheriff they can rest assured that he will perform every duty which his high office imposes upon him, for he is a man who, when he has a thing to do, goes ahead and does it. 33-t-f-3

To the Enrolled Electors of Charlevoix County

I desire to announce that I will be a candidate for nomination for the office of prosecuting attorney, on the Republican ticket, at the primary election September 6, 1910.
31t5 A. BURTON NICHOLAS, Jr.

FOR PROSECUTING ATT'Y

Brief History of the Man Who Aspires to be Prosecutor.

His Friends Are Working Hard As Well As Himself. It Is Believed He Will Land.

Arthur G. Urquhart, candidate for Prosecuting Attorney on the Republican ticket at the primaries, to be held September 6, on being interviewed by the editor of the Citizen, said that he thought his chances for getting the nomination over the two candidates from East Jordan were good. He also said he had no "mud to sling" at the other candidates and that he would sooner not get it by running the other fellow down. Mr. Urquhart is a young and vigorous man with no mean ability as a lawyer, and if he gets the nominatton, he wants it because of his ability to handle this important office, and not because the other fellow may not be able to handle it. Mr. Urquhart thinks that the office of Prosecutor should be in Boyne City, as its centrally located and handy to all parts of the county.

In speaking of his early life, "Judge" as Mr. Urquhart is familiarly dubbed by his friends, said he was born on a farm near Rio, Wisconsin, at which he lived with his parents until he was 10 years of age at which time the family moved to Ironwood, in the upper peninsula of this state. His schooling has been of the very best, he being a graduate from the Ironwood schools under the personal instruction of the Hon. I. L. Wright, the present incumbent in the office of superintendent of Public Instruction. After graduating from the Ironwood schools, Mr. Urquhart entered upon the study of law at the University of Michigan, and graduated with honors from that institution in the spring of 1903, coming to Boyne City shortly thereafter. Since coming to Boyne City Mr. Urquhart has made a name for himself, not only as a man among men, but as a lawyer among lawyers. He came to this city with $3 in his hip pocket and the first few years of his stay here were years of uphill work, and years of worry and constant struggling; years calculated to try the nerve, but "Urq" kept on plugging, got married, bought a little home on the installment plan and now stands before the people of Charlevoix county with a record as clean as a hound's tooth, asking them, as he puts it, "for a job." Mr. Urquhart's friends say he has a walk away, but his canny Scotch blood tells him not to take too much for granted, and "Urq" says he is going to see every Republican voter in Charlevoix county, and get his vote or "bust a suspender," (and he will too.

The editor of the Citizen has known Mr. Urquhart intimately since coming to Boyne City, and if boosting him through the columns of this paper can land him in the Prosecutor's chair, then rest assured that Arthur G. Urquhart will land on his feet, high and dry, the day after the primaries with a good large plurality. In other words we believe he will be the right man in the right place.—Boyne Citizen. (ad.)

To the Republican Voters of Charlevoix County.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for nomination for county clerk, on the Republican ticket, at the primary election to be held, Tuesday, September 6, 1910.
35-t DANIEL S. PAYTON.

To the Republican Voters of Charlevoix County

Owing to the malicious attack on me in the Charlevoix Sentinel, I have decided to enter the contest for the Republican nomination for county clerk and will appreciate any support I may receive.

NEARLY THREE MILLION

Population of Michigan Given Out By Census Bureau.

Charlevoix County Made a Remarkable Gain. Population 19,157.

Saturday the census bureau gave out the figures for Michigan, as a total, and by counties. Michigan has a population of 2,810,173 a gain of 389,191 in the past ten years.

Charlevoix County is one of the counties which showed a remarkable gain in her total population being 19,157 against 13,956 in 1900 and 9,686 in 1890.

The following are the figures for nearby counties.

Antrim	15,692	16,568
Emmet	18,561	15,931
Cheboygan	17,872	15,516
Otsego	6,552	6,175
G'd Traverse	23,784	20,479

PICNIC A SUCCESS

Maple Grove Grangers Again Score as Entertainers.

The picnic at Maple Grove Saturday was well attended, it being an ideal day for the event. Maple Grove grangers well sustained their reputation as entertainers. The program under charge of their lecturer being entertaining throughout and demonstrating that Maple Grove grange is doing good lecture work.

The address by Hon. D. E. McClure was in his best vein and while full of stories, conveyed the story of the advance in rural progress made by Michigan patrons through the grange organization.

The ball game was hotly contested, Bay Shore winning over Charlevoix, and an immense crowd was present at the dance in the evening.

To the Republican Electors of the County of Charlevoix.

I am a candidate for re-nomination to the office of Register of Deeds and believe I should give the reasons why I am asking for your support.

I am now completing my fourth year in the office while it has been customary to continue public officials in office longer if they made good.

As to whether I have made good or not, I ask you to inquire of anybody who has had business dealings with the office during my incumbency.

Your public records are important, none more so than those in the office of Register of Deeds, and if you are satisfied with my service would it not be better to continue me in charge than to go the expense of educating a new man, which would require considerable time, however competent he might be.

If you are satisfied with my official record and believe that your interests would be best served by continuing me in the public service, your support would be very much appreciated
35t1 ROMEO A. EMERY.

TIMOTHY A. HEATON

Candidate for the Republican nomination for Sheriff has been a resident of Boyne City for seventeen years and has always voted the Republican ticket. Mr. Heaton has never before asked for office, but has served as deputy sheriff for the past four years and feels he has the needed experience to become sheriff and asks your favorable consideration at the primary election.
35t4

You will make no mistake in voting for Dwight H. Fitch for Prosecuting Attorney. His long experience and successful practice of the law in all the courts in this State make him eminently qualified for the office. 35-t-1

COULTER NOT A CANDIDATE

Statements that he would be Game Warden are Baseless Fabrications.

To the Editor:

I am advised that recent statements that were published in the effect that in the case of the nomination and election of the Hon. Chase S. Osborn to the office of Governor, that he had promised to appoint me State Game, Fish and Forestry Warden, are being assiduously circulated by Mr. Osborn's enemies in an effort to prejudice his cause with certain elements that would be unfriendly to my appointment for obvious reasons. I desire to take this opportunity of saying to the voters that the statement that Mr. Osborn has made any pledges to me, that he would appoint me to this or any other office, are entirely without foundation in fact. And I will say further, that I never have intimated to Mr. Osborn that I would be a candidate for the above, or any other office within his gift as Governor, and that the matter of such appointment never was remotely suggested to me by Mr. Osborn, nor by me to him. I can say farther, that I firmly believe that Mr. Osborn has consistently adhered to his determination formulated early in the campaign, that he would make no promises whatever to anyone, and that if he is elected Governor, he will enter upon the discharge of his duties absolutely untrammeled by any pre-election pledges.

I sincerely hope that the above statement will effectually set at rest the rumor above referred to, and that no one may be induced to vote against Mr. Osborn on account of the false rumors to which this is an answer. Signed,

A. L. COULTER

OWIGHT H. FITCH OF EAST JORDAN

Candidate For Prosecuting Attorney on the Republican Ticket—Primary Sept. 6.

Born and raised on a farm in Livingston county, Michigan. Is 43 years old. Obtained his education by his own personal efforts, working on the farm and teaching school. A graduate of the law department of the U. of M. Has practiced law fifteen years and nearly ten years in Charlevoix county.

He is not a politician. Has never held an office in this county. Is not the candidate of any combination or organization. He is putting up a clean, honorable campaign, only urging his own qualifications and ability for the office. If nominated and elected he promises to give the office his own personal attention, give to all a square deal and give the people one of the best administrations of that office they have ever had. f-35-t-1

TO THE VOTERS OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

William J. Weikel, of Charlevoix, in my opinion should be the republican nominee for the office of sheriff of this county. He has worked for me as under-sheriff during my term of office and will continue in that capacity until my term expires. I am intimately acquainted with him and as an officer he is honest, trustworthy, capable and willing. He has been deputy and under-sheriff under three different sheriffs and has learned the business, and during this time has received only small compensation. The office is an important one and requires experience, good judgment, tact and courage. Mr. Weikel possesses all of these qualifications. If any man is entitled to the office of sheriff of this county that man is William J. Weikel.
f-35-t-1 Frank McWain, Sheriff.

To the Republican Voters of Charlevoix County.

I will be a candidate for re-nomination to the office of county treasurer, on the Republican ticket, at the primary election, to be held Tuesday, September 6.
RICHARD LEWIS.

FOR FIRST TIME IN HISTORY

Will People Name Their Choice for United States Senator.

NAME ALL LAW MAKERS AT PRIMARY

Who the Candidates Are for the Different Positions.

Three County Tickets are in the Field.—Lively Contests for Sheriff, Prosecutor, Register and Clerk.

Next Tuesday a new page will be turned in the history of Michigan and Charlevoix county. For the first time in the history of the Michigan the people will choose United States senator by direct vote of the people. When the polls close on the night of September 6 it will decide whether we are to be represented by Hon. Charles E. Townsend or by Senator Burrows, although the final election will not take place until the January following, when the state legislature will ratify the choice of the people. On the same day the people of Charlevoix county will name their candidates for county offices by direct vote as well as governor, lieutenant-governor, state senator and representative in the state legislature which places the choice of all officials who have anything to do with the making of our laws, save president of the United States, directly in the hands of the people. For years the people have asked for this privilege. Now it has been granted and it is earnestly hoped that the vote cast next Tuesday will be a large one as only by showing our interest in the election can we hope to retain what we have gained and secure further advantages.

For senator the COURIER has advocated the choice of Mr. Townsend, who represents the progressive thought of today while Senator Burrows is a relic of the past, which has no sympathy with the added power which has come to the people.

For Governor Chase S. Osborn is a gentleman who represents the highest type of American citizenship. A finished scholar, a brilliant orator and student of government, he appeals to the voters, who are charmed by his attractive personality, although they regret that he has chosen to make his campaign one of personal attack rather than a discussion of the needed legislation of the state.

Lieutenant-governor Kelley deserves well of the people of Michigan. He has served them faithfully and well in many capacities and if advanced to the position of chief executive would faithfully conduct the affairs of that high position in the interests of all the people.

Mr. Musselman represents the business man in politics and promises if elected to conduct the affairs of the state in the same manner in which he conducted his great business enterprises, which has made the name of Musselman a synonom in the business world for honesty and success.

For lieutenant governor, Luren D. Dickinson, Nelson C. Rice and John Q. Ross are the opposing candidates.

Congressman Dadds has served the people so well during his first term that he will have no opposition which is a tribute to his hard work the past two years.

For state senator Frank D. Scott,

To the Republican Voters of Charlevoix County.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for Register of Deeds of Charlevoix County at the Primary election to be held on Sept. 6, 1910.

FOR GOVERNOR

AMOS S. MUSSELMAN

If the Republicans of Michigan want to nominate a man for Governor who will surely be elected in November, they should vote for

Amos S. Musselman

If the Republicans of Michigan want to nominate a man who is not handicapped with "Warnerism,"—if the Republicans of Michigan want to nominate a man for Governor who will not be handicapped in the campaign by a promise to veto a Tonnage Tax bill, should one be passed by the legislature, they should vote for

Amos S. Musselman

If the Republicans of Michigan want to nominate a man for Governor who belongs to no machine and to no faction, who has made a success of his own business, not accidentally, but by industry and executive ability, they should vote for

Amos S. Musselman

If the Republicans of Michigan want to nominate a man for Governor who has been a life long, consistent Republican, who is a wheelhorse of the party without being a stand-patter, and a progressive Republican without being an insurgent,—if they want a conservative, logical, clean-cut, fearless executive in the chair in Lansing, they should vote for

Amos S. Musselman

That Mr. Musselman is to be the nominee of the Republican party is the logic of recent events. There has been a strong undercurrent for him all summer, but it remained for Osborn and Kelley to open the way for a complete crystalization of sentiment favorable to Musselman. Kelley has been on the toboggan for the last three or four weeks and Osborn hit the chute at Big Rapids when he double crossed himself regarding his friendly relations with Governor Warner and his contributions to the Warner campaigns of two years ago.

Amos S. Musselman

has declined to enter into any verbal controversy with Mr. Osborn and says, "Slander and villification has seldom been a passport to public favor. Thank God, I do not want the office had enough to destroy our party, with all its traditions, nor to slander its representatives to obtain it. Ambitious zealots should not be permitted to usurp the powers of government. It is just as important to curb the ultra-radical as to stimulate the halting conservative. Neither should be trusted with power. The mass of the people are honest, intelligent and patriotic, and the public service should be thoroughly representative of them."

Every Republican who desires to vote for a winner at the primaries, September 6th, and to have a candidate who will be a winner at the election in November, should vote for

From a physician of 52 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know sorrow, worry and a great many disappointments when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71, since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakened manhood or nervous difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE in a plain sealed envelope that you can use in your own home. I am confident that you will thank me every day in your life after you have tested it for yourself.

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally.

"My son informs me," said Sir Augustus, "that you have allowed him to run a bill for three years. I have come, therefore"—

"Oh, pray, Sir Augustus," interrupted the tailor, bowing with politeness, "there is really not the slightest hurry, I assure you."

"I know that," returned the knight serenely, "and therefore I have come to tell you that in future I want to get my clothes from you too."—London Telegraph.

Neighborhood Notes

The prison binder plant at Jackson is turning out five tons of binder twine daily, and every pound of the twine is being sold. The plant was idle two weeks because of the lack of sisal and in consequence got away behind in their orders and are unable to quite keep up on them, but expect to catch up before the end of the season.

Although more twine was manufactured this year than ever before, Warden Stone says that 500,000 lbs. more could have been sold if they had prepared to make it. Just what the price of twine this year is to be has not been fixed by the board of control.

If the demand continues to increase for this twine it will be necessary to increase the facilities of the plant.

It has been said by one with a statewide knowledge of rural conditions that the farmers of Western Michigan are today the most wide-awake farmers in the commonwealth. To prove the statement the speaker said that there is more activity among the granges of the counties north of Grand Rapids and west of the center of the state than among the grangers of any other portion. Today there are 225 granges in western Michigan and each of these is a force working for progress, for advancement, for bigger and better things, for higher standards. Each grange in its own community is performing a social and educational function the results of which are of great value. The vitality and wide-awake-fulness of the grange in Western Michigan is demonstrated by the fact that the 1909 session of the state organization was held in this region and that 1910 sessions is also to be held in Western Michigan territory. Surely a region in which there is so much activity as regards rural matters is one in which it is worth while to live.

COMFORTING WORDS

Many A Charlevoix Household Will Find Them So.

To have the pains and aches of a bad back removed, to be entirely free from annoying, dangerous urinary disorders is enough to make any kidney sufferer grateful. To tell how this great change can be brought about will prove comforting words to hundreds of Charlevoix readers.

Nelson Burdo, 119 South B. St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "Some twenty-five years ago I went to Detroit for an operation but the physician at the hospital told me that he could not take my case on account of the disordered condition of my kidneys. He advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills and I did so. After I had taken the contents of four boxes, I was completely cured and I was then able to have the operation performed. The principal symptoms of my kidney trouble was a dull backache, sometimes accompanied by pains in my kidneys. I could hardly stoop or lift and whenever I caught cold, it settled on my kidneys, making me feel worse. The kidney secretions were highly colored and too frequent in passage and my whole system was run down. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me so greatly that I am only too glad to recommend them."

Mr. Burdo gave the above testimonial in August, 1906 and when interviewed in July 1907 he added: "You may continue to publish my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills, for the relief they gave me has been permanent. I have recommended this remedy to other kidney sufferers and in every case benefit has followed its use."

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS BY MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Neil, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER IV.

Nathaniel gave a start of horror.

"Slave hounds!" he breathed.

The councilor grinned and twisted his hands in enjoyment of his companion's surprise.

"We have the finest pack of bloodhounds north of Louisiana," he continued, so low that only Nathaniel could hear. "See! Isn't the earth worn smooth and hard about that post?"

Nathaniel looked and his blood grew hot.

"I have seen such things in the south," he said. "But not—for white men!"

The councilor caught him by the arm.

"They are coming!"

In the direction of the jail the crowd was separating. Men crushed back on each side, forming a narrow aisle, even the whispering of the women ceased. A moment later three men appeared in the opening between the spectators. One of these, who walked between the other two, was stripped to the waist. About each of his naked wrists was tied a leather thong and these thongs were held by the man's guards. The prisoner's face was livid; his hands were red with blood that dripped from his lacerated wrists; his eyes glared malignantly and his heaving chest showed that he had not been brought from the log prison without a struggle.

She Flung Herself in Front of MacDougall.

"Ah, it's Wittle first!" breathed the councilor. "It's he who said his wife should not wear short skirts."

At the edge of the circle the prisoner hesitated and the muscles in his arms and chest grew rigid. Those of the crowd nearest to him drew back. Then a sudden change swept over the man's features and he walked quickly to the stake and kneeled before it. The thongs about his wrist were tied to the straps of the cross-piece and the whipper took his position. As the first lash fell, a cry burst from the lips of the victim. When the whip descended again he was silent. A curious sensation of sickness crept over Nathaniel as he saw the red gashes thicken on the white flesh. Five times—six times—seven times the whip rose and fell and he could see the blood starting. In horror he turned his eyes away. Behind him a man groaned at the whiteness of his face and the involuntary trembling of his lips. Again and again he heard the lash fall upon the naked back. From near him there came the sobbing moan of a woman. A subdued movement, a sound as of murmuring wordless voices swept through the throng. A steady glitter filled the eyes of the man who had laughed at him—and he turned again to the stake. The man's back was dripping with blood, great red seams lay upon his shoulders and a single lash had cut his bowed neck. Another stroke, more fierce than the others, and MacDougall turned away from the figure at the post, breathing hard. The guards unfastened the victim's wrist-thongs and the man staggered to his feet. As he swayed down through the path that opened for him his crimson back shone in the sun.

"Great God!" gasped Nathaniel.

He turned to Obadiah and was startled by the appearance of the old man. The councilor's face was ghastly. His mouth twitched and his body trembled. Nathaniel took his arm sympathetically.

"Hadn't we better go, dad?" he whispered.

"No—no—no—not yet, Nat. It's—it's Neil now and I must see how the boy—stands it!"

It was but a short time before the guards returned. This time their prisoner walked free and erect. The thongs dangled from his wrists and he was a pace ahead of the two men who accompanied him. He was a young man. Nathaniel judged his age at twenty-five. He was a striking contrast to the man who had suffered first at the post. His face instead of betraying the former's pallor was flushed with excitement; his head was held high; not a sign of fear or hesitation shone in his eyes. As he glanced quickly around the circle of faces the flush grew deeper in his cheeks. He nodded and smiled at MacDougall and to that good and smile there was a meaning that sent a shiver to the whipmaster's heart. Then his eyes fell upon Obadiah and Nathaniel. He saw the councilor's hand resting upon the young captain's arm and a flash of understanding passed over his face. For an instant the eyes of the two young men met. The man at the post took half a step forward. His lips moved as if he was on the point of speaking, the defiant smile went out of his face, the flush faded in his cheeks. Then he turned quickly and held out his hands to the guards.

As the young man kneeled before the post Nathaniel heard a smothered sob at his side which he knew came from Obadiah.

"Come, dad," he said softly. "I can't stand this. Let's get away!"

He shoved the councilor back. The lash whistled through the air behind him. As it fell there came a piercing cry. It was a woman's voice, and with a snarl like that of a tortured animal the old man struck down Nathaniel's arm and clawed his way back to the edge of the line. On the opposite side there was a surging in the crowd and as MacDougall raised his whip a woman burst through.

"My God!" cried Nathaniel. "It's—"

He left the rest of the words unspoken. His veins leaped with fire. A single sweep of his powerful arms and he had forced himself through the innermost line of spectators. Within a dozen feet of him stood Strang's wife, her beautiful hair dishevelled, her face deadly white, her bosom heaving as if she had been running. In a moment her eyes had taken in the situation—the man at the stake, the upraised lash—and Nathaniel. With a sobbing, breathless cry, she flung herself in front of MacDougall and threw her arms around the kneeling man, her hair covering him in a glistening veil. For an instant her eyes were raised to Nathaniel and he saw in them that same agonized appeal that had called to him through the king's window. The striking muscles of his arms tightened like steel. One of the guards sprang forward and caught the girl roughly by the arm and attempted to drag her away. In his excitement he pulled her head back and her hair trailed in the dirt. The sight was maddening. From Nathaniel's throat there came a fierce cry and in a single leap he had cleared the distance to the guard and had driven his fist against the officer's head with the sickening force of a sledge hammer. The man fell without a groan. In another flash he had drawn his knife and severed the thongs that held the man at the stake. For a moment his was very near the girl's and he saw her lips form the glad cry which he did not wait to hear.

He turned like an enraged beast toward the circle of dumbfounded spectators and launched himself at the second guard. From behind him there sounded a shout and he caught the gleam of naked shoulders as the man who had been at the stake rushed to his side. Together they tore through the narrow rim of the crowd, striking at the faces which appeared before them, their terrific blows driving men right and left.

"This way, Neil!" shouted Nathaniel. "This way—to the ship!"

They raced up the slope that led from the town to the forest. Even the king's officer, palsied by the suddenness of the attack, had not followed. From a screened window in the king's building two men had witnessed the exciting scene near the jail. One of these men was Strang. The other was Arbor Croche. At another window a few feet away, hidden from their eyes by a high desk and masses of papers and books, Winsome Croche was crumpled up on the floor hardly daring to breathe through fear of being heard. From these windows they had seen the girl run from behind the jail; they had watched her struggle through the line of spectators, saw Nathaniel leap forward—saw the quick blow, the gleaming knife, and the escape. So suddenly had it all occurred that not a sound escaped the two astonished men. But as Nathaniel and Neil burst through the crowd and sped toward the forest Strang's great voice boomed forth like the rumble of a gun.

"Arbor Croche, overtake those men—and kill them!"

With a wild curse the chief of sheriffs dashed down the stairway, and as she heard him go the terror of Winsome's heart seemed to turn her blood cold. She knew what that command meant. She knew that her father would obey it. As the daughter of the chief of sheriffs more than one burning secret was hidden in her breast, more than one of those frightful daggers that had pricked at the soul of her mother until they had murdered her. And the chief of them all was this: That to Arbor Crocho the words of Strang were the words of God and that if the prophet said kill, he would kill. For a full minute she crouched in her concealment, stunned by the horror that had so quickly taken the place of the joy with which she had witnessed the escape. She heard Strang leave the window; heard his heavy steps in the outer room, heard the door close, and knew that he, too, was gone. She sprang to her feet and ran to the window at which the two men had stood. The chief of sheriffs was already at the jail. The crowd had begun to disperse. Men were swarming like ants up the long slope reaching to the forest. Three or four of the tenders were running and she knew that they were hot in pursuit of the fugitives. Others were following more slowly and among these she saw that there were women. As she looked there came a sound from the stair. She recognized the step. She recognized the voice that called her name a moment later and with a despairing cry she turned with out stretched arms to greet the girl for whom Nathaniel had interrupted the king's whipping.

CHAPTER V

The Mystery.

Hardly had Nathaniel fought his way through the thin crowd of startled spectators about the whipping post before the enormity of his offense in interrupting the king's justice dawned upon him. He was not sorry that he had responded to the mute appeal of the girl who had entered so strangely into his life. He rejoiced at the spirit that had moved him to action, that had fired his blood and put the strength of a giant in his arms; and his nerves tingled with an unreasoning joy that he had escaped all harriers which in cooler moments would have restrained him, and which fixed in his excited brain only the memory of the beautiful face that had sought his own in those crucial moments of its suffering. The girl had turned to him and to him alone among all those men. He had heard her voice, he had felt the soft sweep of her hair as he severed the prisoner's thongs, he had caught the flash of her eyes and the movement of her lips as he dashed himself into the crowd. And as he sped swiftly up the slope he considered himself amply repaid for all he had done. His blood was stirred as if by the fire of sharp wines; he was still in a tension of fighting excitement. Yet no sooner had he fought himself clear of the mob than his better judgment leaped into the ascendency. If danger had been lurking for him before it was doubly threatening now and he was sufficiently possessed of the spirit of self preservation to exult at the speed with which he was enabled to leave pursuit behind. A single glance over his shoulder assured him that the man whom he had saved from the prophet's wrath was close at his heels. His first impulse was to direct his flight toward Obadiah's cabin; his second to follow the path that led to his ship. At this hour some of his men would surely be awaiting him in a small boat and once aboard the Typhoon he could continue his campaign against the Mormon king with better chances of success than as a lone fugitive on the island. Besides, he knew what Casey would do at sundown.

At the top of the slope he stopped and waited for the other to come up to him.

"I've got a ship off there," he called, pointing inland. "Take a short cut for the point at the head of the island. There's a boat waiting for us!"

Neil came up panting. He was breathing so hard that for a moment he found it impossible to speak but in his eyes there was a look that told his unbounded gratitude. They were clear, fearless eyes, with the blue glint of steel in them and, as he held out his hands to Nathaniel, they were luminous with the joy of his deliverance.

"Thank you, Captain Plum!"

He spoke his companion's name with the assurance of one who had known it for a long time. "If they loose the dogs there will be no time for the ship," he added, with a suggestive hunch of his naked shoulders. "Follow me!"

There was no alarm in his voice and Nathaniel caught the flashing gleam of white teeth as Neil smiled grimly back at him, running in the lead. From the man's eyes the master of the Typhoon had sized up his companion as a fighter. The smile—daring, confident, and yet signaling their danger—assured him that he was right, and he followed close behind without question. A dozen rods up the path Neil turned into a dense thicket of briars and underbrush and for ten minutes they plunged through the pathless jungle. Now and then Nathaniel saw the three red stripes of the whipper's lash upon the bare shoulders of the man ahead and to these every step seemed to add new wounds made by a young aggressive pushing citizen of Alpena, whose attractive personality makes him friends wherever he goes, will be opposed by James L. Morrice of Harbor Springs.

Hon. W. J. Pearson, who made a record as a legislator who was always on the job, will have no opposition to his renomination for representative.

For sheriff William J. Weikel, of Charlevoix, Ford P. Robbins of Boyne Falls and Timothy A. Heaton of Boyne City are in the race and either would make a good official.

For clerk, County Clerk Payton, who is serving his first term and who has made a record as a courteous, efficient official, will be opposed by William J. Mears, of Boyne Falls, a well known citizen and former senator.

County Treasurer Lewis will have no opposition, which is a strong tribute to its popularity and the satisfaction he has given the people.

Register of Deeds Emrey, whose official record is a good one, will be opposed by William W. Boyle, a well known citizen of St. James, who makes his first bid for official favors.

For prosecuting attorney, A. Burton Nicholas, Jr., of East Jordan, a popular young attorney, Arthur G. Urquhart of Boyne City, present circuit court commissioner, and Dwight H. Fitch of East Jordan, who has practiced at the Charlevoix county bar for several years, are engaged in a lively contest.

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson of Charlevoix and Ernest A. Robinson of Boyne Falls, ask renomination to the offices of coroner and surveyor.

William R. Cowan of Charlevoix will have no opposition for drain commissioner.

The Charlevoix County Labor party and Socialists will both nominate by the primary method.

MOST DESTRUCTIVE STORM

In the Entire History of This Region

Barns, Burned Crops Destroyed and Rail and Wire Service Demoralized.

Last Wednesday night, Charlevoix county was visited by the most destructive storm in the history of the county, lasting nearly all night, causing an immense amount of damage to growing crops, by the high wind which accompanied a great electrical storm.

The Rasher cottage, near the Inn, was struck by lightning but the firemen were on hand and the damages will be small.

In Marion the large farm barn of William Dougherty was destroyed together with its contents, including a team of horses.

Robert West, near Horton Bay, was another heavy loser, his large barn and most of the contents being destroyed.

John Sprick and F. H. Clark of Banks both lost their barns and contents and the lightning struck in several other places in the county.

The Beaver attempted to make the trip Wednesday from the islands but was forced to put back, the passengers having a rough experience.

Train and wire service was utterly demoralized there being thirteen washouts between here and Grand Rapids and mails were delayed for over a day.

GROWING ENGLISH WALNUTS.

Found to Be Capable of Doing Well In Eastern Orchards.

English walnuts are a welcome addition to the winter dinner bill, and many of them are eaten in New England. Few are the New Englanders, however, who have ever seen English walnuts growing. A Boston Globe correspondent sent in two photographs of walnut trees of the English variety raised in this country, with a note from the raiser of the nuts, Norman Pomeroy of Lockport, N. Y.

"Few people realize," wrote Mr. Pomeroy, "that English walnuts can be grown extensively in the eastern part of the United States, and only by the merest accident was it found that they could be. My father, Norman Pomeroy, visited the Centennial exposition and, noticing a tree in the yard where he boarded at Philadelphia bearing nuts, gathered about a peck of them and brought them home with him. Some children found a small hole in the corner of the valise and got out all the nuts but seven. These he planted, and they sent up shoots that grew into fine large trees, which bore well. Some more trees were raised from this acclimated stock, and we now have a fine young orchard. Quite a number of our neighbors also raise walnuts from this stock."

RECESS

4:00 p. m. Closing business session.

The only plank in Ford P. Robbin's platform is strict enforcement of the law without fear or favor.

A Long Drop.

"Young man," said a seedy looking pedestrian at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street to another whose clothing indicated prosperity, "lend me a thousand dollars, will you?"

The man accosted stopped in amazement. After looking the other over for a minute he said, "What do you want of $1,000."

"I want to buy an airship," was the ready response.

"Well, I am sorry, but I haven't $1,000 with me."

"In that case," said the other in a pleading tone, "would you mind letting me have 10 cents on account?"

He got the dime.—New York American.

I have a full line of Cravenetts, Mackintoshes and Rubber Coats at very low prices. 35-1-f

LEAVE FOR MASSACHUSETTS

Five Charlevoix Fishing Boats Left Saturday Night.

Equipment is Valued at Fifteen Thousand Dollars.

Last Saturday night at 8 p. m. five of the fishing boats that have made fishing in Lake Michigan popular from around this city, left for Gloucester, Mass. The five boats carry away from this place an equipment valued at $15,000 and among the men are some of our best citizens.

The following are the names of the boats with, their captains and crew: The Mindora with Captain M. Shores, H. Tysver, Oliver Tysver, and Albert Arnel. The Prince Oluf with Captain J. Nordrum, J. Ackert, S. Hulverson and A. Le Point. The Eagle with Captain Ed Widerman, Grover Widerman and William Geer. The Weazle with Captain William Harting, Sr., William Harting, Jr., Arlie Harting and Valley Davis. The Hope with Captain C. Anderson, John Gennett, Henry Newbury and Jesse Hauhn.

The boats go by the way of Buffalo, down Erie Canal to New York and from there they will go down the coast to Gloucester where they will remain permanently. The families of the members of the crew and captains will follow shortly. Fishing with gillnets will be their occupation the same as on the lakes here.

The loss of this industry is greatly felt by everyone and their many friends together with the Courier extend best wishes for their success.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER OF SCHOOLS

Will be Nominated at Spring Convention Says Attorney General.

Attorney General Kuhn states in an opinion, that as no provision is contained in the primary election law providing for the nomination of commissioners of schools in the counties where those officers are elected in the spring, that the nominations could not be made in the convention this fall, although it was believed a spring convention could be avoided if this was done.

To those who believed this the Attorney General said that delegates will have to be chosen next spring to a state convention to nominate a justice of the supreme court, and advised that the commissioner be nominated at the time the delegates are secured.

In another opinion he holds that the county clerks or election commissioners have no authority to refuse to place on the primary ballot as candidate for prosecuting attorney, a citizen who has never been admitted to the bar, asserting that it is not the duty of the election officials to pass upon the qualifications of a candidate.

MONDAY SEPTEMBER 19

Date for Re-Opening of the Charlevoix Public Schools.

Some of the Many Advantages of the Charlevoix County Normal.

Do not allow your boys and girls to go through the school year of 1910-11 handicapped by the disadvantage of not getting started with their grades the first day. School begins Monday Sept. 19. All pupils should be on hand.

The Superintendent will be in the office of the high school afternoons, except Saturdays, and will be glad to meet parents and friends of the school. Let the Supt. and teachers feel that you are interested in the welfare of your children and are willing to cooperate with them in giving them the best possible training. Remember that the boys and girls are under the influence of the teachers for only five hours of the day, and under home influence the rest of the day. Much better results can be obtained if friendly relations are at all times maintained between parents and teachers. Avoid misunderstandings by talking things over with the teachers.

Under the new tuition law, 8th grade graduates of rural schools may have their tuition paid by their district board to any one of the three nearest high schools. We shall be glad to welcome our share of those students. The Superintendent will be glad to correspond with any who may be planning to come to Charlevoix for the high school course.

There are some openings for students to work for their board. Rooms for light housekeeping may be had at reasonable rates, and students may board themselves.

The tuition for the high school is two dollars per month.

The Charlevoix County Normal

Some of the best teachers of Charlevoix and adjoining counties are numbered among the alumni of the Charlevoix County Normal.

The County Normal system of Michigan has passed beyond the experimental stage and is doing excellent service for the betterment of rural school conditions.

The inexperienced teacher with County Normal training can go into the rural schools with a good deal of confidence and self-possession that otherwise would be impossible.

A one year's course is offered including the study of Psychology, Public School Methods, Elementary Agriculture, Nature Study, Domestic Science, Reviews and Practice Teaching, under the supervision of a critic teacher. This course thoroughly prepares one to in the rural schools and upon its completion the student is granted a certificate valid in the rural schools of the county for a period of three years.

During the year the Normal Class take excursions in the country visiting rural schools and getting in touch with rural school problems.

The course in elementary agriculture is made as practical as possible with the aid of government bulletins, school gardens, and attendance at grange meetings and farmer institutes.

Students will be admitted to the County Normal if they have completed the work of the tenth grade or its equivalent, or have taught successfully in the rural schools of the county.

Board and room may be had at $3 to $4 per week. Some members of previous classes have found it quite satisfactory to board themselves. Some may be able to work for all or part of their board.

Students expecting to attend the Normal are requested to bring any texts they may have on the subjects outlined in the course.

The County Normal begins the same time as the public schools Sept. 19. Anyone wishing information may write to Supt. I. M. DeVoe, Charlevoix, Mich.

The office of Prosecuting Attorney is one of the most important offices in the County. 33-t-1

MUSSELMAN TOMORROW

Amos S. Musselman, the Grand Rapids candidate for Governor, will address the people of Charlevoix and vicinity, at the Bank Hall tomorrow, Thursday, afternoon at three o'clock. Mr. Musselman is the last candidate to visit us and everybody is invited to turn out and hear a business man's ideas on how he would govern the state.

New Way of Catching African Lions

From the Jungle comes the statement that the latest improved way of capturing lions is to drive them into an enclosure composed of American Fence—and there's no getting out of that.

Be that as it may—it's certain that the American farmer has found the American Fence by far the best means of holding his stock—from the wildest bull to the most persistent smaller animal.

Most economical, too—because its simple, strong construction and "live wire" steel make it hold its place through all kinds of weather for years and years.

Together with the famous American Fences we are distributors for the American Bale Ties, Single Loop and Cross Head.

the thorns. As they came out upon an old roadway the captain stripped off his coat and Neil thrust himself into it as they ran.

Even in these first minutes of their flight Nathaniel was thrilled by another thought than that of the peril behind them. Whom had he saved? Who was this clear-eyed young fellow for whom the girl had so openly sacrificed herself at the whipping post, about whom she had thrown her arms and covered with the protection of her glorious hair? With his joy at having served her there was mingled a chilling doubt as these questions formed themselves in his mind. Obadiah's vague suggestions, the scene in the king's room, the night visits of the girl to the councilor's cabin—and last of all this incident at the jail flashed upon him now with another meaning, with a significance that slowly cooled the enthusiasm in his veins. He was sure that he was near the solution of the mysterious events in which he had become involved, and yet this knowledge brought with it something of apprehension, something which made him anticipate and yet dread the moment when the fugitive ahead would stop in his flight, and he might ask him those questions which would at least relieve him of his burden of doubt. They had traveled a mile through forest unbroken by path or road when Neil halted on the edge of a little stream that ran into a swamp. Pointing into the tangled fen with a confident smile he plunged to his waist in the water and waded slowly through the slough into the gloom of the denseat alder. A few minutes later he turned in to the shore and the soft hog gave place to firm ground. Before Nathaniel had cleared the stream he saw his companion drop to his knees beside a fallen log and when he came up to him he was unwrapping a piece of canvas from about a gun. With a warning gesture he rose to his feet and for twenty seconds the men stood and listened. No sound came to them but the chirp of a startled squirrel and the barking of a dog in the direction of St. James.

"They haven't turned out the dogs yet," said Neil, holding a hand against his heaving chest. "If they do they can't reach us through that slough." He leaned his rifle against the log and again thrusting an arm into the place where it had been concealed drew forth a small box.

"Powder and ball—and grub!" he laughed. "You see I am a sort of revolutionist and have my hiding places. Tomorrow—I will be a martyr." He spoke as quietly as though his words but carried a careless jest.

"A martyr?" laughed Nathaniel, looking down into the smiling, sweating face.

"Yes, tomorrow I shall kill Strang."

There was no excitement in Neil's voice as he stood erect. The smile did not leave his lips. But in his eyes there shone that which neither words nor smiling lips revealed, a reckless, blazing fury hidden deep in them—so deep that Nathaniel stared to assure himself what it was. The other saw the doubt in his face.

"Tomorrow I shall kill Strang," he repeated. "I shall kill him with this gun from under the window of his house through which you saw Marion."

"Marion!" exclaimed Nathaniel. "Marion—" He leaned forward eagerly, questioning. "Tell me—"

"My sister, Captain Plum!"

It seemed to Nathaniel that every fiber in his body was stretched to the breaking point. He reached out, dazed by what he had heard and with both hands seized Neil's arm.

"My Sister, Captain Plum."

"Your sister—who came to you at the whipping post?"

"That was Marion."

"And—Strang's wife!"

"No!" cried Neil. "No—not his wife!" He drew back from Nathaniel's touch as if the question had stabbed him to the heart. The passion that had slumbered in his eyes burst into savage flame and his face became suddenly terrible to look upon. There was hatred there such as Nathaniel had never seen; a ferocious, pitiless hatred that sent a shuddering thrill through him as he stood before it. After a moment the clenched fist that had risen above Neil's head dropped to his side. Half apologetically he held out his hand to his companion.

"Captain Plum, we've got a lot to thank you for, Marion and I," he said, a tremble of the passing emotion in his voice. "Obadiah told Marion that help might come to us through you and Marion brought the word to me at the jail last night—after she had seen you at the window. The old councilor kept his word! You have saved her!"

"Saved her!" gasped Nathaniel. "From what? How?" A hundred questions seemed leaping from his heart to his lips.

"From Strang. Good God, don't you understand? I tell you that I am going to kill Strang!"

Neil stood as though appalled by his companion's incomprehension. "I am going to kill Strang, I tell you!" he cried again, the fire burning deeper through the sweat of his cheeks.

Nathaniel's bewilderment still shone in his face.

"She is not Strang's wife," he spoke softly, as if to himself. "And she is not—" His face flushed as he nearly spoke the words. "Obadiah lied!" He looked squarely into Neil's eyes. "No, I don't understand you. The councilor said that she—that Marion was Strang's wife. He told me nothing more than that, nothing of her trouble, nothing about you. Until this moment I have been completely mystified. Only her eyes led me to do—what I did at the jail."

Neil gazed at him in astonishment. "Obadiah told—you—nothing?" he asked incredulously.

"Not a word about you or Marion except that Marion was the king's seventh wife. But he hinted at many things and kept me on the trail, always expecting, always watching, and yet every hour was one of mystery. I am in the darkest of it at this instant. What does it all mean? Why are you going to kill Strang? Why—"

Neil interrupted him with a cry so poignant in its wretchedness that the last question died upon his lips.

"I thought that the councilor had told you all," he said. "I thought you knew." The disappointment in his voice was almost despair. "Then—it was only accidentally—you helped us?"

"Only accidentally that I helped you—yes! But Marion—" Nathaniel crushed Neil's hand in both his own and his eyes betrayed more than he would have said. "I've got an armed ship and a dozen men out there and if I can help Marion by blowing up St. James—I'll do it!"

For a time only the tense breathing of the two broke the silence of their lips. They looked into each other's face, Nathaniel with all the eagerness of the passion with which Marion had stirred his soul, Neil half doubting, as if he were trying to find in this man's eyes the friendship which he had not questioned a few minutes before.

"Obadiah told you nothing?" he asked again, as if still unbelieving.

"Nothing."

"And you have not seen Marion—to talk with her?"

"No."

Nathaniel had dropped his companion's hand, and now Neil walked to the log and sat down with his face turned in the direction from which their pursuers must come if they entered the swamp.

Suddenly the memory of Obadiah's note shot into Nathaniel's head, the councilor's admonition, his allusion to a visitor. With this memory there recurred to him Obadiah's words at the temple, "If you had remained at the cabin, Nat, you would have known that I was your friend. She would have come to you, but now—it is impossible." For the first time the truth began to dawn upon him. He went and sat down beside Neil.

"I am beginning to understand—a little," he said. "Obadiah had planned that I should meet Marion, but I was a fool and spoiled his scheme. If I had done as he told me I should have seen her this morning."

In a few words he reviewed the events of the preceding evening and of that morning—of his coming to the island, his meeting with Obadiah, and of the singular way in which he had become interested in Marion. He omitted the oaths but told of Winnsome's warning and of his interview with the Mormon king. When he spoke of the girl as he had seen her through the king's window, and of her appealing face turned toward him at the jail, his voice trembled with an excitement that deepened the flush in Neil's cheeks.

"Captain Plum, I thank God that you like Marion," he said simply. "After I kill Strang will you help her?"

"Yes."

"You are willing to risk—"

"My life—my men—my ship!"

Nathaniel spoke like one to whom there had been suddenly opened the portals to a great joy. He sprang to his feet and stood before Neil, his whole being throbbing with the emotions which had been awakened within him.

"Good God, why don't you tell me what her peril is?" he cried, no longer restraining himself. "Why are you going to kill Strang? Has he—has he—" His face flushed with the question which he dared not finish.

"No—not that!" interrupted Neil. "He has never laid a hand on Marion. She hates him as she hates the snakes in this swamp. And yet—next Sunday she is to become his seventh wife!"

Nathaniel started as if he had been threatened by a blow.

"You mean—he is forcing her into his harem?" he asked.

"No, he can not do that!" exclaimed Neil, the hatred bursting out anew in his face. "He can not force her into martying him, and yet—" He flung his arms above his head in sudden passionate despair. "As there is a God in heaven I would give 10 years of my life for the secret of the prophet's power over Marion!" he groaned. "Three months ago her hatred of him was terrible. She loathed the sight of him. I have seen her shiver at the sound of his voice. When he asked her to become his wife she refused him in words that I had believed no person in the kingdom would have dared to use. Then—less than a month ago—the change came, and one day she told me that she had made up her mind to become Strang's wife. From that day her heart was broken. I was dumbfounded. I raged and cursed and even threatened. Often I accused her of a shameful thing and though I implored her forgiveness a thousand times I know that she weeps over my brutal words still. But nothing could change her. On my knees I have pleaded with her, and once she flung her arms round my shoulders and said, 'Neil, I can not tell you why I am marrying Strang. But I must.' I went to Strang and demanded an explanation; I told him that my sister hated him, that the sight of his face and the sound of his voice filled her with abhorrence, but he only laughed at me and asked me why I objected to becoming the brother-in-law of a prophet. Day by day I have seen Marion's soul dying within her. Some terrible secret is gnawing at her heart, robbing her of the very life which a few weeks ago made her the most beautiful thing on this island; some dreadful influence is shadowing her every step, and as the day draws near when she is to join the king's harem I see in her eyes at times a look that frightens me. There is only one salvation. Tomorrow I shall kill Strang!"

"And then?"

Neil shrugged his shoulders.

Literary Notes

The Spirit of Rochester.

"Any man who has ever attended a convention in Rochester—and it is a city given to conventions—goes away wishing he could bring up his children in Rochester," says Anna Steese Richardson in the Woman's Home Companion for September.

"Any woman, not wholly given over to the most superficial form of social existence, comes away from that town wishing she could engage in the sort of work Rochester women are doing.

"And yet Rochester is no Utopia. It is a city of tremendous commercial and manufacturing interests. Out of its population of two hundred and ten thousand, 45,000 men and women are employed in its twelve hundred factories which represent an annual output of one hundred million dollars' worth of goods. The annual pay-roll of those employed in the city's various factories is $30,635,117, which means an income of $127.60 per capita. And twenty thousand of its women and girls work for eight dollars a week or less. Nothing remarkable you see, about the scale of wages.

"Moreover, you always connect huge manufacturing interests with smokestacks, hideous outlooks, a plethora of work and a shortage in recreations. And right here Rochester differs from almost any other manufacturing city. It has the smoke-stacks without the hideous outlook and the long hours of work balanced by well-planned hours of recreation. Rochester people work, but they think of something besides work. Mostly they think of Rochester, its needs and its advantages, its planned improvements and its present beauties; but they seem to think very little of themselves as individuals, above all things as being overworked and underpaid. This broad outlook, this unselfish viewpoint, express the Rochester spirit."

Went the Limit.

One night as Inspector McCafferty, then one of Byrnes' detectives, was entering Lyons' old eating house in the Bowery he was accosted by a bleary eyed tramp, who exclaimed:

"For God's sake, mister, put me against the trough. I ain't eat nuthin' fer three days."

He looked it, so McCafferty took him in and told a waiter to give him a full dinner. When McCafferty had finished his dinner and walked out he found the tramp on the sidewalk and was the recipient of profuse thanks.

"Well," remarked the detective, "I'm glad you got all the dinner you want."

"I didn't, boss," corrected the hobo, "but I had all I could eat."—New York Herald.

Primary Election

Notice is hereby given that a general primary election will be held in each precinct of the county of Charlevoix, state of Michigan at the usual polling places on for the purpose of nominating by direct vote candidates by each of the several political parties for the following offices, viz.:

NATIONAL: One candidate for United States senator; one candidate for representative in congress from the congressional district of which said voting precinct forms a part.

STATE: One candidate for governor; and one candidate for lieutenant-governor.

LEGISLATIVE: One candidate for senator in the state legislature for the senatorial district of which said voting precinct forms a part; one candidate for representative in the state legislature for the representative district of which said voting precinct forms a part.

COUNTY: One candidate for each of the following county offices, viz.: Sheriff, clerk, treasurer, register of deeds, prosecuting attorney, surveyor, drain commissioner; also one candidate for circuit court commissioner and two candidates for coroner.

There shall also be elected as many primary election delegates to the county conventions of the several political parties as said precincts or townships are entitled to under the call of the county committees of said political parties, which number will be indicated by the number of blank lines printed on the official primary ballots used at said election under the heading, "Delegates to County Conventions." The board of primary election inspectors will furnish delegates with credentials entitling them to seats in the county conventions, except where there is more than one precinct in the township and the county committee require the election of delegates from the township as a whole, such delegates must be admitted without credentials.

RELATIVE TO ENROLMENT

The enrollment for this election was held April 1, 1910, and any qualified elector in any election precinct in this state, who failed to have his name enrolled on enrollment day by reason of sickness or unavoidable absence from the election precinct, and who is a qualified elector in said precinct on primary election day, or any person who may have become twenty-one years of age or a qualified elector after enrollment day, may have his name enrolled by the board of primary election inspectors on any primary election day upon making oath as provided in the general election law relative to the registration of electors on election days; or any person who was duly enrolled in the manner provided by law, but who has changed his residence to any election precinct other than that in which he was enrolled, may be enrolled in the new precinct and may vote therein: Provided, that he has resided in the election precinct in which he seeks to be enrolled for a period of twenty days and that he obtained from a member of the enrollment board of the election precinct in which he formerly resided, a certificate stating that he was duly enrolled in such precinct and that he is entitled to enrollment in the new precinct. In the absence of such certificate, if he can satisfy the said enrollment board of primary election inspectors upon making oath to such facts, according to the provisions of the general election law relative to registration of electors on election day, he shall be entitled to enrollment and permitted to vote following such enrollment.

No person can vote at any primary election whose name is not enrolled.

An enrolled voter who has changed his party affiliation can be re-enrolled on enrollment day only.

THE POLLS of said election will open at 7 o'clock in the forenoon and will remain open until five o'clock in the afternoon of said day of election, unless the board of primary election inspectors shall in their discretion adjourn the polls at 12 o'clock noon, for one hour, and provided, that in cities of 5,000 population or over, the polls shall be kept open until seven p. m. standard time and provided further, that in cities of less than 5,000 population as directed by the city common council and in townships when directed by the township board, the polls of said primary election shall be kept open until six o'clock p. m. standard time.

Priest, The Photographer

Courier Grange Column

Editor COURIER:—Allow an outsider, but not a stranger, to express his thanks and give his impressions of Michigan's most picturesque county; to express his thanks for the kindness always shown him.

Charlevoix county is the best organized grange county in the state, judged by what the grange organization is accomplishing in the uplift of home, school and citizen, the three jewels of a county's life. The members of the granges in Charlevoix county welcome and make their grange lecturers feel at home. They possess the spirit of friendliness, the good cheer, the make-all-to-home spirit with the total absence of the cold-storage spirit that makes a polar bear preferable to some human beings.

The Charlevoix grangers are working out the problem of a great social uplift by enlisting and entertaining the coming citizens, the boys and girls of today, and when the granges and the citizens of the county install a corn growing contest for the boys of the county, a bread-making contest for the girls and make an exhibition day of these at the county fair, with adequate prizes, another great uplift will be accomplished.

Why should not Charlevoix county be a leader in home, school and agricultural education?

Nature has made the county the most picturesque, most beautiful, rich in soil, unrivaled in resort comforts of any county in Michigan. Why should not the citizens of the county respond to their great teacher, nature, and create a social, educational, moral influence, environment, as beautiful as the natural surroundings?

Charlevoix county, because of her water front, lakes and streams, is the wetest county in Michigan and because of strict enforcement of county prohibition, the dryest county. What a combination is this, the most picturesque, the most resort, the most beautiful, the most grange, the most kindly, the wetest, the dryest, rich in soil, rich in citizenship, prolific in children. What a future awaits her.

D. E. MCCLURE.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

DON'T FAIL TO ATTEND

Secretary A. B. Nicholas, Jr. of Agricultural Society

Issues Strong Appeal for a Great Exhibit and a Large Attendance.

The Charlevoix County Agricultural Society announces its twenty-sixth annual fair, to be held at East Jordan, September 13, 14, and 15, in full confidence that the previous efforts to give the public a truly great exposition of the agricultural and industrial products of the county have been appreciated and that the coming fair will bring a much larger attendance and much greater interest than any of its predecessors. The development of all the interests that are allied to the farm, the home, and the country estate is the object for which the fair was established.

The directors have no other object in view. Not as a source of gain, but as a means of uplifting and promoting agriculture, is their hope for the future of this fair.

To this end we ask the co-operation of all the people, for as long as people shall dwell upon the earth, so long will the soil be called upon to supply the things most needed by man.

Charlevoix county with its wealth of manufactures, has also great wealth in its soil. No county in this state has richer soil than is found in its valleys, while its hill slopes hold great possibilities for the fruit growers.

The fair will endeavor to provide both instruction and amusement for the people. It invites contributions from the herd and flock, the poultry yard, the farm, garden and orchard, the flower garden and green house, art, needle work, and domestic products, farm machinery and pet stock. They will pass under the eye of competent judges and premiums in money will be awarded the most meritorious.

We propose that a premium awarded at this fair shall mean something of value to the exhibitor, and to that end all awards will be made solely on the merits of the articles exhibited.

To the visitors we offer an inspection of the best the county produces, with the feeling that you will go from this fair with a sense of patriotism and pride in your county that you have never before known.

THEATRICAL

Manager Campbell demonstrated that he is determined to give Charlevoix theatre goers the best attractions possible when he booked "Rosalind at Redgate," which appeared Tuesday night. The work of every member of the company was beyond criticism, while the scenic effects bore out the claim of the prettiest play of the century.

Wm. M. Fletcher, that popular playwright, has handed to the theatrical going public a long wanted play "The Vulture." Several producing managers bid high for it but "the plum" fell to William F. Mann, who has spared no expense in casting, staging and producing it. Bright, witty in construction and void of vulgarity, with a strong heart interest that holds until the finish and sends one away with a refreshing feeling of having witnessed a real play with a real cast. It comes to Charlevoix, at the opera house for your approval on Wednesday, September 7th. Prices, 25c, 35c, 50c, 75c and $1.00.

Auto Chains Ruinous to Roads.

Anti-skidding chains on automobiles are tearing county roads to pieces, according to a county road supervisor in New Jersey, who threatens to invoke the law to cause the arrest of the users of the chains. According to the supervisor, use of the chains was condoned during the winter, when frozen road were dangerous at turns, but he claims that the practice has been continued into the spring until drastic measures must be taken to save the roads from destruction.

Get Busy on the Roads Now.

A considerable amount of money is annually expended on roads for which adequate return is not received by reason that the work is not done at the proper season. There is a proper time for building new or rebuilding old earth roads just as much as there is a proper time for doing farm work, and that time is in the spring, as the ground settles after the frost has left it.

Improved Roads Improve Schools.

Good roads are greater incentives for progress in the rural community than any other factor. Without good roads it is impossible to improve the public schools, to erect churches and to build up the farm by rotation, diversified and intensified farming.

Someone has written the following definition of education: "The proper education of today is a preparation for the duties and responsibilities of life. Our students must, therefore, come out of school with the elements of high character, with a vigorous, healthy body, and mind, able to put both hand and brain to work, to enter readily into sympathetic cooperation with the institutions of our country and time. Practical accomplishments are essential to a good education, though they are not the whole of it. While training to the full the faculties of the individual, including his mechanical powers, and fitting him to act his part as a citizen, a home builder and a bread winner, we must not fail to set a high value on the finest products of the human mind and to give fair introduction to the fields of art and philosophy."

The ordinary high school cannot prepare for the professions, neither can it give special and technical preparation for the many ordinary lines of work. The successful man must be able to grow in his profession or special line of work, and the high school must furnish the soil from which this growth must spring.

The course of study is planned to meet the requirements of those wishing to enter the college or university for special preparation in any lines of work, and to lay general educational foundations for the ordinary walks of life. Below is an outline of the course of study of the Charlevoix high school.

Three years of English, two years of Mathematics including Algebra and Plane Geometry, two years of Science including Ancient and American history are required of all students. The student must select sufficient number of additional subjects to make sixteen units required for graduation.

Any one planning to enter college or university should take at least two years of Language and omit any of the commercial subjects as these are not accepted for entrance units.

Those students having fourteen credits may enter the County Normal and upon completion of the course will be granted a high school diploma in connection with their county Normal diploma. This will enable a high school student to earn a high school diploma and County Normal certificate in four years.

ALFALFA GROWING

Colon Lillie Gives Valuable Information on Crop.

Taken From His Wide Experience and General Observation.

Colon C. Lillie, Michigan Dairy and Food Commissioner, in a recent issue of the Michigan Farmer, makes the following reply to a farmer, who desires information about alfalfa growing. As alfalfa promises much in the way of developing Western Michigan, it is believed that the suggestions and information will be of interest to many.

"I am inclined to believe from my experience and my observation that if weather conditions are right, alfalfa will do well if sown in the spring, in the heat of summer or in the fall. The majority of people, perhaps, will agree that just before midsummer is probably the best time on the average. Some however have had splendid success sowing in August and still others by sowing early in the spring. If weather conditions, especially moisture, are favorable, a good catch it is believed can be secured at any of these times. On the other hand, if weather conditions are not favorable, then it is difficult to get a catch at any time.

A year ago I sowed my first alfalfa. I had intended to sow it in June but I was not ready and weather conditions were not favorable in July. The first rain that came in August, we sowed the alfalfa and got a fine stand. It came up thick and even and stood the winter well. But it was injured this spring by the frost or unfavorable weather conditions and has not amounted to much this summer. Last spring I seeded a field to alfalfa with oats, sowing the very first of April, seeding alfalfa at the rate of twenty pounds per acre. I have a splendid catch. It stands thick and even over the entire field I shall seed another field next spring with oats. I also mixed alfalfa with the clover seed and sowed it on the wheat in March, and I have evidence that alfalfa will grow sown under these conditions. Next spring I intend to mix a larger per cent of alfalfa seed with the clover.

With regards to inoculation of the soil by using the soil from an old alfalfa field, my understanding is that this is the best possible way of inoculation. The top soil is what you want. That portion of the soils which is turned over with the plow. You get it by plowing the field and taking the furrow. Or you can get it by going into the field anywhere the alfalfa grows thick and rank, and simply spading up the ground, taking this soil and screening it to get out the vegetable matter, the roots and the stones, etc., so that it can be sown with a drill. If your alfalfa field is two years old, it undoubtedly has bacteria nodules on the roots. You can very readily see these by carefully taking up the plant and looking at the roots. This soil will contain sufficient bacteria to inoculate the new seeding. After the soil is screened, you can sow it with a fertilizer drill, or you can sow it by hand as you would land plaster, or ashes and it ought to be harrowed into the ground as soon as possible because if it is left on top of the ground and the weather is bright and sunshiny, may of the bacteria will be killed by the direct rays of the sun.

THEY COME TO STAY

Farmers Who Are Emigranting to This Region.

As Result of Work of West Michigan Development Bureau.

The value of the work of the Western Michigan Development bureau is to a great extent measured by its success in keeping the farmers of the region it covers satisfied with the conditions, showing them the advantages of the country, rather than inducing other farmers to come into the region," said H. J. Gray of the passenger department of the Pere Marquette this morning. "That they are doing this is evident from the fact that but about one-third as many emigrants left this section during the reduction of rates to the west, as offered by the great transcontinental lines, this showing a direct testimonial to the ability of the bureau to bring out the best the country holds in all lines of agriculture and fruit raising.

"Mr. Gray went on to state that the railroads are bringing in many people from the states south of Michigan, who are settling on farms in this region, and that to the south of this county. He said that the people are brought in large parties from Chicago, who are buying from 20 to 80 acre tracts, making the best sort of people for the up-building of the country, making it into a substantial farming region. The bi-monthly rates given to the people outside of Michigan has had a tendency to increase the influx of farmers to a great extent. They come all during the year, not limiting their visits to the spring or fall, but come in the middle of the season or any time when they can conveniently do so.

We have estimated by interviewing the real estate dealers along the road, that about 90 per cent of these land lookers eventually locate here. When it is estimated that fully 90 per cent of the people who first come to this region are heads of families, it can be seen that the influx of people are very great. We supply a week end rate and the farmers, dairymen and others who have their families in Chicago, and their farms in the region of Watervilet, St. Joe and other points to the south, which assists them greatly. We are doing our best to help the bureau in its work, and whatever can be done to aid the exhibit at Chicago and helping people to get there, will not be slighted in the least by our road. It is the intention of the officers of the Pere Marquette, who are in the city today, to interest the supervisors, not only of this county but all those in the bureau, to aiding the exhibits, and also to create a disposition to attend the big fair to be held in Chicago. The officials met this afternoon with the directors of the bureau, and went over the possibilities offered by the organizations.—Traverse City Record.

COMPANY IS EXPECTED

At the Next Regular Meeting of the Local W. C. T. U.

The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U., which according to program would be on Friday of this week, has been postponed until the following Tuesday, September 13th. On that date the meeting will be held at 2:30 o'clock in the parlors of the Congregational church.

After devotionals and a short business session an interesting program will be given on the subject of "Child Labor" under the leadership of Mrs. P. D. Campbell and Mrs. Charles Arnold.

The District and County Presidents and white ribbon sisters from Petoskey, East Jordan, and Bellaire are expected to visit the Union that day. There will be music and a discussion on the topic, also short talks by the visiting friends. At 5 o'clock a supper will be served to the members and invited guests. All members are requested to be present.

EVERYBODY WANTED

To Help Swell the Crowd at County Fair

Strong Race Program Arranged for Three Day's Races—Granges Hustling.

Secretary Nicholas informs us that everything is coming along in line shape for the county fair, at East Jordan, next week, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Every day will be a big day and the races will surpass anything ever before offered in northern Michigan speed contests. Last week the speed committee met at East Jordan and arranged the following schedule of races which will last three days this year instead of two as heretofore:

	Purse
Wednesday, Sept. 11—
Novelty race—1-2 mile walk, 1-2 mile trot, 1-2 mile go-as-you-please	$25 00
Farmer's free for all, trot or pace	25 00
2:40 Class, trot or pace	100 00
Thursday, Sept. 15—
2:30 Class, trot or pace, Charlevoix county horses only	50 00
2:10 Class, trot or pace	100 00
2:25 Class, trot or pace	150 00
1-2 mile running race	50 00
Friday, Sept. 16—
2:30 Class, trot or pace	100 00
Free for all trot or pace	250 00
1-2 mile running race	50 00

The granges throughout the county have been busily at work the past few months collecting exhibits and the showing of the products of Charlevoix county farms, dairys, and farm house-holds will be such as will make us all proud of our county.

For twenty-six years the Charlevoix County Agricultural society has held its annual fair, each year's exhibit being better than the last and the history of the fair has been a record of the agricultural development of the county. The officers, particularly the secretary upon whom the burden of the labor falls, have been busy during the entire year planning and working for its success, and we owe it to these officials to all of us lend a hand in making the fair a success. If we have anything to exhibit, take it to the fair, as a premium awarded at the Charlevoix county fair has a real value to it's possessors. If we have anything to exhibit we can all attend and a record breaking crowd will not only bring to the treasury the needed funds and show appreciation of the work of the official but will spur on the exhibitors to make still greater efforts to produce the best for next year's fair.

C. C. Otis of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada is visiting our city this week in the interest of his company and has already impressed many of our leading citizens with the stability and strength of the Sun Life. The fact that no one has ever lost a dollar deposited in a Canadian bank or in a Canadian Life Insurance Company is in itself a sufficient evidence of the conservative manner in which Canadian financial institutions are managed. The Sun Life of Canada wrote more policies in Michigan last year than the three great New York companies combined. It has been our pleasure to know Mr. Otis personally for several years and we take pleasure in commending both him and his company to the favorable consideration of our readers. 30tf

TOWNSEND WINS BY BIG MAJORITY

Chase S. Osborn Probably Nominated for Governor.

KELLEY HIGHEST IN THIS COUNTY

Dodds for Congress and Scott for State Senator.

Robbins, for Sheriff; Fitch, Prosecuting Attorney; Emrey, Register and Payton for County Clerk.

The first primary, for county officers, ever held in Charlevoix county, passed off in a manner which demonstrated that the people of Charlevoix county realized the responsibility resting upon them and exercised care in casting their ballots.

During the evening until nearly morning, the COURIER office and Pine Lake Club rooms were thronged with candidates and their friends and as the returns from the different precincts came in first one leading and then the other, the truth was brought home that the people and not the bosses were in the saddle.

The spectacular features of the election, in this county, was the remarkable run made by Mr. Musselman and the closeness of the contest between the candidates for sheriff and prosecuting attorney. Everybody accepts the verdict of the people in a good natured manner and are ready to testify that the people did a good job in the splendid Republican ticket which they nominated.

In the state Hon. Charles E. Townsend is named for United States senator over Burrows by over 25,000. Chase S. Osborn is probably nominated for governor by from five to fifteen thousand over his nearest competior. Kelley and Musselman running neck and neck. Scott wins over Morrice for state senator by large majority. Congressman Gardner is defeated by J. M. C. Smith, insurgent, while Wikena and McMorran are being hard pressed.

The tabular statement for Charlevoix county tells the story of the day.

Mrs. Haskens, Mrs. Dice and Mrs. Florence Seymour of Charlevoix, and Blanch Dice of South Bend, Indiana, visited Mrs. Charles Greely last week.

Norwood was one of the little towns that was honored by a call from Amos Musselman of Grand Rapids and his talk was enjoyed by a goodly number.

The politicians in town last week were Bert Nicholas of East Jordan, Mr. Urquhart of Boyne City, Ford Robbins of Boyne Falls, and Romeo Emery of the county seat. Those in company with the politicians were Burt Burnett, William Cowen of Charlevoix and Mr. Bibby of Boyne City.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain vim, strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men, which is the result of study since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71. Since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakness of manhood or any difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE in a plain sealed envelope that you can use in your own home. I am confident that you will thank me every day in your life after you have tested it for yourself.

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally.

James McCann went to Mackinac Island Saturday, to attend the funeral of his cousin, Mr. Donnelly.

J. Burke and H. Hortwig are building a general blacksmithing and repair shop. This is what the village needed.

A sad accident occurred here Saturday noon of last week, while the elder members of the family of Bernard McCafferty were at dinner, Willie, the seven year old son of Mr. McCafferty, in some way got possession of his older brother's twenty-two rifle, informing his sister, age ten, who was with him, that he would shoot the cat for killing his mother's chickens, accordingly started out in search of the animal. Coming upon the object of his search near the barn he opened fire at the same moment his sister rushed in and received the shot intended for the cat. The bullet entered her back inflicting a dangerous wound. The doctor thinks he can save her life.

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

A band of gypsies made things interesting for Buckley citizens. A gypsy woman was arrested charged with stealing $15. She gave up the money but was fined $15. The tribe attempted her liberation during the trial, several wagon loads of them coming to town armed with guns and other weapons. Prompt actions on the part of the citizens frustrated this attempt, men of the town getting out all the firearms they could lay their hands on and ordering the band to go ten miles out of the city. On the way out the gypsies robbed a widow of money, food and other things, also robbing another woman of a lot of baked goods. The Wexford county sheriff captured the entire band and lodged them in jail.

While plowing for wheat on his farm two miles east of Eaton Rapids Harvey Ward struck a metal substance lying on the surface of the ground, resembling melted ore of some sort. In the same field about twenty rods away he came upon another piece of the same kind of metal. The extraordinary weight of the two pieces aroused Ward's curiosity as to what they might be composed of. He immediately brought them to town where a test was made that developed the fact that both were 95 per cent pure copper, the larger one weighed 27 and the smaller 19 pounds. The only theory advanced as to the presence of the copper in the field is that what has already been found are fragments of an exploded meteor or something of the kind.

Thomas D. Holman living three miles from Webberville, Ingham county, has recently solved the problem of how to get his crops harvested. Other farmers have had great difficulty in securing labor, but Holman offered the members of a church in Webberville good way to come out and help him for a few days, relays to be worked if they saw fit and the entire proceeds of their wages to go into the church fund. The members accepted and the religious society is much richer, some of the members are sunburned, but are a lot healthier and the farmer is ahead in the game for he has had some of his important work done.

A young woman said to be the wife of an Ogemaw county postmaster, walked into one of the local clothing stores and asked to be shown a young man's suit in clothes. After looking the entire stock over she finally made a choice and ask the clerk if she might try on the trousers, saying that her son for whom she was purchasing the suit, was the same size as herself. She was shown into a side room and when she came forth with said ironers on she started for the front door without offering to pay for them. She was asked to settle but refused and defied the clerk to take possession of the garment. The young man was not equal to the occasion, but determined not to be beaten at the game, called police headquarters for an officer. The woman was taken to the station, where she is now being held awaiting the coming of her husband to take her home. She is thought to be demented.

Literary Notes

First Principles in the Laundry

Irons must be much hotter for starched pieces than for flannels. For these they must barely hiss under the touch of a moistened finger.

To get the right finish on any piece of ironing it must be ironed until dry. Attack the starched pieces and those that require most work early in the action.

A few of the essentials to the ironing-table, besides the table itself and the irons, are an iron-stand, an iron holder with an asbestos lining a bit of beeswax tied up in a piece of cheesecloth, a bowl of warm water with a sponge or a piece of soft linen with which may be dampened scallops and edgings which have been ironed dry to iron well, a piece of paper folded with several thicknesses on which to test the heat of the iron and to wipe any black smirch from it.

Take your clothes from the line as soon as possible after they are dry. They are likely to become too stiff if left out longer than necessary.

Be especially careful to bring starched clothes in as soon as they are dry. When it is cold, the freezing takes out the stiffness, and when the weather is damp, the clothes become limp.

Fruit stains on linen may be removed by pouring boiling water through them. Stretch the spotted part over a bowl and pour the boiling water on the stain. It may be necessary to repeat the treatment several times in order to remove the stains entirely. Tea and coffee stains may be eradicated by the same method. The sooner they are taken out, the better. Wine stains may also be removed by the hot water applied in the same manner.

In dampening clothes for ironing, use either a whisk or one of the regular clothes-sprinklers which are made for this special purpose and have the water in it hot or at least very warm. Sprinkle one piece at a time, spreading it out smooth before sprinkling and roll up tightly.—Christene Fermine Herrick in the Woman's Home Companion for September.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS By MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Neil, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winnsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER V.

"I will shoot him through the abdomen so that he will live to tell his wives who did the deed. After that I will try to make my escape to the mainland."

"And Marion—"

"Will not marry Strang! Isn't that plain?"

"You have guessed nothing—no cause for the prophet's power over your sister?" asked Nathaniel.

"Absolutely. And yet that influence is such that at times the thought of it freezes the blood in my veins. It is so great that Strang did not hesitate to throw me into jail on the pretext that I had threatened his life. Marion implored him to spare me the disgrace of a public whipping and he replied by reading to her the commandments of the kingdom. That was last night—when you saw her through the window. Strang is madly infatuated with her beauty and yet he dares to go any length without fear of losing her. She has become his slave. She is as completely in his power as though bound in iron chains. And the most terrible thing about it all is that she has constantly urged me to leave the island—to go, and never return. Great God, what does it all mean? I love her more than anything else on earth, we have been inseparable since the day she was able to toddle alone—and yet she would have me leave her! No power on earth can reveal the secret that is torturing her. No power can make Strang divulge it."

"And Obadiah Price!" cried Nathaniel, sudden excitement flashing in his eyes. "Does he know?"

"I believe that he does!" replied Neil, pacing back and forth in his agitation. "Captain Plum, if there is a man on this island who loves Marion with all of a father's devotion it is Obadiah Price, and yet he swears that he knows nothing of the terrible influence which has so suddenly enslaved her to the prophet! He suggests that it may be mesmerism, but I—" He interrupted himself with a harsh, mirthless laugh. "Mesmerism be damned! It's not that!"

"Your sister—is—a Mormon," ventured Nathaniel, remembering what the prophet had said to him that morning. "Could it be her faith?—a message revealed through Strang from—"

Neil stopped him almost fiercely.

"Marion is not a Mormon!" he said. "She hates Mormonism as she hates Strang. I have tried to get her to leave the island with me but she insists on staying because of the old folk. They are very old, Captain Plum, and they believe in the prophet and his heaven as you and I believe in that blue sky up there. The day before I was arrested I begged my sister to flee to the mainland with me but she refused, with the words that she had said to me a hundred times before—'Neil, I must marry the prophet!' Don't you see there is nothing to do—but to kill Strang?"

Nathaniel thrust his hand into a pocket of the coat he had loaned Neil and drew forth his pipe and tobacco pouch. As he loaded the pipe he looked squarely into the other's eyes and smiled.

"Neil," he said softly, "Do you know that you would have made an awful fool of yourself if I hadn't hove in sight just when I did?"

He lighted his pipe with exasperating coolness, still smiling over its bowl.

"You are not going to kill Strang tomorrow," he added, throwing away the match and placing both hands on Neil's shoulders. His eyes were laughing with the joy that shone in them. "Neil, I am ashamed of you! You have worried a devilish lot over a very simple matter. See here—" He blew a cloud of smoke over the other's head. "I've learned to demand some sort of pay for my services since I landed on this island. Will you promise to be—a sort of brother—to me—if I steal Marion and sail away with her tonight?"

CHAPTER VI.

Marion.

At Nathaniel's astonishing words Neil stood as though struck suddenly dumb.

"Don't you see what a very simple case it is?" he continued, enjoying the other's surprised silence. "You plan to kill Strang to keep Marion from marrying him. Well, I will hunt up Marion, put her in a bag if necessary and carry her to my ship. Isn't that better and safer and just as sure as murder?"

The excitement had gone out of Neil's face. The flush slowly faded from his cheeks and in his eyes there gleamed something besides the malevolence of a few moments before. As Nathaniel stepped back from him half laughing and puffing clouds of smoke from his pipe Marion's brother thrust his hands into his pockets with an exclamation that forcefully expressed his appreciation of Captain Plum's scheme.

"I never thought of that," he added, after a moment. "By heaven, it will be easy—"

"So easy that I tell you again I am ashamed of you for not having thought of it!" cried Nathaniel. "The first thing is to get safely aboard my ship."

"We can do that within an hour."

"And tonight—where will we find Marion?"

"At home," said Neil. "We live near Obadiah. You must have seen the house as you came into the clearing this morning from the forest."

Nathaniel smiled as he thought of his suspicions of the old councilor.

"It couldn't be better situated for our work," he said. "Does the forest run down to the lake on Obadiah's side of the island?"

"Clear to the beach."

Neil's face betrayed a sudden flash of doubt.

"I believe that our place has been watched for some time," he explained. "I am sure that it is especially guarded at night and that no person leaves or enters it without the knowledge of Strang. I am certain that Marion is aware of this surveillance although she professes to be wholly ignorant of it. It may cause us trouble."

"Can you reach the house without being observed?"

"After midnight—yes."

"Then there is no cause for alarm," declared Nathaniel. "If necessary I can bring 10 men into the edge of the woods. Two can approach the house as quietly as one and I will go with you. Once there you can tell Marion that your life depends on her accompanying you to Obadiah's. I believe she will go. If she won't—" He stretched out his arms as if in anticipation of the burden they might hold. "If she won't—I'll help you carry her!"

"And meanwhile," said Neil, "Arbor Croche's men—"

"Will be as dead as herring floaters if they show up!" he cried, leaping two feet off the ground in his enthusiasm. "I've got 12 of the damnedest fighters aboard my ship that ever lived and 10 of them will be in the edge of the woods!"

Neil's eyes were shining with something that made Nathaniel turn his own to the loading of his pipe.

"Captain Plum, I hope I will be able to repay you for this," he said. There was a trembling break in his voice and for a moment Nathaniel did not look up. His own heart was near bursting with the new life that throbbed within it. When he raised his eyes to his companion's face again there was a light in them that spoke almost as plainly as words.

"You haven't accepted my price, yet Neil," he replied quietly. "I asked you if you'd—be—a sort of brother—"

Neil sprang to his side with a fervor that knocked the pipe out of his hand.

"I swear that! And if Marion doesn't—"

Suddenly he jerked himself into a listening attitude.

"Hark!"

For a moment the two ceased to breathe. The sound had come to them both, low, distant. After it there fell a brief hush. Then again, as they stared questioningly into each other's eyes, it rolled faintly into the swamp—the deep, far baying of a hound.

"Ah!" exclaimed Neil, drawing back with a deep breath. "I thought they would do it!"

"The bloodhounds!"

Horror, not fear, sent an involuntary shiver through Nathaniel.

"They can't reach us!" assured Neil. There was the glitter of triumph in his eyes. "This was to have been my way of escape after I killed Strang. A quarter of a mile deeper in the swamp I have a canoe." He picked up the gun and box and began forcing his way through the dense alder along the edge of the stream. "I'd like to stay and murder those dogs," he called back, "but it wouldn't be policy."

For a time the crashing of their bodies through the dense growth of the swamp drowned all other sound. Five minutes later Neil stopped on the edge of a wide bog. The hounds were giving fierce tongue in the forest on their left and their nearness sent Nathaniel's hand to his pistol. Neil saw the movement and laughed.

"Don't like the sound, eh?" he said. "We get used to it on Beaver Island. They're just about at the place where they tore little Jim Schredder to pieces a few weeks back. Schredder tried to kill one of the elders for stealing his wife while he was away on a night's fishing trip."

He plunged to his knees in the bog. "They caught him just before he reached the swamp," he flung back over his shoulder. "Two minutes more and he would have been safe."

Nathaniel, sinking to his knees in the mire, forged up beside him.

"Lord!" he exclaimed, as a breath of air brought a sudden burst of blood-curdling cries to them. "If they'd loosed them on us sooner—"

He shivered at the terrible grimace Neil turned on him.

"Had they slipped the leashes when we escaped, we would have been with poor Schredder now, Captain Plum. By the way"—he stopped a moment to wipe the water and mud from his face—"three days after they covered Schredder's bones with muck out there, the elder took Schredder's wife! She was too pretty for a fisherman." He started on, but halted suddenly with uplifted hand. No longer could they hear the baying of the dogs. "They've struck the creek!" said Neil. "Listen!"

After an interval of silence there came a long mournful howl.

"Treed—treed or in the water, that's what the howling means. How Croche and his devils are howling now!"

A curse was mingled with Neil's breath as he forced his way through the bog. Twenty rods farther on they came to a slime covered bit of water on which was floating a dugout canoe. Immense relief replaced the anxiety in Nathaniel's face as he climbed into it. At that moment he was willing to fight a hundred men for Marion's sake, but snakes and bogs and bloodhounds were entirely outside his pale of argument and he exhibited no hesitation in betraying this fact to his companion. For a quarter of a mile Neil forced the dugout through water viscid with slime and rotted substance before the clearer channel of the creek was reached. As they progressed the stream constantly became deeper and more navigable until it finally began to show signs of a current and a little later, under the powerful impetus of Neil's paddle, the canoe shot from between the dense shores into the open lake. A mile away Nathaniel discerned the point of forest beyond which the Typhoon was hidden. He pointed out the location of the ship to his companion.

"You are sure there is a small boat waiting for you on the point?" asked Neil.

"Yes, since early morning."

Neil was absorbed in thought for some time as he drove the canoe through the tall rice grass that grew thick along the edge of the shore.

"How would it be if I landed you on the point and met you tonight at Obadiah's?" he asked suddenly. "It is probable that after we get Marion aboard your ship I will not return to the island again, and it is quite necessary that I run down the coast for a couple of miles—for—" He did not finish his reason, but added: "I can make the whole distance in this rice so there is no danger of being seen. Or you might lie off the point yonder and I would join you early this evening."

"That would be a better plan if we must separate," said Nathaniel, whose voice betrayed the reluctance with which he assented to the project. He had guessed shrewdly at Neil's motive. "Is it possible that we may have another young lady passenger?" he asked banteringly.

There was no answering humor to this in Neil's eyes.

"I wish we might!" he said quietly. "We can!" exclaimed Nathaniel. "My ship—"

"It is impossible. I am speaking of Winnsome. Arbor Croche's house is in the heart of the town and guarded by dogs. I doubt if she would go, anyway. She has always been like a little sister to Marion and me and she has come to believe—something—as we do. I hate to leave her."

"Obadiah told me about her mother," ventured Nathaniel. "He said that some day Winnsome will be a queen."

"I knew her mother," replied Neil, as though he had not heard Nathaniel's last words. He looked frankly into the other's face. "I worshipped her!"

"Oh-h-h!"

"From a distance," he hastened. "She was as pure as Winnsome is now. Little Winn looks like her. Some day she will be as beautiful."

"She is beautiful now."

How to Make Money Growing Fruit

THE FRUIT BELT is a mine of practical knowledge and information for the fruit grower and farmer. Every issue handles in a helpful way the progress and problems of the grower. Its pages are well printed and fully illustrated with photographs that teach.

The Fruit Belt is a practical journal—edited by practical men who treat of practical subjects in a way that every ambitious person who has anything to do with fruit growing or farming will appreciate.

Its value as a help and guide in growing fruit can't begin to be measured by the subscription price. The ambitious grower cannot afford to be without it. 50 cents per year, 3 years, $1.00.

Special Offer: We will send 3 issues, including a big special number for 10 cents coin or stamps

CHEROKEES TO AID SINGER.

To Raise $30,000 Fund For Redskin Prima Donna.

That Suzanne La Homa, the stage name of Mrs. Horace McDaniels, may be able to finish her musical education under the best instructors in foreign countries the proposal has been made that each Cherokee citizen give $1 of his share of the $3,500,000 soon to be paid to the Cherokees by the federal government. This would make a fund of nearly $30,000.

Suzanne La Homa is a Cherokee by birth, being a member of the widely known Cobb family. Two years ago Mme. Schumann-Heink consented to hear Suzanne La Homa sing and became her patron, taking Suzanne with her to Berlin and choosing a teacher for her. Mme. La Homa lately returned to her home that she might show her friends what progress she has made.

RIDS GOLF LINKS OF MOSS.

New Machine Combs Out Sod Successfully.

The fact that the sod of golf courses and bowling greens in England is often covered with a considerable quantity of moss in the early spring has led to the designing of a device to be used either with a lawn mower or as a separate implement that tears up the moss and allows the young grass to come up. It also tears out the hard, dry tufts of old grass, for which purpose it could be used advantageously on the golf courses of this country.

The device, which is called a moss extractor, is a light toothed wooden cylinder. It is fitted to a lawn mower by taking out the knife cylinder and removing the sole plate. The teeth do not merely brush the top of the grass, but actually comb it out without harming the young grass.

Special Tires For Aeroplanes.

The demand for special tires for aeroplanes has grown so large in the last year that at least one big tire concern has made the providing of such tires a branch of the business. The special requirements are strength coupled with extreme lightness and resiliency. They must be strong for the work they have to do when the machine is on the ground and yet so light that they add but little weight.

SCIENTIFIC COOLING.

All the long day I think about the snow,
The whitened pond, the frost king's frozen lair,
The berg's cold sides, the gleaming icy floe,
The tempest's bluster and the north wind's glare.

All the night long I dream of Greenland's shores,
The ice thatched cottage of the Eskimo,
The ice bound sledge, the somber sky that lowers,
The winter's night that moves so chill and slow.

I muse and dream of arctic ice and chill
Until my veins run cold these summer nights
And often wake and fancy that the shrill
North wind roars through my bones and bites.

And thus oftimes while others wilt with heat
And lean all limply like a wetted rag
I have to put on my half frozen feet
An extra blanket and hot water bag.

—L. F. Ferris in New York Sun.

BIG MEASURES AWAITING NEXT CONGRESS' ACTION.

Merchant Marine and Injunction Regulation Are Among Them.

There is trouble ahead for the next session of congress. Several tough propositions in the way of big bills are on the program. Among them are those for merchant marine and the regulation of injunctions. Then there are the measures to create the Appalachian and White mountain forest reserves and to permit the federal incorporation of railroads and other common carriers.

The fragments of the Taft legislative program which failed of congressional enactment at the session just ended are already being culled over and put in trim for next winter. The following calendar is already made up:

To create the Appalachian and White mountain forest reserve.
To build up the merchant marine by a system of ship subsidies.
To regulate the granting of injunctions.
To permit the federal incorporation of railroad and other common carriers.
To regulate the issue of stocks and bonds of transportation companies.
The enactment of additional conservation measures, eight bills remaining without action.
To establish a bureau of public health.
To encourage the study of agriculture and the mechanical arts, for which an appropriation of $10,000,000 is proposed.
A form of civil government for Alaska.
Modification of the Sherman anti-trust act.
Codification of the postal laws and reorganization of the postal system.
A plan for the retirement of civil service employees.
To expedite litigation in federal courts.

Beyond these there are many minor matters to come up for action. Among them are the Rockefeller foundation charter and a measure for the regulation of cold storage.

Two important investigating committees will make their reports and possibly a third one. It is certain the Ballinger-Pinchot committee will report its findings to congress, and the committee which is to make the inquiry into the election of Senator Lorimer will do likewise.

How do these figures strike you as an argument for good roads? Antrim county has an assessed valuation of $5,400,257. During the past year she has paid into the good road funds of the state $340 and has received $5,051; Kalkaska's assessed valuation is $3,251,178, paid into good roads fund $327; received $7,732: Charlevoix's assessed valuation, $6,830,908, paid into fund $683; received $0,000.

This issue contains a statement of the Charlevoix State Savings bank as called for to be published as of September, 1st, by the state banking department. In the two years and four months that President Foley and Cashier Rachow have had charge of the management of this bank it's business has increased over $100,000. This is very gratifying to the stockholders and patrons of the bank.

PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

Of the County Local Option Organization.

Issue Statements in Regard to Posting of Petitions.

A little over one and one-half years ago a large number of the voters of Charlevoix County petitioned the Board of Supervisors for the privilege of voting on the question of the Prohibition of the Liquor traffic under the Local Option law in this county.

This movement was the result of a wide-spread desire to do away with the open saloon. The destructive nature of this institution had long been recognized. Its ravages were too evident to admit denial. The saloon is, and always has been, the enemy of the Church, the Home, the School and the State. To sign a paper to drive out such a foe placed the signer on record in favor of the common good, the safe-guarding of the morals of the youth and the promoting of good citizenship in our land. The best citizens had no hesitancy in taking this position. They were quite willing to have their names posted in public places when it clearly meant that they stood for those things in the support of which every right minded person could justly take pride.

Now the Liquor Traffic asks you to take the opposite position. The wholesalers and retailers want the open saloon for the reason that the open saloon greatly increases the sale of liquor. They wouldn't care to pay the heavy license if this were not true. Because they want the open saloon, they ask you to sign a paper to secure the privilege of again voting on the question of the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Everyone who signs their petition will thereby consent to have his name used to help make drunkards of our boys, to rob womanhood of virtue and to corrupt the body politic.

The law requires copies of the petitions with the signatures thereon to be posted for ten days, at least, in three public places in the Township or City where the signers reside (See Section 5115 of the Compiled Laws of Michigan 1897, Vol. 2, Page 1710). We do not believe that you want your name to appear in public with the names of drunkards, gamblers and saloonists. You do not care to have it understood that you stand for the things which every one knows the saloon produces. The great majority of the citizens of Charlevoix County believe in protecting the home and in fostering only good and helpful institutions. If it were necessary they would lay down their lives in a conflict that involved integrity of their homes and the future of their children against an open enemy. The foe now faces us, not in the open, but under cover of an appeal, for the right of franchise for the purpose of bringing back an institution, the success of which is absolutely dependent upon its ability to ruin boys for life and finally to cast them off the wrecks of humanity. Let us not be deceived by any pretended patriotism that has this nefarious object. The man who approaches us with this object is from the enemy's forces. A little searching of the fields beyond will reveal the assembling army. Let us not sign a paper that may permit this foe to pitch his camp in our dooryard. PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

A LECTURE —ON—Christian Science
Its Mode of Operation

BY BLISS KNAPP, C. S. B.

Member of the Christian Science Board of Lecturership of the First Church of Christ Scientist, Boston, Mass.

Following is the introduction by Mayor Hampton:

Ladies and Gentlemen:

When I was asked by the committee of the local Christian Science Church organization to preside at this meeting, I demurred, on the ground that it would be more fitting for a member of the church, one who was of the faith, to officiate. But when I was informed that it was customary, and preferable, for one not of the church, to preside, I gladly consented. For I believe that it is the duty of all good citizens, and especially all public officials, to assist and encourage in every possible manner any and all organizations, sectarian and non-sectarian, religious and non-religious, that are engaged in making this old world better; and I believe that the Christian Science Church is making better and happier men and women of thousands of our people, and doing much to make this a better world for all of us to live in.

I am not a member of the Christian Science Church. But I have seen some of the good they have accomplished, some of the men made better through their membership in this society, and I am glad to say the good word for the good I know it has done. For I believe most firmly in the doctrine expressed in these lines:

When, over the fair fame of friend or foe,
The shadow of disgrace shall fall, instead
Of words of blame, and proof of this and so,
Let something good, be said.
Forget not that no fellow being, yet
Fell so low but love could lift his head.
Even the cheek of shame with tears is wet.
If something good, be said.
No generous heart may vainly turn aside,
In paths of sympathy; No soul so dead,
But may awaken, strong and glorified,
If something good, be said.
And so, I charge ye, by the thorny crown
And by the cross on which the Saviour bled,
And by your own soul's hope of fair renown,
Let something good, be said.

It would seem to me, that this doctrine of saying something good, must be part of the Christian Science creed, for I have noticed that members of the church seem to be looking always for the best in others, for the good in life. They are optimists. And if there is anything we need more of in this world, it is people blessed with the optimism which helps us over the hard places, which sees the silver lining to every cloud, and helps our neighbors to see that silver lining.

But we are here to listen to an exposition of the Christian Science faith, from the lips of one well qualified in every way to speak upon this subject, one who is a member of the official board of lectureship of the First Church of Christ Scientist of Boston. I have the pleasure of introducing Mr. Bliss Knapp.

Before speaking definitely on the subject of Christian Science, it may be well for us to recognize that all the great religious systems of the world, that tradition and usage have handed down to us, are the claimants to a revealed truth. Pure religion is revealed truth; but whatever may be the nature of their revelations, that which distinguishes the demonstrable revelation of Christ Jesus from them all is its power to give health and life, for "I am come," said Jesus, "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." That is, the abundant vitality of Christian truth gives life. For this reason the educated classes of today are coming to recognize that such religions beliefs as Buddhism, Shintoism and so forth, are not so much religions as they are philosophies, because they lack this life-giving element that characterizes Christianity. It is, therefore, this life-giving element that lifts Christianity above the plane of a mere philosophy into a living religion. It is this life-giving element that enabled the Master to heal the sick and raise the dead through prayer of understanding, even to the raising of himself from the tomb in what is known as the resurrection.

It is this life-giving element in Christianity that Christian Science interprets. It does not claim to amend the Bible, but it does emphasize its spiritual meaning, and seeks, to interpret rather than to proclaim a creed altogether new. It is therefore a system of spiritual teachings that improves the health and morals of humanity. Every Christian believes that spiritual teachings should improve the morals of men, but we have come to recognize in Christian Science that these same spiritual teachings, in their larger more scientific understanding, will so purify the minds of men as to heal them of physical disease.

Such a system of spiritual teachings that can bring surcease from pain and sorrow must be truly Christian. Indeed every sincere Christian has sought in prayer for that same Christ-spirit to help the sinner and heal the sick. Christian Science declares, moreover, that this Christ-spirit acts in obedience to the laws of God, and not the laws of men. In other words, it operates in obedience to divine law with such precision and accuracy that it may be understood and demonstrated as did the primitive Christians. Two things therefore we must understand,—the unity of Christian truth, and its law of operation. The one is Christian, the other must be scientific; and whoever understands both must be not only a Christian but a Christian Scientist.

Footsteps in Spiritual Discovery

It is for us to lay hold of this divine law and learn how it operates. Since it is an eternal law of Truth, this healing power was not for a particular time or period, but must be an eternal truth that is ever operative, and needs only to be rediscovered and understood to bring a return of primitive Christian healing. Let us then turn to the prophets and apostles to learn how they came to understand for themselves this healing power of God, that we may emulate their good works. The first thing discovered was not the law nor the Christ spirit, but the divine power. The first of the old patriarchs was reared in the midst of idolatrous worship. Everybody believed in worshipping some idol fashioned by man's device. They believed in as many differing powers as there were idols until Abraham, the first man ever called a Hebrew, recognized for the first time one supreme intelligence or power governing the universe and man. This was to him a mighty power, which was revealed to him as the Almighty; and from that time, God has been known to men as the Almighty. He therefore established a perpetual covenant with Abraham to "walk before God and be thou perfect." Not discerning its law of operation, Abraham employed this covenant to no definite purpose, except that it gave him so bright a promise and so firm a faith as to destroy some of the bondage of material imperfections. This seed of faith in the Almighty continued until the covenant was renewed through the law, when God gave to Moses the ten commandments.

Moses began to recognize that this divine power as operative through law is not confined to holy places or special occasions, but is everywhere present and ever available for man's use. He began to recognize moreover, that this power as operative through law has a healing and saving effect. By means of this power, and guided by its law, Moses healed serpent bits and leprosy brought deliverance from the plagues, from the Red Sea, and from the terrors of the wilderness, until its reliability and truth were absolutely established. Therefore the scriptures have added to Abraham's recognition of God as the Almighty, the Mosaic declaration that He is "a God of truth;" and the psalmist adds, "Thy law is the truth." Nevertheless, when these people had the law, and were delivered by the law, there was yet one thing needful, because they were continually breaking the covenant. They expected a final revelation that would make all things perfect, and to this end they were continually looking for Immanuel or "God with us."

The Jews have continued to look for Immanuel to this day, because they needed a final revelation, and expected one. This final interpretation was to bring the very presence of God to their understanding; and when Christ Jesus took up the thread of this progressive revelation and carried it on to completion, an unbroken highway to the Father's kingdom was established on earth, and also a new covenant.

The Old Testament might lead one to believe that God is an angry God, visiting all manner or affliction upon His people for their purification. This led them to fear God and keep His commandments, but whenever they became less fearful the laws were broken. Now, instead of afflicting the people with disease, the New Testament teaches that God heals them of those very diseases. This brings out a more loving sense of God. Spiritual affection has displaced their fear. They are led to obey not only in the letter but in the spirit. They have added in their righteousness brotherly kindness. This is the result of the new covenant, by which God put his laws into their minds, and wrote them in their hearts, thereby uniting justice and affection in the gospel of Love.

The Scriptures imply that what the Israelites lacked was the Christian teaching that "God is love," for suppose they did understand the fact of the divine power, and suppose they understood the further fact of how this power operates through law, even though they might understand all that the beloved disciple has said, "he that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." Moreover Paul declared that "love is the fulfilling of the law," and must therefore fulfill the covenant made to Abraham. Thus we learn that divine Love is the benign presence that heals the sick, reforms the sinner, and fulfills the law. It is this understanding of God as divine Love that enables the Christian Scientist to heal the sick to-day.

Scientific Discovery

I have briefly presented this idea of divine law, fulfilled in Love, by way of anticipating that frequent remark that Christian Science is neither Christian nor scientific. What does it mean to have a science. You well know that a science implies classified understanding; it requires a law which must be presented in its unity, order and system. This is precisely what Christian Science does. It presents this divine law in its unity, order and system with such precision and accuracy that Christian healing prevails by way of proof. It is therefore eminently scientific; moreover it is Christian because this law is not physical but divine, compassionate and helpful.

Everyone would enjoy to have the power for good that Jesus had; everyone would be glad to understand the divine law well enough to heal and reform men as did the primitive Christians; and when one does understand this law in its spiritual sense, he is indeed a Christian Scientist as truly as one who understands the mathematical law is a mathematical scientist. The ability to do the works of Jesus was lost through the idolatry and materialism of the dark ages, for this lost to them that loving kindness so necessary to righteousness, and no further discovery of all that had gone before, including the works of healing. You remember that before Jesus went away, he promised to send us another Comforter, who should guide into all truth, and this Comforter must necessarily bring a return of primitive Christian healing. When Mrs. Eddy rediscovered this Christian healing, she subsequently discovered its law of operation or Science, and called it Christian Science. Together with this discovery of its Science, she recognized that a law must have a principle, and therefore Science declares that God is divine Principle. This Christ-healing from Principle is indeed the "Spirit of truth" or Comforter, which opens the way to all Truth by revealing the practical Science of Christian healing, so that all may follow in the way of Christ Jesus. These successive stages of spiritual discovery have linked the ages into one progressive revelation of Truth until its spirit and power are now understood scientifically.

Spiritual Activity

When a man is suffering a burden of disease, he wants to know directly how this law operates to meet his particular need—how it is that he may have the assurance that God is indeed "a very present help in trouble." Now a student never prays to have his problem in mathematics work itself out, for this would do away with the spirit of understanding. He has the problem and also the rule, but there must be a mental activity on his part. Moreover this mental activity must be guided, not by a mere belief or desire which would lead him into error, but this mental activity must be guided by the mathematical rule, and to that degree his correct solution is inevitable. In Christian science we have divine law. We also have these problems of sin and disease. Then we, too, must possess a mental activity which must be guided, not by a mere whim or supplicatory desire that might lead one into error; for this mental activity must be guided by the divine law, that is scientifically, and to that degree Christian healing is absolutely inevitable. Man's inharmony is due as much to ignorance of the law as to wilful disobedience to sins of omission as well as sins of commission. He must first understand the law then obey it. When then is this obedient mind? It is not the human intellect, nor the carnal mind, but the eternal energy of man's spiritual consciousness. If man were as truly obedient to divine law as is manifested by the rythmic movements of the planetary system, he would be as harmonious and well in that obedience. Obedience is therefore an essential to true manhood.—obedience to what is already true before God,—for this is to be spiritually minded.

The prophet Zechariah voiced this Christian idea when he said, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." For "the hour cometh," said Jesus, "and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth." What then does this mean? Surely it must mean that they shall no longer worship the Father after man made doctrines or beliefs, for they "shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth." Then when our spiritual sense, by which we worship God, is guided by the divine law—that is, scientifically—Christian healing is inevitable. It is truly significant that Jesus opened his mission with Isaiah's prophetic words, "The spirit of the Lord is upon me." From that moment he began to solve those problems through the destruction of sin and disease. He healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, raised the dead, cast out devils. Moreover he declared (according to the Revised Version) that "God is Spirit."

God is Principle

It is therefore evident to you that Christian Science presents no new God, but you have observed that it presents several Scriptural names for Deity. This does not mean so many different gods, for these are human term used to define the one God according to their several offices. That is, Truth is the law; Love fulfills the law, and so forth. To illustrate: Let us suppose we have a six sided room, with each side a mirror, and a lamp placed in the center of the room. Each mirror will present a perfect reflection of the lamp, which will be similar each to the other. And yet, their office differs, for the reason that it is the office of one to imagine or define the south side, for another to imagine or define the north side, for another to imagine or define the south side, and so on, requiring them all to imagine or define the complete object. In like manner these synonymous terms for Deity are necessary to present the complete nature and being of God, whereby we have the Scriptural definition that God is all Mind, Spirit, Soul, Life, Truth, Love. Though differing in their office, we recognize that they are really identical in their essence, for divine Love is indeed the Mind and Spirit which is God.

It is evident, therefore, that Christian Science teaches no new God, but we do present to you a new name to include these synonymous terms for Deity, and that new name is Principle. And right here I ask you, who can conceive a divine law without a Principle to govern that law? Christian Science teaches therefore that God is divine Principle. The reason may be seen in the relation of Principle to rule as represented by the Century dictionary. "You can make a rule; you cannot make a Principle; you can lay down a rule, you cannot properly speaking lay down a Principle. It is (already) laid down for you. You can establish a rule; you cannot, properly speaking, establish a Principle. You can only declare it." If this word Principle implies any of the harshness of the Mosaic law with its "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not," we must remember that the divine Principle manifests all-wisdom, intelligence and goodness. Indeed it includes the all of divine Love which binds up the broken hearted and sets the captive free.

Method in Jesus' Teaching

Recognizing how essential it is, at some time, for all to claim their God-given right to be free, it may be interesting to observe the method by which Jesus taught this healing power to his disciples. Not gifted in learning, these disciples manifested an average intelligence, and a certain familiarity with the Mosaic law. Doubtless they were as familiar with the Old Testament writings as the average individual of to-day. However, we may read in Luke's Gospel how that Jesus reproved them for their unbelief. "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures." Then one might be thoroughly familiar with the Scripture lessons, and in his unbelief fail to understand them. For example: When Jesus healed the man with the withered hand all that he said was, "Stretch forth thine hand. It was restored whole like as the other." We all are familiar with those words, but suppose these same words were repeated to-day to one suffering from a withered hand could the mere repetition of these words heal him? It must be evident to you that not the words, but the spiritual understanding of the Master healed the sick. Why one might commit to memory the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and be unable to heal a single disease, for it is the spiritual understanding that needs to be opened. "The letter killeth," says the Scripture, "but the spirit giveth life."

To present this spiritual understanding, it was necessary for Jesus to begin on their plane of thought where they could grasp the meaning of his teachings. He began with parables, and "without a parable spake he unto them." A little later he said, "I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall show you plainly of the Father."

In this he did precisely what the mother does when she teaches her child that two and two make four. The child does not understand it at first for the reason that it is mental. He sees nothing but physical forms. Therefore the mother begins with something as tangible as red apples. They mean something directly, and he can understand that two red apples in one hand placed with two red apples in the other make four red apples. The mental character of the problem, however, has thus far escaped the child's notice. For his second lesson, the apples are removed, and he must learn by thinking red apples that two and two are four. Then for his third lesson, he is ready to grasp the mental problem without the physical forms. In like manner Jesus taught the disciples first in parables, using the things of common experience which they could readily understand. Gradually in this way he turned their thoughts away from the physical in a more spiritual sense of things until they began to apprehend a degree of reality in spiritual things. Indeed their faith was strengthened by visible proofs of healing performed by their Master. To watch others solve these problems, however, was insufficient. For their second lesson they went out in pairs to heal the sick and thus prove their slight understanding, and behold they returned saying, "Even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." The great mental Principle which underlies all being and action was unfolding to them and they grasped the spirit of it all by the actual demonstration of healing so that Jesus could say as an opening to his third lesson, "I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs but I shall show you plainly of the Father." That is, he could then teach them spiritual things in spiritual terms and they could understand spiritually. From that time their healing was even more remarkable than before in proof of their positive understanding of spiritual law.

LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

tinue their preaching against sin, but the Christian healing of sickness is apparently apathetic from unbelief. The reason may lie in the physical appearance of sickness, for if sickness were known to he as mental as sin, then it could he seen how a meutal prayer could control both. If disease were purely physical and could he reached only hy drugs or material means, there could be no auch thing as Christian healiag. One of the leading points in the theology of Christian Science, and one which physicians are now admitting to be true, is the mental nature of disease.

We should look heyond the physical effects to their mental cause just as Moses did, for when be withdrew his hand from his hosom white with leprosy he awoke to the mental nature of leprosy. Again when he returned his hand to his bosom, in obedience to the word of God, and withdrew it free from that dread disease, he learned of its mental cure, and that the divine Mind is the healer. It follows therefore that Christian prayer should be just as efficacious in healing disease which is mental as in castiug out the belief in mental sin.

Now when a dentist administers nnesthetics to suspend or divert the thought during the process of an operaiotn, he is producing on tbe assumption that if a man can not think he can not be hurt; for during the time when the patieat's thought is suspended or diverted, his flesh and bones can of themselves experieuce no pain, sensation, life nor intelligence. Consequently, pain is all in the thinking. It is in the mortal minds and not the physical form. It follows therefore that even surgery may prove indirectly the mental nature of disease.

Various experiments are now being employed by our leading medical schools to prove the mental nature of disease, but all these experiments have nothing to do with Christian Science. They merely indicate what physicians themselves are coming to recognize concerning the mental nature of disease. From this they have reasoned logically that, to doctor physical effects, without removing the mental cause by the power of the divine Mind, removes both cause and effect. Others have sought to accomplish this same end by various mental methods, including human will This leads us to recognize with Paul two types of mind. "For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Then how shall we distinguish between the carnal and the spiritual. " By their fruits ye shall know them." Some of the fruits of the carnal mind are envy, jealousy, greed, ingratitude, revenge and so forth, which make for sin and death: but the fruits of the spirit are honesty, goodness, mercy, justice, loving kindness and so forth which make for life and peace. Then ask yourselves which mind is governing you? is it the carnal mind; with its train of fear, sin and disease" or is it the spiritual mind; the same spiritual mind which demonstrates the divine law in health, peace and loving kindness? Just ask yourselves which mind is it that is governing you, the carnal or the spiritual?

Human Mind not Regenerative.

The observation that disease is mental has aroused the frequent remark "Well, if pain is all in the thinking, just think you are well and you will be so." Now the same ignorant belief that causes disease can never cure it; for, if thinking you are well is all that is necessary, and it could be so arranged at twelve o'clock to-night to have everybody think they are well, then all the pain and suffering of the world might be wiped out in a single night. But the most masterful logic of material philosophy can never convince a suffering man that his pain is not real, for the same mind that produces disease can never destroy it. Only the spiritual Mind as taught by Christ Jesus can uncover sin and disease and destroy them; and that the Mind which was in Christ Jesus has stood forth in bold relief throughout the Christian era as the pancea for the world's ills. Therefore "let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

Christian Scientists do not go to the sick bed with the heartless assertion, "Nothing ails you." Jesus had compassion for those who were bound. He never healed a man by ignoring his difficulties, but by recognizing in that bondage a problem which needed to be solved in obedience to divine law, and not from ignorant belief, for the spiritual understanding of this law exposes the nothingness of evil and dissolves it like dew before the sun.

Jesus Eschewed Human Will.

It is well to know that the supposed cause of disease obtains in the mortal mind and that the understanding of the divine Mind will cure it; but human nature always finds somebody who wants to climb up by some other way. Such people hold that the spiritual Mind is fit only for weak women and children, but for the man with a belief in personal magnetism the exercise of human will seems more manly. This unchristian belief in human will has been seized upon as a ready method of competing with Christian Science in casting out disease by a mental process. Various names have been used to designate these efforts such as therapeutic suggestion, psyco-therapeutics or Christian psycology. They are admitted to he the operation of the human will or carnal mind and may he operated by a wicked man, an infidel or a pagan and therefore must he the polar opposites of the Mind of Christ, for "the carnal mind is enmity against God."

Human will is an animal propensity which tries to dominate everything and seeks to exploit itself as some great thiag, but if "the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." This blind belief in animal will would commit murder and do all manner of evil to satisfy its own desires. Its chief characteristics are lust and selfishness. As an educated system, its more hidden use is exploited in hypnotism aud mesmerism, which are specifically defined as animal magnetism called human will is the pancea for the world's ills?

Christ Jesus completely eschewed any use of the carnal will, well knowing that it possesses none of the joy and strength of diviae Love which regenerates both mind and body. Indeed he understands the powerlessness of human will, for he said, "I can of mine own self do nothing: because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me. If I bear witness of myself, my witaess is not true."

Paul declared that the unrighteous mammon "changed the truth of God into a lie and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator." Therefore the basis of all evil, animality and disease is a lie; without mind intelligence or power. Therefore any use of this animal will or therapeutic suggestion is a lie about God or Truth. This carnal mind being a lie, no one can ever explain a lie as something; for "who can understand his errors," asked the psalmist? Truth on the other hand can always be understood, and the understanding of Truth casts out error as dew before the sun. We are learning in Christian Science to recover our divine inheritance of dominion over all the sickness and sin and in consequence we are learning to experience more of the joy of that blessed freedom from error by the understanding of Truth.

Mrs. Eddy's Discovery.

Before Mrs. Eddy discovered Christian Science, she had been searching for years along this line of mental causation She had been studying homeopathy and learned the mental nature of disease, and that the higher attenuations of medicine which contained the least of the drug and the most mind we were the most powerful She continued her investigations beyond homeopathy to a mental standpoint, with the question ever before her, whether matter or Mind heals the sick.

In her subsequent investigations of mental influences she learned that the carnal will or magnetic healing was absolutely opposed to her own ideals of mental healing as practiced by the inspired Christians, and she turned from it. She possessed a spiritual insight that others failed to appreciate. Surely God was even then guiding her up to the right understanding of primitive Christian healing. Indeed she submitted to all manner of stress and trial, but withal proving a special fitness to receive the revelation of Truth, by clinging so naturally to her ideal of right and forsaking the counterfeit.

It was at this period of her experience that the great spiritual light dawned upon her consciousness, and found her waiting and prepared to receive the message. The circumstance which brought this spiritual awakening and thereby established her conclusions was her remarkable recovery. In the year of 1866, from an injury caused hy an accident. She was seeking to consol her suffering sense by reading passages from the Scriptures when she caught the depth of its spiritual import and was instantly healed This was the vindication of her long search, for it was the Spirit that quickened and she knew it

Now that Mrs Eddy had found the Comforter, which is the "Spirit of truth, and which heals the sick, she resumed her search of the Scriptures for a scientific explanation of it, that she might impart it to others. She soon learned that the healing operates according to a divine law, and sha hegan to write out her observations. These writings formed the basis of her more completo work known as "Science and Health with Key to Scriptures, which was first published in 1875.

The Text-Book

This wonderful treatise on Christian Science presents so accurate an exposition of its Science that thousands of people have been cured of all forms of chronic and acute diseases, hy the simple reading of that hook, fulfilling the Scripture, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Mrs. Eddie has religiously excluded any mere opinion on the subject, confining herself strictly to declaring the facts as they exist. It cannot for that reason be the human opinion of a woman, for no one can either make or change the law. The facts of the divine law have been presented with such precision and grace that all may read, and understand, and he free. Indeed the last chapter in this book, "Science and Health," known as the chapter on "Fruitage," contains a hundred pages of testimonials in evidence and proof of the fact that its study has healed all manner of sin, sickness, disease and infidelity. Surely by such works of redemption, Mrs. Eddy has become the greatest benefactor to suffering humanity since the time of the primitive Christians.

There are some, however, who have found it difficult to grasp the author's meaning in their study of the Christian Science text-book. Indeed there are some intelligent people who have confessed to this difficulty. On the other hand, the smallest school boy has been known to gain a sufficient understanding of its teachings to heal himself and others. This seeming obscurity to the riper intellect is occassioned by a wrong method of approach. He approaches the study of Christian Science from as material a viewpoint as he would the study of physiology. But as one has to think mathematically to learn mathematics, so one must think spiritually to understand Christian healing.

The Master said, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." We discover therefore certain needful qualities in the child, as first footsteps to an understanding of Christian healing. These are humility, spiritual receptivity, and teachableness—three qualities so native to the child that if lost, they must be regained to reach the verities of Spirit.

Conclusion

Whatever else may be said about her this fact should portray the true character of the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science; for those childlike qualities must have been uppermost in her thought to discover so accurately this "Spirit of truth" or divine Comforter. Indeed she is a true friend to all lovers of Truth She has presented its true meaning of liberation and liberty, and thereby won the boundless gratitude of humanity.

How clear it is that a book indicates the quality or character of the author's mind. We can know the mind of Shakespeare to-day by reading his books. We can discern the kind of man, whether he was good or evil, by his writings. In like manner the purity of Mrs. Eddy's thought is clearly portrayed by her writings, for she is a faithful disciple of her own teachings. To understand the works is to understand the author, and it follows that to understand the author is to understand the works. This is why Jesus said, "no man can do a miracle in my name and lightly speak evil of me," and it follows just as truly that no one can lightly speak evil of the author of Science and Health and understand its teachings Paul had to change his thought concerning the early Christians and their teachings, and his understanding was coincident with his life afterwards. It should be a reasonable thing in a Christian land for the teachings of our Master and Wayshower to be fulfilled. Christian Science has penetrated the mystery of his words and works; and in all that we do, we are asked to observe Mrs. Eddy's enjoiameat, "Follow your leader only so far as she follows Christ."

Courier Grange Column

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met in regular session August 30, with twenty seven members present and one visitor from South Arm.

One candidate was found waiting and was duly installed in first and second degree.

On account of the lecturer being absent the program was short. Song by the grange. Reading by Will Steenburg and the question, "Is a hen a bird?" was thoroughly discussed by the members. It was the opinion of all that a hen is a bird.

For the good of the order a number of good subjects was brought up by brothers John Knudsen and Will Steenburg, about attending Pomona grange more regular. It was then decided that the grange have refreshments at our next meeting. Arrangements were made for a dance at the grange hall Thursday eveuing, September 8. Committee John Knudsen, Will Walker and Peter Mitchell.

Grange closed in regular form to meet again in two weeks.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony grange at their last regular meeting had a Ceres program conducted by Sister Marcia H. Burdick, Ceres of our grange, the principal feature of which was the reading of Senator Ingalls' "Tribute to Grass" by H. L. Wilson. A discussion on the question, Resolved that grass is king over corn, led by Brother W. C. Burdick, in which due credit was given corn for its many uses, but it was believed by all that Ingalls was right and that the failure of the grass crop would produce a greater famine than the failure of the corn crop. The meeting was composed of different preparations of corn. All agreed that though grass might be king over corn we would be sorry to be without corn.

Next meeting will be held on Tuesday evening, September 13.

PLACING OF TREES.

How to Plant Them on Streets, Lawns and About Houses.

Valuable suggestions on how to plant and care for trees to an advantage are contained in the following instructions prepared by the national council of horticulture:

Street trees should never be planted to be ultimately less than forty feet apart. Most of the better shade trees are slow of growth. It is advisable to plant quicker growing trees between them for immediate effect, to be cut out later, when they begin to crowd and injure each other.

Often when this time comes the quick growing tree is so much larger and finer looking that the owner's heart fails him, and he compromises by hacking the branches off all the row, ruining them all and affording only temporary relief. In a few years the quicker growing varieties begin to die, and soon a straggly row of melancholy cripples exist where might have been noble specimens, good for generations to come.

Trees should never be planted so as to shade too densely a building where humans or animals abide. The sun must reach every part of a dwelling at least part of the day or the doctor will be a frequent visitor.

Trees must not be planted in the center of a lawn. At the side of the rear is the place for them. A spreading apple tree or two in the back yard are good for shade and for fruit if they are sprayed to kill insects and fungous diseases.

If the house is too densely shaded use the ax ruthlessly and open up a place to admit air and light. If two trees crowd each other select the best, or the best located, and cut down the other unless it is small enough to move. Don't trim. Cut down. One perfect tree is of more value than a yard full of crippel or stunted specimens.

WATERING PLANTS.

How to Regulate the Moisture and Have Fine Growers.

Proper regulation of moisture is the greatest factor in securing healthy plant growth. While plants can withstand great extremes in temperature, corresponding extremes in moisture will surely tend to ruin if not kill even the strongest plants.

Water should be given only when needed and then in such copious quantities that the soil is thoroughly soaked. When potting plants space should always be left at the top for pouring in water. An inch or an inch and a half will suffice.

Consider the kind of plant you are watering. Soft stemmed kinds, especially those with large leaves, will require much more water than hard wooded, slow growing kinds. While the former easily recover from drouths the hard wooded suffer permanently from extremes.

The character of the soil should also regulate watering. Heavy clay soils sour easily, while very light loam soils dry out quickly, and unless carefully watched plants in them will wilt. In either case it is better to water thoroughly and less frequently than to water sparingly and often.

The seasons and time of day should also be watched. Plants not in active growth should be watered sparingly until they have regained their foliage. Watering in the evening just before dark greatly aids fungous diseases, as the foliage remains wet through the night.

How to Obtain a Supple Waist.

An exercise to strengthen the muscles of the back, hip and abdomen is the following: Lie quite flat upon the floor, all the muscles held straight, arms folded across the chest, toes pointed. Raise the body to an upright sitting position and lower it gently to first position again four or five times. This will strengthen the muscles about the region called the waist line, giving the suppleness so much desired. A little of this goes a long way, remember, so be careful not to do more than the prescribed four or five raisings. At first it will perhaps be quite impossible to lift the body. If so catch the toes under the edge of a bureau or washstand, thus holding the feet down. This will enable even a weak person to raise the trunk. It is sometimes as well to work up to this gradually by raising first the head only, then the head and shoulders, finally the whole trunk.

How to Clean Plumes.

If the plume is only slightly soiled it may be cleaned by being placed in a wide mouthed bottle, such as a fruit jar, and then being covered with gasoline to which a little white soap jelly has been added. It must be covered tight and left for twenty-four hours, shaking the contents occasionally. Take from the vessel and rinse in clear gasoline. Keep away from the fire. Another method said to be good is to cover the feather with a paste made from laundry starch and alcohol. When quite dry the starch should be shaken from the plume.

How to Cook Curried Eggs.

Cook six eggs in boiling water twenty minutes. Cool, remove from the shells, cut into quarters and arrange on a warm dish. Pour over the following sauce: Rub the bottom of a small frying pan with onion, pour in one gill of stock and place over the fire. Mix one teaspoonful of cornstarch and one-quarter teaspoonful of curry powder with one gill of milk and stir into the boiling stock. Season with one-third teaspoonful salt and a little pepper. Simmer for five minutes and then add teaspoonful butter.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRICK HIGHWAYS

They Are Durable if Properly Put Together.

PREPARING CEMENT FILLER.

After Road Is Completed It Should Be Rolled Thoroughly With a Roller Weighing Not Less Than Three Nor More Than Five Tons—Lay Blocks on Clean, Hard Sand Cushion.

Roadways of brick, if properly constructed, will prove to be as lasting as highways built of any other material. A good method for towns contemplating the construction of brick roads to follow is one used by road experts during a recent experimentation, which is as follows:

All brick should be strictly pavers of the size commercially known as block, the widths of which should not vary more than one-eighth of an inch. They should be thoroughly annealed, tough and durable, regular in size, shape and evenly burned.

HIGHWAY OF BRICK.

(From Good Roads Magazine, New York.)

When broken the block should show a dense stonelike body, uniform in color inside, free from lumps of uncrushed clay, lime, air pockets, cracks or marked laminations; kiln marks or surface cracks must not exceed three-sixteenths of an inch in depth.

All blocks so distorted in burning as to lay unevenly in the pavement should be rejected.

All blocks should be tested for abrasion and absorption, the limits of loss by abrasion test and amount of absorption to be determined by the engineer in charge of the work.

The filler should be composed of one part each of clean sharp sand and portland cement. The sand should be dry. The mixture, not exceeding one-third bushel of the sand, together with a like amount of cement, should be placed in the box and mixed dry until the mass assumes an even and unbroken shade. Then water should be added, forming a liquid mixture of a consistency of thin cream.

The sides and edges of the brick should be thoroughly wet before the filler is applied by being gently sprinkled.

The mixture must be removed from the box to the street surface with a scoop shovel, all the while being stirred in the box as the same is being thus emptied. The box for this purpose shall be 4 feet 8 inches long, 30 inches wide and 14 inches deep, resting on legs of different lengths, so that the mixtures will readily flow to the corner of the box, the bottom of which should be six inches above the pavement. This mixture from the moment it touches the brick should be thoroughly swept into the joints.

Two such boxes should be provided in case the street is twenty feet or less in width; exceeding twenty feet in width, three boxes should be used.

The work of filling should thus be carried forward in line until an advance of fifteen to twenty yards has been laid, when the same force and appliances shall be turned back and cover the same space in like manner, except to make the proportion two-thirds portland cement and one-third sand.

To avoid the possibility of thickening at any point there should be a man with a sprinkling can, the head perforated with small holes, sprinkling gently the surface ahead of the sweepers.

Within one-half to three-quarters of an hour after this last coat is applied, and the grout between the joints has fully subsided and the initial set is taking place the whole surface must be slightly sprinkled and all surplus mixture left on the tops of the brick swept into the joints, bringing them up flush and full.

After the joints are thus filled flush with the top of the brick and sufficient time for hardening has elapsed, so that the coating of sand will not absorb any moisture from the cement mixture, one-half inch of sand shall be spread over the whole surface, and in case the work is subjected to a hot summer sun an occasional sprinkling, sufficient to dampen the sand, should be followed for two or three days.

After brick in pavements are inspected and the surface is swept clean the pavement shall then be rolled with a roller weighing not less than three nor more than five tons.

RURAL CARRIERS SIXTH CONVENTION

Of Charlevoix, Antrim and Kalkaska Counties

HELD AT EAST JORDAN LABOR DAY

Program Was Interesting Both to Patrons and Carriers

Good Roads Earle Gave Principal Address. How Charlevoix County Loses Out on Good Roads Proposition.

The sixth Semi-Annual Convention of the Rural Letter Carriers' Association of Antrim, Kalkaska and Charlevoix counties was held Monday afternoon; the session being in Votruba Hall. The weather was most inauspicious, a soaking rain falling which cut down the attendance and incidentally crippling the program. But considering the weather draw back there was a good attendance when President R. A. Printnall called to order at 2:00 p. m., after the business portion of the meeting had been transacted.

The program opened with singing by the audience, "America," J. G. Holiday presiding at the organ. The singing, or something, we may say in passing, "brought down the house" or at a part of it, as the chairs, which the president had warned were none too solid on their legs, fully justified the caution as the audience were being seated.

After an appropriate invocation by Rev. A. D. Grigsby, Postmaster F. A. Kenyon on behalf of the village and the local rural carriers voiced a warm welcome to the guests from ontside. He was followed in response by Fred H. Tomkins, of Mancelona, who recounted some of the difficulties experienced in getting here, among other things fording a river, repairing a culvert, and chopping out four trees from the highway, and then making the last eight miles by train.

The violin solo which was scheduled for the next number had to be omitted owing to the inability to get a piano for accompaniment though Mr. Webster was ready for his part, also the duet of Messrs. Lalonde and Lindrath was passed over, the gentlemen not being present.

"Karriers' Kicks," presented by E. McClain, of Central Lake, was a taking talk that should have been heard by all patrons of rural routes.

Mr. McClain claimed that the Rural carriers were, as a class, the most honest body in the employ of Uncle Sam as the statistics showed less than one in 1,500 guilty of peculation. A possible explanation of this (which he did not give) is that this is a comparatively new branch of the service and the men have not had time yet to "get wise" to the ropes.

One point which the speaker emphasized was that the carrier in his official round is supposed to move in a fixed schedule of time and they all try to do this. But, it frequently happens that when late in getting started for any cause whatever, they are apt to be met by many patrons at the box and asked the cause of the delay or delayed still farther by what a little foresight on the part of the patron could have prevented. If they grant the requests it makes them still later. If they do not the patrons are mad at what they term discourtesy.

Next he spoke of the location of the R. F. D. boxes and said a traveller could tell the character of a farmer by the character of his box post and the condition of the box and urged that the patrons take a little more pains to have the boxes placed and kept in better positions.

In the matter of the supplies he urged that the patrons more generally purchase of the carrier. The object of this is not the pecuniary benefit of the carrier for not a cent of it goes to him, but each day a record is kept of the business of each route and on this record depends the permanency of the service. The patrons by purchasing of the carrier are simply helping themselves.

He also spoke of the necessity for keeping the roads passable in the winter and made the point that the patrons who kicked most often on the carrier being late was the one who would refuse to do anything himself to help keep the roads passable.

The principal address of the afternoon was by the Hon. H. S. Earle of Detroit, his subject being, "How to Get Good Roads Cheaper." Mr. Earle has for years been a good roads advocate and has lost none of his vim in this direction. He referred to the turning down of his county road system proposition in this county a couple of years ago, and made the point that while Wayne county was now planning to expend $2,000,000 for 200 miles of cement, or as he called it "motor-no-dam" roads, that Charlevoix county tax payers would help pay for them and added that if this county wished and would furnish the placards he would see that they were placed along side the road that all might read that we had had a share in paying for the improvements. In this connection he gave figures which showed that Charlevoix county paid to the state good roads funds $905 last year. Antrim county $540. Antrim county drew from the state $5,051 in bonuses while Charlevoix county drew 000.

Mr. Earle classified roads as XX-XX-motor-no-dam roads or roads which would stand the test of having motor travel without damage, and must be built of cement or some such material; XXX or Macadam roads thoroughly built of crushed stone and liller, limestone for foundation and crushed cobble stones or trap rock for surface; XX roads or the gravel road with 60 per cent. pebbles and 40 per cent. liller. Those from the exigency of the case to be the best of the country roads; X road, the dirt road made the best that it can be with proper grade and drainage to take off the water, remembering that to make the road solid the water must be carried away, not left in the wayside in puddles to seep up and spoil the consistency of the grade; O roads are those which still have some of the mud holes and the OO roads are those that absolve the traveler from guilt of profanity when he says things on being struck with a light buggy.

As to getting roads cheaply in addition to the method of securing the state aid in good roads bonus, he urged that the gravel for roads be hauled by sleighs in winter when a 5-yard load can be hauled as readily as a 1-yard load in the summer. Also, the advisability of putting convict labor at the work of improving the highways as was being done in Colorado.

Before adjournment E. S. Carrol of Central Lake, from the resolution committee reported a resolution thanking their hosts for their warm reception by a unanimous-rising vote of thanks.

Among those present from outside were F. A. Butler, L. M. Butler, A. R. Hanshaw, E. R. Vanleuven, L. C. Smith, and Mallorie Johnson of Charlevoix, Rollo Johnson, Mrs. R. Johnson, E. S. Correll and E. McClain of Central Lake, and Fred H. Tompkins and H. J. Traill, of Mancelona.

The next semi-annual meeting of the Association will be held in Central Lake, February 22, 1911.—Enterprise.

Fancy Apples Wanted

Last fall Western Michigan scored on the much advertised apple regions of the west by putting on exhibition in Chicago one of the finest displays of apples ever seen. The people of the west were chagrined. This year Western Michigan should again win first honors, and she expects to but in order to make assurance doubly sure the co-operation of every apple grower in the region is called for. Every grower who has a bushel of XXXX fancy fall or winter apples is directed to write at once to the Western Michigan Development Bureau, Traverse City, Mich., which organization is now ready to close contracts and is willing to pay the top market price.

ONE OF THE WORST

Marine Disasters in History of Lake Michigan

Pere Marquette Car Ferry No. 18 Sank Friday Morning.

One of the worst marine disasters in the history of Lake Michigan occurred Friday morning when Pere Marquette car ferry No. 18, the flagship of the fleet of five steel-car ferries owned by the Pere Marquette railroad, sunk to the bottom of Lake Michigan, 20 miles off Port Washington, with the loss of 25 lives. The loss of the boat and cargo will amount to one-half million, which is covered by insurance.

Friday morning at 5 o'clock the wireless station at Ludington caught the "C. D. Q." message, saying, "Car ferry No. 18 is sinking. Help." The flash was repeated continuously for one hour, but was unsigned. At 7:30 Friday morning Superintendent Mercereau of the car ferry line received a wireless from car ferry No. 17 saying that No. 18 had sunk after all on board had been saved. Later he received a wireless saying that only 30 had been saved. All the officers on the boat were lost when she went down.

The ferry carried a crew of fifty men. The cause of the accident is unknown. At the time of the disaster there was a strong northwest wind and a fairly heavy sea running, but there was nothing dangerous in this direction.

No. 18 was the largest, finest and most costly ferry on the great lakes, and left Ludington at midnight for Milwaukee with twenty-nine cars and four hundred tons of coal in her bunkers. No. 17 left Milwaukee at 3:30 for Ludington, and overtook her sister ship, No. 18, about five o'clock.

The names of the officers on the lost boat were: Captain, Peter Kilty; first mate, Joseph Brestinski; second mate, Walter Brown; chief engineer, Russ Lendham; assistant engineers, Chas. Roscerouz and Paul Rehmer; purser and wireless operator, Steve Sczpanek; steward, Frank J. Young.

Third Ward; G. W. Bailey, Frank McWain, Fun Heaton, C. J. Wilson, E. L. Stanford, Lyle White, Fred Hayes.

Fourth Ward; John Dillon, A. G. Urquhart.

The report was adopted.

The committee on Permanent Organization and Order of Business reported that the temporary organization be made permanent.

Dr. Conkle and R. A. Emrey were appointed tellers.

The following were elected delegates to the state convention: J. M. Harris, L. A. Moon, J. E. Converse, A. F. Hayes, H. I. McMillan, F. A. Kenyon, L. S. See, R. A. Emrey, J. E. Darrah, W. J. Gallagher.

The committee on resolutions made the following report.

Whereas, the Republicans of Charlevoix county in convention assembled again affirm their faith in the principles of government for which the Republican party has stood in the past and to which it is committed for the future, declaring their unalterable confidence in the national administration, in its efforts to correct evils, abate abuses and to accomplish all the purposes of government, commensurate with the needs and wishes of all the people under its flag.

Therefore, we heartily endorse the administrations of President Taft earnestly commending him for his efforts in maintaining and enforcing Republicans principles and polices.

We endorse the Republican candidates selected at the primaries September 6, and pledge our earnest support to them, heartily recommending them to the voters of Charlevoix county, believing in their integrity, their ability and their Republicanism.

The following county committee was chosen:

Bay, A. J. Stroud; Boyne Valley, L. A. Moon; Chandler, George Gallop; Charlevoix, E. W. Conher; Evangeline, Frank Bricker; Eveline, M. A. McDonald; Hayes, Fred J. Smith; Hudson, Ralph Dye; Marion, Jas. H. Adams; Melrose, J. E. Darrah; Norwood, Henry Wagner; Pealne, Hugh E. Boyle; St. James, M. J. McCann; South Arm, J. H. Graf, J. H. Milford, R. L. Lorraine; Wilson, Thos. Shepherd.

Boyne City; First ward, Frank Blair; second ward, Charles Santose; third ward, Fred Hayes; fourth ward, A. G. Urquhart.

Charlevoix; First ward, L. S See; second ward, Alonzo A. Hanshaw; third ward, W. J. Weikel.

H. I. McMillan presented the name of Hon. W. J. Pearson for chairman of the county committee, and Mr. Pearson was unanimously elected. J. M. Harris presented the name of H. I. McMillan for secretary of the committee and Mr. McMillan was unanimously elected.

Remarks were made by Hon. W. J. Pearson, H. I. McMillan, Judge Mayne, Judge Harris and Mr. Wilson.

WOULDN'T BE BOSSED

By a Woman so Wouldn't Stay at Poor House.

George W. Bailey Dissatisfied With Short Stay There.

The Saturday Boyne City Journal prints the following about a well known resident of this county:

George W. Bailey (By Beebe, for short) did not stay at the poor house yesterday but returned last night. He gives as the reason that he did not like the way they used him over there. First, he didn't like to be bossed around by a woman and they wouldn't let him play with the girls but made him stay with the boys all of the time. He saw several sweet little things ranging in age from 62 to 87 but was not allowed to even speak to them and so he got huffy and came home. He managed to "swipe" a couple of the biggest potatoes on the farm, however, and that is some consolation to him.

The above story about our genial ex-supervisor and present assessor, as well as the notice in yesterday's paper, were written as near as possible as they were given by the old joker but we learn further that his ride to the county house was a business trip and that he found the farm in excellent condition. The crops are fine and the stock all looked fat and healthy. Mr. Bailey speaks in high praise of the conditions which prevail on the county farm.

Banner Crop.

Here is an item for the benefit of those who think that Northern Michigan can raise nothing but bears and woodchucks:

September 13.—M. K. Chew of Hayes township threshed 111 bushels of good, plump winter wheat from three acres of stumpy, new ground, heavily a big load of rakings that would have threshed big bushels but which he fed to his chickens and pigs in the straw, making a total of 121 bushels, or forty bushels per acre. He also threshed ninety-two bushels of winter rye from three and one-half acres.

Michigan School for the Deaf.

The Michigan School for the Deaf at Flint, will open for the fifty-sixth term on Wednesday, September 21st.

The constitution provides for the education of the deaf and the state has provided this school where every child, too deaf to be educated in the public schools, can receive free tuition, board, medical attention, etc.

The school is in every respect up-to-date, great attention being given to training in speech and trades. Dr. F. D. Clarke is the superintendent. The school is beautifully situated in the city of Flint.

SEVERAL CHANGES IN TEACHERS

New Faces Will be Seen at the Rostrum

WHEN SCHOOL OPENS NEXT MONDAY

Many Improvements have been made in School Rooms

Talk Over the Matter of Starting Your Children in School with the Superintendent—Very Important Matter.

It is a good deal of satisfaction for teachers and pupils to begin school with bright and clean school rooms, clean desks without mars or scratches, bright walls and clean windows. Give the pupils a school room to be proud of and they will take pride in keeping it so.

The Board of Education have expended a goodly amount of time and money in preparing the school rooms for the beginning of school. Under the efficient management of the janitor, Mr. Chase Howard, the rooms have been thoroughly cleaned, the walls brightened with delicate tinted kalsomine, the floors mopped and all dust, as far as possible, removed from the building. The desks and a good deal of the wood work have been given a coat of jap-a-lac varnish; nearly all of the old plaster blackboards remaining has been replaced with new slate board, and several yards of brown burlap have been placed upon the walls of each room on which the work of the pupils from day to day may be neatly mounted. In short, the school rooms present an appearance that would be a credit to any city of equal size.

The new teachers who will take up their residence in Charlevoix for the first time are: Ray I. Wise of Reed City, principal of the high school; Ione Catton of Benzonia, English teacher; Catharine Deibel of Saginaw, history and natural science; Emma Swigart of Alma, Latin and German. In the grades, Florence Wilson of Ypsilanti, will succeed Miss Lane in the seventh grade; Wilhemina Koerth of Boyne Falls, will succeed Mr. Cunningham and Alida Whiting of Monticello, Iowa, will succeed Miss Reed as critic teacher. Janie Mitchell of Ironton, will take Miss Crowell's place in the Lincoln school, and Gail Crukshank will take Miss Jarvis' place in the Washington school, Miss Jarvis having been transferred to the Central building to succeed Miss Sherman. Miss Abbie King of Kinsman, Ohio, will be the new music and drawing teacher.

The age at which children may legally begin their school life is five years. Past experience has proven that many children are totally unprepared, both physically and mentally, for the work of the first year at this age. Pupils who require two years to do the first year's work are discouraged at the start and many of them never make a success of their school life, often dropping out at the sixth, seventh or eighth grade. In view of this many educators advocate six years for beginners, and many children would be better if not allowed to begin school until seven.

Before starting your child, consider carefully his physical condition, his nervous temperament and general ability. It would be best to talk the matter over with your physician and with the superintendent. Remember the health of your child is of nature depends a good deal on the "start" they make in school. Well begun is half done is very applicable in this case.

As a general principle, would it not be better for you to consider carefully the general health of your boy or girl before school begins, no matter at what age or in what grade they may be in? Consult your family physician, have the eyes, ears and throat examined; see that the teeth are in good condition. Good mastication means good digestion, and good digestion means a clear head. If this cannot be done before school begins, have it done as soon as possible. Give your boy or girl a good start for a successful year.

Testing Cream.

The percentage of fat in milk will have some effect upon the percentage of fat in the cream delivered by the separator. For example, when whey containing .1 to 2 per cent of fat is separated, unless the cream screw is changed, it will deliver a cream. If it may be called such, that will have to pass through the separator again before it can be churned, but just how much two creams will vary in test, one made from 5 per cent milk and the other from 4 per cent milk without changing the cream screw, we are unable to say, and we can find no data that will help us to answer this question exactly. It would be a very easy matter to determine just how much the two creams would vary in test by running some 4 and 5 per cent milk through a separator under the same conditions, then testing the two resulting creams.

Tennessee Boosters Working.

Inspired by the campaign waged by the boosters of good roads in its city, the Chattanooga Times says: "Get together everybody for a great monumental highway and boulevard between Harriman and Chattanooga, taking in Rockwood, Evansville, Dayton, Soddy—in fact, all the promising towns between the two cities. A wide built thoroughfare of that kind would be the greatest prosperity builder we could have."

Maintaining Gravel Roads.

In order to maintain a gravel road in good condition it is well to keep piles of gravel alongside at frequent intervals, so that the persons who repair the road can get the material without going too far for it. As soon as ruts or holes appear on the surface some of this good, fresh material should be added and stamped into position or kept raked smooth until properly consolidated.

Abutting Property to Help Roads.

An ordinance for resurfacing of streets and alleys of Covington, Ky., one-half the cost to be borne by abutting property owners and the other half at the cost of the city at large, has been passed by the council. Heretofore the city has borne the entire cost of resurfacing work.

ROADS OF SAND-CLAY.

They Prove to Be Very Popular Where They Are Practicable.

The following is from the latest report of the Virginia highway commissioner:

It has been the object of this department in determining the class of road to build in the various counties to utilize as far as possible local material and to construct roads most suitable to the needs of the several communities, taking into consideration the available material, the travel on the road and the financial condition of the counties. The sand-clay construction has proved very popular in the localities where it is practicable, and I hope that the roads built in this manner in the eastern and southern portions of the state will demonstrate that the roads in those sections may be greatly improved at moderate cost.

It is very important that some definite and positive legislation should be taken with reference to the maintenance of roads which are being constructed with state aid. It is certainly not understood by the people generally that gravel and macadam roads have to be maintained.

Therefore proper attention has not been given to this subject by the county authorities. There should be a law requiring the board of supervisors or road boards to make special provision for the maintenance or upkeep of the roads which have been improved by state aid, which should be so framed that this department can require the counties applying for state aid to provide the necessary funds for maintenance.

TOWNSPEOPLE INTERESTED.

Concerned In Condition of Roads as Much as Farmers.

Not a few people make the mistake of supposing that the good roads question is one for farmers mainly. "The people who live in towns," declared the Illinois state engineer recently in a good roads speech at Peoria, "are concerned in the general condition of the roads as much as the people who live out in the towns on the highways." This is very true.

While the farmers reap directly the most benefit—pleasure and convenience from good roads, the condition of the roads affects the towns vitally. The average community finds business extremely dull when the rural population is bottled up by mud.

There are times in the United States in this dawning twentieth century when conditions obtain that existed in England 300 years ago; when produce needed in town for food rots a few miles out in the country because the farmer can't haul it.

WASTE OF BAD ROADS.

About $250,000,000 Said to Be Annual Toll of Poor Highways.

Two hundred and fifty million dollars are wasted annually on bad roads in this country, which is noted for its business sagacity and thrift and which has been pronounced a great success as a business community.

Add that waste to losses occasioned by bad roads and the sum leaps to a billion a year. It is estimated that, in short, each man, woman and child in the United States bears a tax of $12.50 because of bad roads.

If this doesn't show that good roads are a national question that bulks as big as the tariff, the navy, foreign relations, commerce—anything; if it doesn't prove that the federal government ought to turn to the roads question with as much energy as it expends on anything else, then there is nothing more to be said.

Improvement Mottoes.

The amount of good work that can be accomplished by a split log drag is astonishing and must be seen before believed.

If a community can't have a "good" road it should have the best road possible. Anything is better than a "bad" road.

The beneficent effects of good roads flow to the city and the hamlet as well as to the farmer. They walk hand in hand in community of interest, and surely it is a picture beautiful to look upon and sound at the core.

Good roads are indispensable to our growth and progress, and we must not falter or wait to provide for them.

SICK PEOPLE SHOULD INVESTIGATE

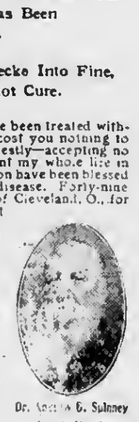
I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, I was physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.



Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the last trace of it, in blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores on the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. I have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by send, or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habit. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—yes, worth—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 52 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain lost strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began to lecture to student classes, way back in '71, so at that time I have cured many cases and are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakened manhood or any difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE in a plain sealed envelope that you can use in your own home. I am confident that you will thank me every day in your life after you have tested it for yourself.

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

ILLUSTRATIONS By MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1908 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum rails at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Neil, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winnsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER V.—Plum and Neil plan to escape on the Typhoon. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Neil's sister. She is not yet married to Strang, but some mysterious influence seems to be forcing her into the union.

CHAPTER VI.

Marion.

"But she is a mere child. Why, it seems only a year ago that I was toting her about on my shoulders! And—by George, that was a year before her mother died! She is sixteen now."

Nathaniel laughed softly.

"Tomorrow she will be making love, Neil, and before you know it she will be married and have a family of her own. I tell you she is a woman—and if you are not a fool you will take her away with Marion."

With a powerful stroke of his paddle Neil brought the canoe in to the shore.

"There!" he whispered. "You have only to cross this point to reach your boat." He stretched out his long arm and in the silence the two shook hands. "If you should happen to think of a way—that we might get Winnsome—" he added, coloring.

The sudden grip of his companion's fingers made him flinch.

"We must!" said Nathaniel.

He climbed ashore and watched Neil until he had disappeared in the wild rice. Then he turned into the woods. He looked at his watch and saw that it was only 2 o'clock. He was conscious of no fatigue; he was not conscious of hunger. To him the whole world had suddenly opened with glorious promise and in the still depths of the forest he felt like singing out his rejoicing. He had never stopped to ask himself what might be the end of this passion that had overwhelmed him; he lived only in the present, in the knowledge that Marion was not a wife, and that it was he whom fate had chosen for her deliverance. He reasoned nothing beyond the sweet eyes that had called upon him, that had burned their gratitude, their hope and their despair upon his soul; nothing beyond the thought that she would soon be free from the mysterious influence of the Mormon king and that for days and nights after that she would be on the same ship with him. He had emptied the pockets of the coat he had given Neil and now he brought forth the old letter which Obadiah had rescued from the sands. He read it over and over again as he sat for a few moments in the cool of the forest and there was no trouble in his face now. It was from a girl. He had known that girl, years ago, as Neil knew Winnsome; in years of wandering he had almost forgotten her—until this letter came. It had brought many memories back to him with shocking clearness. The old folk were still in the little home under the hill; they received his letters; they received the money he sent them each month—but they wanted him. The girl wrote with merciless candor. He had been away four years and it was time for him to return. She told him why. She wrote what they, in their loving fear of inflicting pain, would never have dared to say. At the end, in a postscript, she had asked for his congratulations on her approaching marriage.

To Nathaniel this letter had been a torment. He saw the truth as he had never seen it before—that his place was back there in Vermont, with his father and mother; and that there was something unpleasant to thinking of the girl as belonging to another. But now matters had changed. The letter was a hope and inspiration to him and he smoothed it out with tender care. What a refuge that little home among the Vermont hills would make for Marion! He trembled at the thought and his heart sang with the promise of it as he went his way again through the thick growth of the woods.

It was half an hour before he came out upon the beach. Eagerly he scanned the sea. The Typhoon was nowhere in sight and for an instant the gladness that had been in his heart gave place to a chilling fear. But the direction of the wind reassured him. Casey had probably moved beyond the jutting promontory, that swung in the form of a cart wheel from the base of the point, that he might have sea room in case of something worse than a stiff breeze. But where was the small boat? With every step adding to his anxiety Nathaniel hurried along the narrow rim of beach. He went to the very tip of the point which reached out like the white forefinger of a lady's hand into the sea; he passed the spot where he had lain concealed the preceding day; his breath came faster and faster; he ran, and called softly, and at last halted in the arch of the cart wheel with the fear full-flaming in his breast. Over all those miles of sea there was no sign of the sloop. From end to end of the point there was no boat. What did it mean? Breathlessly he tore his way through the strip of forest on the promontory until all Lake Michigan to the south lay before his eyes. The Typhoon was gone! Was it possible that Casey had abandoned hope of Nathaniel's return and was already lying off St. James with shotted gun? The thought sent a shiver of despair through him. He passed to the opposite side of the point and followed it foot by foot, but there was no sign of life, no distant flash of white that might have been the canvas of the sloop Typhoon.

There was only one thing for him to do—wait. So he went to his hiding place of the day before and watched the sea with straining eyes. An hour passed and his still aching vision saw no sign of sail; two hours—and the sun was falling in a blinding glare over the Wisconsin wilderness. At last he sprang to his feet with a hopeless cry and stood for a few moments undecided. Should he wait until night with the hope of attracting the attention of Neil and joining him in his canoe or should he hasten in the direction of St. James? In the darkness he might miss Neil, unless he kept up a constant shouting, which would probably bring the Mormons down upon him; if he went to St. James there was a possibility of reaching Casey. He still had faith in Obadiah and he was sure that the old man would help him to reach his ship; he might even assist him in his scheme of getting Marion from the island.

He would go to the councilor's. Having once decided, Nathaniel turned to the direction of the town, avoiding the use of the path which he and Obadiah had taken, but following to the forest near enough to use it as a guide. He was confident that Arbor Croche and his sheriffs were confining their man hunt to the swamp, but in spite of this belief he exercised extreme caution, stopping to listen now and then, with one hand always near his pistol. A quiet gloom filled the forest and by the tree tops he marked the going down of the sun. Nathaniel's ears ached with their strain of listening for the rumbling roar that would tell of Casey's attack on St. James.

Suddenly he heard a crackling in the underbrush ahead of him, a sound that came not from the strain of listening for the rumbling roar and in a moment he had dodged into concealment of the huge roots of an overturned tree, drawn pistol in hand. Whatever object was approaching came slowly, as if hesitating at each step—a cautious, stealthy advance, it struck Nathaniel, as he cocked his weapon. Directly in front of him, half a stone's throw away, was a dense growth of hazel and he could see the tops of the slender bushes swaying. Twice this movement ceased and the second time there came a crashing of brush and a faint cry. For many minutes after that there was absolute silence. Was it the cry of an animal that he had heard—or of a man? In either case the creature who made it had fallen in the thicket and was lying there as still as if dead. For a quarter of an hour Nathaniel waited and listened. He could no longer have seen the movement of bushes in the gathering night gloom of the forest but his ears were strained to catch the slightest sound from the direction of the mysterious thing that lay within less than a dozen rods of him. Slowly he drew himself out from the shelter of the roots and advanced step by step. Half way to the thicket a stick cracked loudly under his foot and as the sound startled the dead quiet of the forest with pistol-shot clearness there came another cry from the dense hazel, a cry which was neither that of man nor animal but of a woman; and with an answering shout Nathaniel sprang forward to meet there in the edge of the thicket the white face and outstretched arms of Marion. The girl was swaying on her feet. In her face there was a pallor that even in his instant's glance sent a chill of horror through the man and as she staggered toward him, half falling, her lips weakly forming his name Nathaniel leaped to her and caught her close in his arms. In that moment something seemed to burst within him and flood his veins with fire. Closer he held the girl, and heavier he knew that she was becoming in his arms. Her head was upon his breast, his face was crushed in her hair, he felt her throbbing and breathing against him and his lips quivered with the words that were bursting for freedom in his soul. But first there came the girl's own whispered breath—"Neil—where is Neil?"

"He is gone—gone from the island."

She had become a dead weight now and so he knelt on the ground with her, her head still upon his breast her eyes closed, her arms fallen to her side. And as Nathaniel looked into her face from which all life seemed to have fled he forgot everything but the joy of this moment—forgot all in life but this woman against his breast. He kissed her soft mouth and the closed eyes until the eyes themselves opened again and gazed at him in a startled, half understanding way, until he drew his head far back with the shame of what he had dared to do flaming in his face.

And as for another moment he held her thus, feeling the quivering life returning in her, there came to him through that vast forest stillness the distant deep-toned thunder of a great gun.

"That's Casey!" he whispered close down to the girl's face. His voice was almost sobbing in its happiness. "That's Casey—firing on St. James!"

CHAPTER VII.

The Hour of Vengeance.

For perhaps 20 seconds after the last echoes of the gun had rolled through the forest the girl lay passive in Nathaniel's arms, so close that he could feel her heart beating against his own and her breath sweeping his face. Then there came a pressure against his breast, a gentle resistance of Marion's half conscious form, and when she had awakened from her partial swoon he was holding her in the crook of his arm. It had all passed quickly, the girl had rested against him only so long as he might have told a dozen breaths and yet there had been all of a lifetime in it for Nathaniel Plum, a cycle of joy that he knew would remain with him forever. But there was something bittersweet in the thought that she was conscious of what he had done, something of humiliation as well as gladness, and still not enough of the first to make him regret that he had kissed her, that he had kissed her mouth and her eyes. He loved her, and he was glad that in those passing moments he had betrayed himself. For the first time he noticed that her face was scratched and that the sleeves of her thin waist were torn to shreds; and as she drew away from him, steadying herself with a hand on his arm, his lips were parched of words, and yet he leaned to her eagerly, everything that he would have said burning in the love of his eyes. Still irresolute in her faintness the girl smiled at him, and in that smile there was gentle accusation, the sweetness of forgiveness, and measureless gratitude, and it was yet light enough for him to see that with these there had come also a flush into her cheeks and a dazzling glow into her eyes.

"Neil has escaped!" she breathed. "And you—"

"I was going back to you, Marion!" He spoke the words hardly above a whisper. The beautiful eyes so close to him drew his secret from him before he had thought. "I am going to take you from the island!"

With his words there came again that sound of a great gun rolling from the direction of St. James. With a frightened cry the girl staggered to her feet, and as she stood swaying mistedly, her arms half reached to him, Nathaniel saw only mortal dread in the whiteness of her face.

"Why didn't you go? Why didn't you go with Neil?" she moaned. Her breath was coming in sobbing excitement. "Your ship is—at St. James!"

"Yes, my ship is at St. James, Marion!" His voice was tremulous with triumph, with gladness, with a tenderness which he could not control. He put an arm half round her waist to support her trembling form and to his joy she did not move away from him. His hand was buried in the richness of her loose hair. He bent until his lips touched her silken tresses. "Neil has told me everything—about you," he added softly. "My ship is bombarding St. James, and I am going to take you from the island!"

Not until then did Marion free herself from his arm and then so gently that when she stood facing him he felt an reproof. No longer did shame send a flush into his face. He had spoken his love, though not in words and he knew that the girl understood him. It did not occur to him to these moments that he had known this girl for only a few hours, that until now a word had never passed between them. He was conscious only that he had loved her from the time he saw her through the king's window, that he had risked his life for her, and that she knew why he had leaped into the arena at the whipping-post.

The words she spoke now came like a dash of cold water in his face.

"Your ship is not bombarding St. James, Captain Plum!" she exclaimed. Darkness hid the terror in her face but he could hear the tremble of it in her voice. "The Typhoon has been captured by the Mormons and those guns are—guns of triumph—and not—" She caught her breath in a convulsive sob. "I want you to go—I want you to go—with Neil!" she pleaded.

"So Casey is taken!"

He spoke slowly, as if he had not heard her last words. For a moment he stood silent, and as silently the girl stood and watched him. She guessed the despair that was raging in his heart, but when he spoke to her she could detect none of it in his voice.

"Casey is a fool," he said, unconsciously repeating Obadiah's words. "Marion, will you come with me? Will you leave the island—and join your brother?"

The hope that had risen in his heart was crushed as Marion drew farther away from him.

"You must go alone," she replied. With a powerful effort she steadied her voice. "Tell Neil that he has been condemned to death. Tell him that—if he loves me—he will not return to the island."

"And I?"

From the distance she saw his arms stretched like shadows toward her.

"And you—"

Her voice was low, so low that he could hardly hear the words she spoke, but its sweetness thrilled him.

"And you—if you love me—will do this thing for me. Go to Neil. Save his life for me!"

She had come to him through the gloom, and in the luster of the eyes that were turned up to him Nathaniel saw again the power that swayed his soul.

"You will go?"

"I will save your brother—if I can!"

"You can—you can—" she breathed. In an ecstasy of gratitude she seized one of his hands in both of her own. "You can save him!"

"For you—I will try."

"For me—"

She was so close that he could feel the throbbing of her bosom. Suddenly he lifted his free hand and brushed back the thick hair from her brow and turned her face until what dim light there still remained of the day glowed in the beauty of her eyes. "I will keep him from the island if I can," he said, looking deep into them,

Official Call

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The State Convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Wayne Auditorium in the city of Detroit on Thursday, the sixth day of October, 1910, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon for the purpose of nominating candidates for State offices, for the election of a Republican State Central Committee, and a Chairman thereof, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the Convention.

Pursuant to law, Wednesday, the 14th day of September, 1910, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the County Convention of the Republican Party for the election of delegates to the Republican State Convention hereby called, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

Under the resolution of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the State Convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

By order of the Republican State Central Committee.

GERRIT J. DIKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 28th, 1910.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to ten delegates.

IN the days of the old convention system, when the victors and the vanquished were brought before the convention to show themselves after the battle was over, a certain candidate, who had been among the defeated made this speech:

"Gentlemen of the convention; As a lawyer I feel as we lawyers generally do. When a case goes against us, we damn the judge, we damn the jury and we think everybody is damn fools but ourselves. But when we think it all over, we say to ourselves, "How in the devil could it have been any other way."

That seems to be the result of last week's primary. After a week's deliberation, from United States Senator down we wonder how any other result could have been possible and whatever sore spots the defeated candidates may have had, are gone, and everybody is prepared to dig in and help elect the whole ticket, satisfied that it means a new deal which will be for the better in national and state affairs, and the continuation of county officials whose record in office is beyond criticism, even by their political opponents. The new men, Robbins and Fitch, are well qualified and the vote which they received at the hands of the people is their assurance of election next November.

TRADE SUGGESTIONS.

Little Ways In Which a Retailer May Safeguard Himself.

Progression is a combination of analysis, thought and quick action.

Wrapping paper, sacks, twine, etc., cost money. Every time you use too much paper, a larger sack than is necessary, it is wasting money.

It may not seem very much to you. The expense of a retail store is large in proportion to the profit.

Making a No. 6 sack do instead of a No. 8 or 10 is saving money. The results of such savings will show very plainly at the end of the year when the books are balanced.

This should not be carried to extremes. Packages must be neat. Protection must be given to all foods.

Your salesmanship consists largely of suggestion. Price has little influence if your suggestion to the customer has the right ring.

Take the case of a grocery, for instance: Mrs Jones may never think of buying peanut butter. The suggestion that it is a very excellent relish, supplemented with a little spread on a crisp cracker, will make the sale regardless of price.

It is the unusual things that sell best through suggestions. Your knowledge of the goods must be sufficient to make an impression.

You will become better acquainted with the various items in stock if you examine personally some of them.

Take the biggest profit items in the store. If you are a clerk, ask the "boss" for permission to fix up a window and also make a front display in the store.

Make it a point to talk the goods displayed to every customer. This sort of selling effort will in time show a marked increase in sales.

Study the various grades and plan a selling talk for each one.

To supplement this you can possibly obtain consent of the "boss" to print a few hundred circulars for insertion in packages. It doesn't require any extra time or work to slip a circular in every order, and the results will be remarkable.

CARING FOR STREET TREES.

Method of French Communities Worth Putting Into Practice.

One of our leading horticulturists says: "When I was employed in the parks of Paris, I had a fine opportunity to study probably the best system of tree planting in the world. It is simply surprising to see how well the trees are managed there, and to an enormous extent they are planted in the center, along the river, on the boulevards, on the radiating avenues and thoroughfares and for hundreds of miles along the boulevards of the suburbs. The trees all took vigorous and promising. Every tree is trained and pruned so as to form a symmetrical head with perfect, clean stem. Every tree in the much frequented places is protected with a cast or wrought iron tree guard and staked when young and is further provided with a cast iron grating six to eight feet wide, which effectually prevents the ground from getting hard about the roots, results of any attention they may require when young and enables abundance of water being quickly absorbed in the dry season."

This system is well worth imitating in some of our rural sections.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

"Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink, that continue until night until wine inflame them."

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell says, "Over twenty years' medical work among seafaring men, largely in the artic waters, has absolutely convinced me that alcohol is not essential as a stimulant or food. It is far and away the most serious danger the seaman of this day has to contend with."

Edward Boyd, journalist, says, "The most successful men in America today are those who never lift a wineglass to their lips."

There can be little doubt of the truth in Horace Mann's assertion, "Let there be entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks throughout this country during the period of a single generation and a mob would be as impossible as combustion without oxygen."

The physician to King Edward says, "Total abstinence is rational self control in respect to something which is fraught with untold risks."

From the Union Signal: "Neuchatel has been the seat of the Swiss absinthe manufacture. It was greatly to the credit, therefore, of the physicians of the place that they took ground squarely in favor of absinthe prohibition. The Swiss bishop, too, in a letter which woke the echoes throughout Switzerland, took a similar stand."

A southwestern issue points out what a model saloon is and says, "A number of New Mexico towns have really model saloons. They fully obey the law. They do not sell to drunkards, or to minors, no gambling, no lewd talk or swearing is allowed. No wife ever calls her husband no mother calls her son out of them. No drunkard comes staggering out of them. No boys learn the drink habit, no girls are sent to ruin there.

"They are really model saloons. They are closed on Sunday, closed at the proper hours at night, closed on election days. They are Nailed Up.

At the recent meeting of the New Jersey State Brewers' Association in the city of Newark, while a dozen or more of the party were seated at lunch, it was noticed that none were served with alcoholic beverages, but drank vichy or apollinaris instead. A pert young president of a Jersey City brewery came in to the lunch room and looking over the table remarked, "Is this a prohibition convention? I won't sit with such a crowd," and took a seat at another table, and promptly ordered beer to be served. With a laugh the others cried, "We're sorry not to be good enough company for you, Gus, but all at this table are on the water wagon."

It has been discovered that this same Gus is selling real estate in the neighborhood of his home, incorporates a strict prohibition clause in the title deeds. He company owns hundreds of "beer saloons and places them near the homes of the poor man, but he takes good care that nobody shall place such nuisances where they can offend his family.

Mark Twain's Advice.

Mark Twain was a firm believer in the higher education of woman, but Hartford still remembers a speech he made one June to a platform of Hartford girl graduates.

This speech, a humorous attack on the college girl, ended:

"Go forth. Fall in love. Marry. Set up housekeeping. And then, when your husband wants a shirt ironed, send out for a gridiron to do it with."

For Cows on the Pasture.

Under average conditions it is rather doubtful whether it pays to feed grain when cows are running in good pasture. If it seems feasible that they should be fed some concentrates at this time, feeds rich in carbohydrates will supplement the pasture better than those containing a high percentage of protein. Grass is comparatively rich in protein, and therefore a feed or a combination of feeds rich in carbohydrates supplements it better than a mixture rich in protein.

When Feeding Alfalfa.

When alfalfa is fed green it should not be cut when the dew or rain is on it. The best way is to cut on a bright day sufficient feed for two or three days. Cut alfalfa when the dew is off, spread it well and let it lie until late in the afternoon, then put it up in small heaps and cover it.

THEATRICAL

"The Bowery Detective."

One of the government's most able sleuths will be here on Monday evening, September 19. This announcement should not be read without any fear or scruples of trouble on the part of the community. Honest law abiding people deal with pleasure a "Detective" to their midst and the name only strikes terror to the lawless and unscrupulous criminal.

The "Bowery Detective" on Monday, September 19, at the Charlevoix Opera House, is to amuse the patrons of wholesome and instructive amusements, as it were, holding up the mirror of nature and revealing the mysteries of the workings of crime in some of our big cities. The story is a very pretty love story of heart interests, showing what disappointment will cause some unscrupulous villians to resort to, to blast and ruin the life of another and how by the untiring efforts of the ever watchful detective, crime finally gets its reward and justice achieves its victory over wrong doers.

The management of the present company have saved neither labor or expense in putting forth the present company to interpet this great play, and has surrounded the same with scenic effects suitable to the action of the play, giving it the naturalness of life. Many pleasing and novel specialties will be introduced during the action of the play.

Prominent in the cast is W. H. Hartigan, who has achieved much fame as "Dr. Jeckyll and Mr. Hyde."

A ROMANCE.

The Story as It Was Told by Picture Postals.

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

"Mike" was not his true name. It had been bestowed by the clerks at "Station D" because of the never failing good humor and ready wit which characterized the stout, red haired, postman, who had been in the service of the United States government as long as the men could remember, and so generally was the name adopted that Mike himself had almost forgotten the proper one.

The picture postals which found their way into his bag were a source of unfailing delight, and often Mike could follow the travels of some favorite by merely reading the cards as they were sent home.

As he neared the stone house with the white rosebush growing beside the veranda the postman unconsciously quickened his steps and searched eagerly among the letters, for he never liked to disappoint Miss Isabel. She was one of the few who had not changed entirely in the process of growing up. Mike ascended the steps, looking admiringly at the picture of a very blue lake surrounded by very green trees. Upon the opposite side of the card he read:

"I GUESS IT'S FOR THE NURSE."

Dear Mother—Cousin Robert and his friend met me at the station. I am having a fine time. ISABEL.

"So she's away," Mike mused, a little disappointedly. "Well, she'll have the good time all right." And so it seemed, judging from the many gala postals interspersed with thick letters which were received daily at the stone house.

Miss Isabel wrote constantly of pleasure trips with "Cousin Robert and his friend," who later came to be designated as "Robert's friend Billy," and then, when the long summer was drawing to an end the obliging Cousin Robert's company seemed to be dispensed with, for the postals read simply, "Billy and I were here today."

Mike chuckled as he handed one of these cards to the maid. "She won't be coming home in a hurry," he said confidentially. But in this he was mistaken, for she came smilingly to meet him a few days afterward.

"I suppose I will have a bundle of letters for you soon," he remarked.

"I hope so," she answered gayly.

He searched expectantly through his pack next morning, and, sure enough, there it was, "I will write you tonight—yours, Billy," while a printed verse stated the fact that "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

They came thick and fast after that—letters, cards, a photograph or two and bulging little packages, all addressed in the same free, bold hand which Mike learned to recognize instantly. Isabel was always there as he came down the street, apparently absorbed in sewing or hovering about the rosebush with a great pretense of examining its leaves. When Mike presented his offering she would receive it with the open delight of a child.

"It's from Billy," he would say and go away laughing at her confusion. The old postman was vastly interested in the unfolding love story, but there came a time when the girl waited in vain, and he dreaded to meet her questioning eyes, for Billy's letters had ceased abruptly.

Mike pondered deeply. The shrewd eyes could read more than postal cards, and he was sure that she had been too fond of this Billy to send him away. Had the mother interfered or—his face darkened savagely—was the fellow himself to blame?

One morning as Mike was preparing to start out upon his rounds the familiar bold handwriting flashed into view as though in answer to his troubled thoughts. The freckled hand trembled as he held the postal up to the light. It was the picture of a great ocean steamer, and the message upon the addressed side danced dizzily for a moment before his eyes. "Have engaged passage for Oct. 5," he read. "Goodby forever, little Isabel Drew. Billy."

And the old postman fought with the greatest temptation of his life—to destroy a part of Uncle Sam's mail. When he saw the little white lady leaning back wearily in her chair upon the veranda Mike was certain that he would have preferred to pay the full penalty due such a crime than to have been the bearer of this cruel missive. He avoided her eyes as he turned away, but there was a tremulous little catch in the voice which thanked him.

To his great relief, Isabel no longer awaited his coming, and when he next left a letter for her mother it was a white capped nurse who responded to his ring.

"Young lady sick?" Mike asked in a tone which was supposed to express only polite interest, and the nurse answered gravely:

"Yes; she is very sick indeed."

He stopped to inquire every day after that and then pursued his way gloomily. "Mike is getting peevish," the clerks at the office said in surprise. An air of intense anxiety seemed to pervade the atmosphere of the stone house, and the bell was muffled, for the patient had reached the crisis when Mike again appeared at the door. He was awkwardly holding a parcel wrapped in tissue paper.

"She used to like white roses," he said to the nurse. "Put these in her room."

At length news came that Isabel was really getting better. The air of depression vanished. Once more Mike's wildest sounded cheerily. Then he became puzzled over a letter which unmistakably bore Billy's handwriting and yet was not directed to the girl he had treated so cruelly. Mike finally came to the conclusion that the fellow had written to the nurse desiring information concerning her patient, and he forgetfully hoped that she "wouldn't make it up with him."

He fingered the letter guiltily as he approached the house and saw Isabel herself standing upon the veranda. A sudden moisture filled the sympathetic postman's eye, for she was such a small, white Isabel. Her dark hair had been cut, and the short curls seemed to change her back again into the little girl who had raced to meet him upon her way from school.

"I am glad you are better," he said heartily, and she smiled.

"Thank you," she answered softly. "You have been very kind. Any letters today?"

Mike drew a long breath. "There's one here," he said hesitatingly. "I guess it's for the nurse—addressed to Mrs. William D. Rhodes."

Isabel extended an eager hand. "Why, Mike," she said, laughing happily, "don't you know—that I am Mrs. William Rhodes?"

He stared at her unbelievingly. "You," he repeated dully—"you Mrs. Rhodes, and it wasn't the Billy fellow after all?"

"Oh, but it was," she said rather confusingly, "for Billy is William Rhodes."

The old postman still looked bewildered. "You married to him all the while," he said slowly, "and me thinking when the letters stopped and he went away bidding you 'goodby forever' on a postal card that it was all over with."

She laughed merrily at his unblushing confession to reading her mail. "I understand now," she said, "your disappointment at having no letters to deliver, but you see when we became engaged Billy managed to be transferred to the company's office here, so there was no further need of correspondence. We were married quietly the very day before I was taken desperately ill with typhoid fever, which had been threatening me for so long. Billy has been with me through it all, and now that I am strong enough"—the girl's eyes shone—"we are going upon our long postponed wedding trip to Europe. The card you spoke of," she explained kindly, "was sent from New York, where Billy had gone to engage our passage, and, knowing that I was to be married the next day, he bade goodby forever to Isabel Drew."

Mike replaced his cap and sorted out another handful of letters. The infectious smile appeared upon his face, and the Irish blue eyes twinkled. "You can't always take it from the postals," he said.

At the foot of the stair he doffed his cap again. "I wish you much happiness, Mrs. Rhodes," he added ceremoniously, and the girl watched him far down the street.

"Never was wish more sincere," she murmured softly. The days followed each other uneventfully. No girlish face bent over the rosebushes nor smiled from the window, and then one morning Mike discovered among his letters one bearing a European postmark and addressed in a small, neat hand—which he well remembered—to Mrs. James Drew.

It would naturally be supposed that such a bulky letter could convey all the news necessary, but with it, also directed to Mrs. Drew, came a picture postal, the same white boat which had at one time aroused Mike's anger, and beneath the boat was penned:

You will be glad to know that Billy and I have arrived safely and are well and happy. ISABEL RHODES.

The postman ascended the steps of the stone house. "There's a letter for Mrs. Drew," he informed the maid who opened the door, "and a postal card for me."

"You!" the girl exclaimed scornfully. "Why, it's for her too."

"I am not so sure of that," Mike answered knowingly. "But you may let her have it."

The door closed with a bang, for the maid had long since ceased trying to understand Mike and his ways, and the whistled tune, "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" floated riotously down the street.

Sheep won't do well without water, and they are dainty about drinking. Clean running water is just as essential as good grass.

Neighborhood Notes

The postoffice at Eastport was robbed last week, the night prowlers blowing the safe and getting away with the contents thereof, which included $9 of postoffice money, $35 in stamps and $23 belonging to the post-master personally. The safe which was a new one, was practically ruined, and the robbers got away without leaving a clue as to their identity. Sheriff Kittle with his hounds were put on the trail.

Whether Michigan shall gain in its representation in congress because of its 10 per cent increase in population will depend on the basis of population which may be fixed.

At present with a population of 2,420,982, the state has 12 members, which gives a large fraction of almost a hundred thousand over the number necessary to carry that number of congressmen. If the basis should remain as at present the fraction and the gain in population combined would entitle it to a membership of 14.

With an increase of the base to 220,000, which is the most probable figure the state would fall 50,000 short of the number necessary to bring the representation up to 13; but with a majority fraction amounting to more than 170,000, there could be little doubt that no increase of one would be allowed.

Two expert apple men have been put into the Western Michigan territory by the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the purpose of picking, packing and shipping to the land show all the fancy apples growing in the region. For four months the bureau has been corresponding with fruit growers to discover who have apples, and now that the time when the apples are needed is drawing near, the experts are going into the orchards to get the goods. A report from Spokane to the effect that Michigan would have to get her show apples from the west has stirred up the bureau to its very soles, and it proposes to beat the westerners good and plenty. Western Michigan can do this, as its apples have a flavor that cannot be equalled by the western fruit.

There is talk among the G. R. & I. railroad men to the effect that in the spring of 1911 a new kind of fence will be under course of construction. Vineyards from Grand Rapids to the straits, but without grapes, are talked of. The present snow fences are inadequate. Seeds of the wild grape vines, hardy enough to withstand a severe winter and not bearing fruit, will perhaps be planted along the northern system's woven wire fences, which they will climb, thus forming a natural snow fence and a formidable barrier to the snow that is a great expense to the company. Snow drifts without hindrances in many bad places along the road's right-of-way. Wood fences need much attention and are costly. Thus in planting what may be termed a perpetual snow fence and a pleasing one to look at in the summer time is evidently a feasible plan to the company's officials.—Cadillac News.

"You're not any better than your old dad, kid. Get out and steal for your living like the old man does. Seems to me your too d—— lazy at times to even try to steal a living."

From noon yesterday 18-year-old Charley Wilkins of Cherry Grove commenced the serving of a 45 days' sentence in the county jail for stealing. In recorder's court Charles sat with the look in his eyes like that of a frightened deer. Illiterate to a startling degree his mind did not at first grasp the fact that he must spend 45 days in jail behind steel bars. It was then the boy broke down, crying with the bitterness of a child. To the sheriff and others he told his story, a story so sad and solemn that it touched the hearts of all. His father, now serving a term in Detroit for a similar offense had taught him how to steal, what to steal and where to steal it. So energetic was his father's teachings that the 18-year-old boy has known of no other way to procure things. In his depredations the boy has not been aggressive. He has never had a day's schooling and is unable to read or write. "All I know sheriff," said Witkins sniffling, "is to steal. The old man taught me pretty well."—Cadillac News.

Kidney Troubles Attack Charlevoix Men and Women, Old and Young.

Kidney ills seize young and old. Come quickly with little warning. Children suffer in their early years—

Can't control the kidney secretions.

Girls are languid, nervous, suffer pain.

Women worry, can't do daily work. Men have lame and aching backs. The cure for man, woman or child is to cure the cause—the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys.

Cure all forms of kidney suffering.

The following testimony proves it.

Mrs. C. E. Clapp, 937 E. Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills were used in our family in a case of kidney trouble and they effected a cure after other remedies had been taken without the least benefit. I gladly give this statement in their praise."

RENOVATING PONGEE SILK.

How to Make It Look as New and Silky as When First Purchased.

Pongee silk can be washed in water and come out looking as well as if dry cleaned, but few people seem to know that it cannot be washed in the ordinary way at all if good results are expected. For it is just the little things one must know about in washing it that make all the difference.

The first little point to remember is not to wash it in hot water or rub soap on it, especially strong soap. Instead dip it into a lukewarm suds of some pure white soap and carefully wash it out until it is clean, rinsing in several waters without tiring. Never rub it on a washboard, but gently wash it out with the hands.

The next little point is in connection with the ironing, and the secret of quickly and successfully ironing pongee is simply to allow it to be hung in the sun and air until it is bone dry before beginning and then iron it carefully on the wrong side. That is all. It sounds simple, and perhaps for this reason these points are overlooked by most people, who do just the opposite way, and their work ends in disaster.

Never on any account sprinkle pongee unless you want to waste long, weary hours in doing it all over again, for sprinkling will surely leave it covered with spots.

And never try to dampen the whole thing at once before beginning, for this also will end in disaster. Before one part is ironed another will become dry, and redampening the dry parts will decorate your suit with "shadows," and then to get rid of these objectionable places you will be obliged to rewash it all over again. Don't try even to iron pongee over a damp cloth, for this method will produce shadows also. And, of course, ironing pongee on the right side, as so many do, leaves an unsightly gloss all over it.

There is no reason why pongee should not look as new and silky after it has been properly laundered as when first bought if these directions have been followed and it is allowed to become bone dry before beginning to iron it.

If a frock of pongee is embroidered in colors it is best to wash a small piece of it before risking the entire suit. If the colors run at all, then wash it in gasoline or, better, send it to the dry cleaners.

CLEANSING OF MARBLE.

How to Remove Stains and Produce a Bright Polish.

It is well to have on hand a recipe or two which will help one to clean marble. Take two parts of soda, one of pumice stone and one of finely powdered chalk. Sift these through a fine sieve and mix them into a paste with water. Rub the mixture all over the marble and the stains will be removed. Now wash it with soap and water and a beautiful bright polish will be produced.

Another way to remove stains from marble is with a paste made of powdered pipeclay and fuller's earth mixed with strong soap lye. Put a thick coating of the paste on the marble and pass lightly over it with a moderately warm flatiron until it is dry. Leave it for a short time and then wash it off with clean water. Should the first application fail to remove all stains repeat the process.

Discoloration made by smoke may be removed in the same manner.

How to Candy Pineapple Strips.

Candied pineapple strips are delicious and are easily prepared. The fruit is first peeled, then cut in strips two inches long, half an inch wide and about a quarter of an inch thick. Measure the fruit and add half the quantity of granulated sugar and let it stand until the sugar is dissolved, which may be nearly twenty-four hours. Drain off the juice and boil it five minutes; then add the fruit and cook for three or four minutes. Drain the pineapple and spread on a platter to dry. The process may be hastened by putting the platter in the sun, the warming closet or even on the top of a radiator. The fruit should be turned once and then rolled in fine granulated sugar. The process is a much more lengthy one than that required for the fruit peel, but a few pieces put in each box make a delicious addition.—Woman's Home Companion.

"nno as there. is a God in heaven I swear that you—"

"Whst?" she urged, as he hesitated.

"That you shall not marry Strang!" he finished.

A cry welled up in the girl's throat. Was it of gladness? Wss it of hope? She sprsng hsck a pace from Nathaniel and with clenched hands waited breathlessly, as if she expected him to ssy more.

"No—no—you cannot save me from Strang! Now—you must go!"

She retreated slowly in the direction of the path. In an instant Nathsniel was st her side.

"I am going to see you safely hack to St. James," he declsred. "Then I will go to your brother."

She harred his wny defiantly.

"You cannot go!"

"Why?"

"Because—" He caught the frightened flutter of her voice again. "Benuse—they will kill you!"

The low lsugh that he hreathed in her hair was more of joy than fear.

"I am glad you care—Marion." He spoke her nsme with faltering tenderness, and led her out into the psth.

"You must go," she still persisted.

"With you—yes," he snswered.

She surrendered to the determination in his voice and they moved slowly nlong the path, listening for any sound thst might come from ahead of them. Nathaniel had already formed his plan of action. From Marion's words and the voice in which she had nttered them he knew that it would he nseless for him as it had been for Neil to urge her to flee from the island. There remained but one thing for him to do, so he fell back upon the scheme which he had proposed to Marion's brother. He realized now that he might be compelled to play the game single-handed unless he could secure assistance from Obadiah. His ship and men were in the hands of the Mormons: Neil, in his search for the captured vessel, stood a large chance of missing him that night, and in that event Marion's fate would depend on him alone. If he could locate a small boat on the beach back of Obadiah's; if he could in some way lure Marion to it— He gave an involuntary shudder at the thought of using force upon the girl at his side, at the thought of her terror of those first few moments,—her struggles,—her broken confidence. She believed in him now. She believed that he loved her. She trusted him. The warm soft pressure of her hand as it clung to his arm in the blackening gloom of the forest was evidence of that trust. She looked into his face anxiously, inquiringly when they stopped to listen, like a child who was sure of a stronger spirit at her side. She held her breath when he held his, she listened when he listened, her feet fell with velvet stillness when he stepped with caution. Her confidence in him was like a beautiful dream to Nathaniel and he trembled when he pictured the destruction of it. After a little he reached over and sa if by accident touched the hand that was lying on his arm; he dared more after a moment, and drew the warm little fingers into his great strong palm and held them there, his soul thrilled by their gentle submissiveness. And then in another breath there came to still his joy a thought of the terrible power that chained this girl to the Mormon king. He longed to speak words of encouragement to her, to instil hope in her bosom, to ask her to confide in him the secret of the shadow which hung over her, but the memory of what Neil had said to him held his lips closed.

They had walked in silence for many minutes when the girl stopped. "It is not very far now," she whispered. "You must go!"

"Only a little farther," he begged.

She surrendered again, hesitatingly, and they went on, more slowly than before, until they came to where the path met the footway that led to Obadiah's.

"Now—now you must go," whispered Marion again.

In this last moment Nathaniel crushed her hand against his breast, his body throbbing with a wild tumult, and a half of what he had meant not to say fell passionately from his lips.

"Forgive me for—that—hack—there—Marion," he whispered. "It was because I love you—love you—" He freed her hand and stood back, choking the words that would have revealed his secret. He lied now for the love of this girl. "Neil is out there waiting for me in a small boat," he continued, pointing beyond Obadiah's to the lake. "I will see him soon, and then I will return to Obadiah's to tell you if he has left for the mainland. Will you promise to meet me there—tonight?"

"I will promise."

"At midnight—"

"Yes, at 12 o'clock."

This time it was Marion who came to him. Her eyes shone like stars.

"And if you make Neil go to the mainland," she said softly, "when I meet you I will—will tell you—something."

The last word came in a breathless sob. As she slipped into the path that led to St. James she paused for a moment and called back, in a low voice: "Tell Neil that he must go for Winnsome's sake. Tell him that her fate is shortly to be as cruel as mine—tell him that Winnsome loves him, and that she will escape and come to him on the mainland. Tell him to go—go!"

She turned again, and Nathaniel stood like a statue, hardly breathing, until the sound of her feet had died away. Then he walked swiftly up the foot path that led to Obadiah's. He forgot his own danger in the excitement that pulsated with every fiber of his being, forgot his old caution and the fears that gave birth to it—forgot everything in those moments but Marion and his own great happiness. Neil's absence meant nothing to him now. He had held Marion in his arms, he had told her of his love, and though she had accepted it with gentle unresponsiveness he was thrilled by the memory of that last look in her eyes, which had spoken faith, confidence, and perhaps even more. What was that something she would tell him if he got Neil safely away?. It was to be a reward for his own loyalty—he knew that, by the half fearing tremble of her voice, the sobbing catch of her breath, the strange glow in her eyes. With her brother away she would confide in him? Would she tell him the secret of her slavedom to Strang? Nathaniel was conscious of no madness in the wild hope that filled him; nothing seemed impossible to him now. Marion would meet him at midnight. She would go with him to the boat, and then—ah, he had solved the problem! He would use no force. He would tell her that Neil was in his canoe half a mile out from the shore and that he had promised to leave the island for good if she would go out to bid him good-by. And once there, a half a mile or a mile away, he would tell her that he had lied to her, and he would give her his heart to trample upon to prove the love that had made him do this thing, and then he would row her to the mainland.

It was the sight of Obadiah's cabin that brought his caution back. He came upon it so suddenly that an exclamation of surprise fell unguarded from his lips. There was no light to betray life within. He tried the door and found it locked. He peered in at the windows, listened, and knocked, and at last concealed himself near the path, confident that the little old councilor was still at St. James. For an hour he waited. From the rear of Obadiah's home a narrow footway led toward the lake and Nathaniel followed it now as warily as an animal in search of prey. For half a mile it took him through the forest and ended at the white sands of the beach. In neither direction could Nathaniel see a light, and keeping close in the shadows of the trees he made his way slowly toward St. James. He had gone but a short distance when he saw a house directly ahead of him, a single gleam of light from a small window telling him that it was inhabited and that its tenants were at home. He circled down close to the water looking for a boat. His heart leaped with sudden exultation when he saw a small skiff drawn upon the beach and his joy was doubled at finding the oars still in the locks. It took him but a moment to shove the light craft into the sea and a minute later he was rowing swiftly away from the land.

Nathaniel was certain that by this time Neil had abandoned his search for the captured Typhoon and was probably paddling in the direction of St. James. With the hope of intercepting him he pulled an eighth of a mile from the shore and rowed slowly toward the head of the island. There was no moon, but countless stars glowed in a clear sky and upon the open lake Nathaniel could see for a considerable distance about him. For another hour he rowed back and forth and then beached his boat within a dozen rods of the path that came down from Obadiah's.

It was 10 o'clock. Two more hours! He had tried to suppress his excitement, his apprehension, his eagerness, but now as he went back into the darkness of the forest they burst out anew. What if Marion should not keep the tryst? He thought of the spies whom Neil had said guarded the girl's home—and of Obadiah. Could he trust the old councilor? Should he confide his plot to him and ask his assistance? As the minutes passed and these thoughts recurred again and again in his brain he could not keep the nervousness from growing within him. He was sure now that he would have to fight his battle without Neil. He saw the necessity of coolness, of judgment, and he began to demand these things of himself, struggling sternly against those symptoms of weakness which had replaced his confidence of a short time before. Gradually he fought himself back into his old faith. He would save Marion—without Neil, without Obadiah. If Marion did not come to him by midnight it would be because of the guards against whom Neil had warned him, and he would go to her. In some way he would get her to the boat, even if he had to fight his way through Arbor Croche's men.

With this return of confidence Nathaniel's thoughts reverted to his present greatest need, which was food. Since early morning he had eaten nothing and he began to feel the physical want in a craving that was becoming acutely uncomfortable. If Obadiah had not returned to his home he made up his mind that he would find entrance to the cabin and help himself. A sudden turn in the path which he was following, however, revealed one of the councilor's windows aglow with light, and as he pressed quietly around the end of the building the sound of a low voice came to him through the open door. Cautiously he approached and peered in. A large oil lamp, the light of which he had seen in the window, was burning on a table in the big room but the voice came from the little closet into which Obadiah had taken him the preceding night. For several minutes he crouched and listened. He heard the chuckling laugh of the old councilor—and then an incoherent raving that set his blood tingling. There is a horror in the sound of madness, a horror that creeps to the very pit of one's soul, that sends shivering dread from every nerve center, that causes one who is alone with it to sweat with a nameless fear. It was the voice of madness that came from that little room. Before it Nathaniel quailed as if a clammy hand had reached out from the darkness and gripped him by the throat. He drew back shivering in every limb, and the voice followed him, shrieking now in a sudden burst of insane mirth and dying away a moment later in a hollow cackling laugh that seemed to curdle the blood in his veins. Mad! Obadiah Price was mad! Step by step Nathaniel fell back from the door. He felt himself trembling from head to foot. His heart thumped within his breast like the beating of a hammer. For an instant there was silence—a silence in which strange dread held him breathless while he watched the glow in the door and listened. And after that quiet there came suddenly a cry that ended in the exultant chattering of a name.

At the sound of that name Nathaniel sprang forward again. It was Marion's name and he strained his ears to catch the words that might follow it. As he listened, his head thrust half in at the door, Obadiah's voice became lower and lower, until at last it ceased entirely. Not a step, not a deep breath, not the movement of a hand disturbed the stillness of the little room. By inches Nathaniel drew himself inside the door. His heavy boot caught in a sliver on the step but the rending of wood brought no response. It was the quiet of death that pervaded the cabin. It was a strange, growing fear of death that entered Nathaniel as he now hurried across the room and peered through the narrow aperture. The old councilor was half stretched upon the table, his arms reaching out, his long, thin fingers gripping its edges, his face buried under his shoulders. It looked as if death had come suddenly to him during some terrible convulsion, but after a moment Nathaniel saw that he was breathing. He went over and placed a hand on the old man's twisted back.

"Hello, Obadiah! Hello—Hello!" He Called Cheerfully.

"Hello, Obadiah! Hello—hello!" he called cheerfully.

"T'won't Pack!"

"You'll never get a damned dollar from the state!"

Charlevoix township has been trying for the last two years to build good roads under the state Award Law, and the above songs have been sung continuously.

When the one-mile section, from the city limits to the railroad was first gravelled with gravel taken from the lake shore (and by the way, the best road gravel in the state) the curtain rose with the song by the high-kickers—and there are several of them in the township—the chorus of which was, "T won't Pack! T won't Pack! T won't Pack!

The gravel, however, was there, had been put on the road under advise of an engineer from the State Highway Commissioner's office and had to remain, and after less than ten weeks wear, the gravel has packed and is now as hard as stone and as smooth as a floor.

This took the music all out of this "T won't Pack" song.

Then the kickers and knockers cleared their throats and stepped before the curtain again with another "rag tune" song, the chorus of which was, "You'll never get a d—d dollar from the State! The State! The State!"

This was sung with a lusty vigor that might have put a Wagnerian orchestra to blush. But now, woe is us! The State Highway Commissioner has sent an engineer to inspect the roads and they have been inspected, accepted and even complimented, and the township is to get five hundred and twenty-one d—d dollars from the state for its first mile of good roads built by the township.

This takes the music all out of this chorus.

What the next "song and dance" act will be the "devil only knows," but there will be another goes without saying, for this gang of "high-kickers" and "hard-knockers" are resourceful and their bumps of invention are abnormally developed.

One thing, however, we have learned in the two years constant struggle, that there are three ways to build good roads. One is to build them with your mouth. These good roads are built in the air. They are inexpensive and every man can build them to suit himself, either straight or crooked, narrow or broad, "good round" roads or flat roads; but these roads are useless even for aerial navigation.

The second plan is to build good roads in the newspaper—these roads are a bit more expensive than the mouth-built roads—being on paper and built with printer's ink, and cost at least for ink, paper and setting type, but they are equally as useless as the other.

The third way to build good roads and the only correct, substantial way, is to build them on the ground, and to use good material in their construction. This class of roads will cost more than either of the others, but they are much substantial. They please the farmers much better, you can haul much heavier loads over them, you know just where they are, just where they begin and end; they are here to stay and their repair, when built, will be nominal.

These kickers and knockers may have their use—as God creates nothing in vain—but just what that use is, has not been discovered. They remind me of the Populist Pup:

"A politician was traveling in Kansas—seeking office, of course—and was endeavoring to be ultra pleasant with everybody that could vote, or was related to any one that could vote. At a farm house he first met a little boy with a stump-tailed pup, whom he accosted."

"Well, my little man, that's a nice pup you have there."

"Na!" said the boy, "he's no good, he's a no-account pup."

"What's his name?"

"His name is Pop."

"Pop! Why that's a funny name for a dog."

"Oh, his full name's Populist; we just call him Pop for short."

"Why do you call him Populist?"

"'Cause he's just like them. Dad says they're good for nothin' but to sit on their tails and howl."

How to Make Cream of Chicken Soup.

To make cream of chicken soup cut a stalk of celery into several pieces and half an onion into thin slices. Put the vegetables into two cups of milk and heat slowly. Let stand ten minutes, then remove the vegetables. Beat two slightly rounding tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter together with a few grains of pepper and one-half even teaspoonful of salt. Stir in the hot milk, and two cupfuls of broth reserved from boiling a fowl. Stir until smooth and cook fifteen minutes in the double boiler. This will make a fine soup, but as an extra touch beat the yolk of an egg well, four tablespoonfuls of cream, add to the soup and when the egg is thickened serve at once.

How to Wash a Switch.

Do not wash a switch often, but when you do handle it carefully. Pour boiling water over a cake of white soap and make a strong suds. Hold the switch by the stem and lift it up and down in the water, but do not rub or squeeze or do anything that will entangle the hair. After the dirt is removed the switch should be rinsed by a similar movement and hung up to drip and dry. Do not attempt to rub it dry with a towel. If possible hang it out of doors.

The COURIER wants wood on subscription.

Sew them up with pack thread, do. Else, if you be a man, speak what you think today in words as hard as cannon balls, and tomorrow speak what tomorrow thinks in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said today.—Emerson.

MANAGEMENT OF THE DAIRY HERD

Following is a very valuable article on the management of the dairy herd by an expert on matters pertaining to dairying which those interested in the subject will find useful and important:

Whether the cows be grades or pure breds, it is of the highest importance in building up a dairy herd to secure a pure bred sire of outstanding dairy merit. Unless the sire is descended from good milkers it is folly to expect him to produce good milkers, no matter how fine or how ideal he may be as an individual.

Another matter of prime importance in the successful management of a dairy herd is the keeping of a record of the milk and butter fat produced by the individual cows of the herd. The keeping of a daily record of the weight of the milk of each cow is a very simple and inexpensive task.

All that is necessary is to have a small scale and a ruled sheet of paper upon which to record the weights of milk morning and night. The daily weighing of the milk from each cow is valuable also in serving as a check upon the work of the milkers.

The milk from each cow should be tested about once a month during the whole period of lactation. A satisfactory way of doing this is to collect what is known as a composite sample, which consists in securing about one-half ounce of milk from each of six consecutive milkings and placing this in a half pint composite sample jar containing a small amount of preservative.

The test of this composite sample will represent the average amount of butter fat for the period during which the sample was taken and will serve with sufficient accuracy as an average test during the entire month.

By keeping a record of this kind it will be found that the owner of practically every herd is keeping cows which do not pay for their feed, and the only sure way of locating these cows is in keeping records as outlined above.

METHODS FOR TESTING MILK.

A quick and easy method for determining whether milk is clean or not when delivered one long been needed, in the opinion of a prominent dairyman. Every cheesemaker knows, and every farmer who delivers milk at a cheese factory should know, that clean sweet milk is the most satisfactory for cheesemaking and also the most profitable.

The yield of cheese from unclean milk is usually lower and the cheese is of a quality that does not command the highest market price. The best grade of butter cannot be made from inferior milk or cream. Dairymen who supply milk to the city trade find that a layer of dirt settled in the bottom of the milk bottle will do more to make a customer dissatisfied than almost anything else.

The importance of this matter to the pocketbook of both farmer and dairyman has long been recognized, and many investigators have been put on the market for keeping dirt out of milk or for removing any dirt present before the milk is sold. Milking pails can be bought with a cover and a small opening at the top, which keep out most of the falling dust. It is often recommended that the cow's udder and flanks be freed from loose dirt or hair by use of a whisk broom or a damp cloth just before milking.

Whatever else may be done, the milk pails should be carried in the milk room as soon as filled and the milk should be strained at once. So generally are strainers used that a farmer who does not strain the milk he sells would probably be ashamed to admit the fact to his neighbors. A strainer of metal holding a cloth or a wad of cotton batting for the milk to pass through is the best.

Several tests have been devised for use in creameries and cheese factories to detect which lots of milk have not been properly taken care of. Unclean or dirty milk will usually get sour faster than ordinary. When such milk thickens, the curd will contain gas bubbles or will develop a foul odor or taste. The solid curd in the glass cylinder on the left was obtained from perfectly clean milk, while that shown on the right contains many gas bubbles and is wheying off rapidly (Fig. 1).

The fermentation tests used in Europe for unclean milk work on this principle. But these tests, while very effective, require that the samples of milk examined shall be kept several hours before the test is completed. A test is needed which can be applied quickly to every lot of milk as it comes to the intake.

The sediment test works on the same principle as the best milk strainers, and it is so rapid that the dirt found in any sample of milk can be shown to the patron before he leaves the factory. Several different sediment tests have been used in Europe, and a new and convenient form has recently been devised by Professors Babcock and Farrington at the University of Wisconsin.

Four different lots of milk contained varying amounts of dirt, as shown in Fig. 2, and were graded as, first, perfectly—clean; second, slightly dirty; third, dirty; fourth, very dirty.

Milk which has been run through a strainer on the farm will often contain an amount of dirt when delivered that will surprise both the patron and the factory man. This may be due to the use of a poor strainer or to exposure of the milk after it was strained. In either case the sediment test will detect the condition of the milk. A few days' use will show plainly which patrons are keeping the milk clean and which should use more care in handling it.

Resting Horses' Feet.

Every farm horse should if possible be allowed to go without his shoes at least two or three months every year. In fact, it is hardly necessary to shoe a horse on the farm unless he is to go on the hard roads or work on the hard soils where he is required to do much heavy pulling. Without shoes a horse's hoof will grow out, regain its natural shape, which is always more or less changed by continuous shoeing.

Many city horses with hoofs bound and cracked and otherwise injured have been taken to a farm, their shoes pulled off and turned out to pasture and thoroughly cured within six months. In fact, the farmers around the large cities used to find in this class of animal a cheap supply, many of which turned out to be first class horses, showing that all that was needed was rest on Mother Earth without their shoes.

Notes on Horses.

Do you want a balky horse? You can easily have one by giving him too heavy loads to draw.

The whip needed to make a horse increase his speed is in the manger.

Good treatment of a horse will not soon be forgotten. Neither will poor treatment. The way a horse is handled tastes the animal what he is.

Some men beat their horses for things for which they are not responsible.

After a hard day's work in the field the horses will enjoy a few moments to roll in the yard or about the straw pile. Your horses will scratch themselves more in five minutes by rolling than you can scratch them with a curry-comb in thirty minutes.

A Few Helpful Squeals.

Insist on everything being quiet about the breeding pen.

As a rule, a well fed sow is not so nervous as a hungry one, and she will not get up and down so much. Thus she reduces the danger to the pigs.

There is such a thing as making too careful preparation for the expected litter of pigs. If too much straw is put in the farrowing pen the mother will make the nest so deep that the little fellows will get entangled in the straw where the mother will lie upon them.

Good Way to Wash Stable Blanket.

A stable blanket that has been in use all winter is usually badly soiled and heavy as well as disagreeable from a sanitary standpoint. To wash the blanket is no small task, but by wise persons it may be cheerfully with little trouble and labor. Simply spread the soiled and saturated blanket on sod ground during a heavy spring rain, and if one rain does not cleanse put it out during another. As soon as the rain ceases and the blanket can be raised hang it up, dry it and take it in.

The Bastian electric heater, recently invented in England, consists of tubes of quartz containing a spiral of nickel or other wire mounted in a frame, from which they can readily be removed for renewal. Within a few seconds after the current is turned on the tubes become incandescent, exposing a large radiant surface, which can be used for cooking or heating.

Was the County Fair at East Jordan last Week

HORACE B. HIPP ELECTED PRESIDENT

Secretary Nicholas and Other Old Officers are Re-elected

Many Improvements will be Made on the Grounds.—Debts will be Paid and New Buildings Erected.

The county fair, held at East Jordan last week, was one of the most successful fairs held by the society, excelling all previous fairs in attendance and receipts. Thursday over 3,000 people were on the grounds and over seven thousand admission tickets were sold during the week. The total receipts were nearly two thousand dollars.

The exhibits, as a whole, were much better than previous years. The stock show, while small, showed that the farmers of this region are interested in improving live stock. In vegetables and grains the display was splendid, and the fancy work department made the best showing in years. The display of fruit was fine, notwithstanding that this is an off year and fruit not as plentiful as heretofore. Probably the best display was made by E. H. Clark, who exhibited forty-four varieties of apples, three of peaches and one each of plum and pear, all grown by himself.

South Arm, Marion Center and Harmony granges all made fine displays in fruit, vegetables, and grain, while several merchants in East Jordan made fine showings. A good showing was made in poultry and farm implements.

The races were all they were advertised to be and pleased all who are interested in the development of speed.

At the election of officers held Friday, H. B. Hipp was elected president in place of Robert Price, who did not care to continue the work. A. B. Nicholas, Jr., was re-elected secretary, which is an assurance that if work will do it, next year's fair will be another record breaker. Martin Kuhling was re-elected treasurer, a position which he has well filled for several years, and William Mears, Richard Lewis, Henry Nowland and H. B. Hipp were re-elected directors. The executive committee consists of E. B. Ward, chairman; Robert Price and Elmer Ingalls.

At the meeting of the board of directors held Saturday, it was decided to tear down some of the old buildings and erect new ones. The debt of four hundred dollars will be paid. The fence in the rear of the grand stand will be set back about twenty rods and the barns moved back several hundred feet, and a new dining hall erected.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS CHANGE

Frank N. Metcalf New Proprietor at the Ivy Drug Store.

Last week an important change took place in Charlevoix's business life, A. B. Fleischer disposing of the Ivy Drug Store to Frank N. Metcalf, who took immediate possession. Mr. Fleischer has, during his residence in our city, built up an enviable reputation as a successful business man and a good citizen, but feels that his position as manager of the Star Drug Co., in Santa Barbara, California and other business interests there demands his entire attention.

While we are sorry to part with Mr. Fleischer we are pleased that Mr. Metcalf, is his successor, as he has long been associated with Mr. Fleischer and has had the management of the business during his absence the past winter in California, and will prove a worthy successor.

MICHIGAN POSTMASTERS

Will Hold Their Next Annual Convention in this City

Postmaster Fitch was successful in landing the convention of Michigan postmasters for Charlevoix and next year we will be entertaining them about this time. The convention this year was held at Kalamazoo and was well attended. Election of officers resulted as follows:

Postmaster Homer Warren of Detroit was elected president of the Michigan Association of Postmasters without opposition to succeed B. C. Richardson of Jackson. Postmaster Coleman of Kalamazoo was elected vice-president and H. A. Hopkins of St. Clair was re-elected secretary. The following executive committee was appointed: H. B. Coleman, Kalamazoo; George L. Lusk, Bay City; W. N. Brady, Saginaw; Grant Morse, Portland; Burt D. Cady, Port Huron; Sid V. Bullock, Howard City; E. N. Clark, Wyandotte; Fred A. Hutty, Grand Haven; W. N. Lister, Ypsilanti; J. C. Ketchum, Hastings; Fred C. Wheeler, Salem; E. P. Dunwell, Ludington; J. D. Fangum, Marquette; Seymour Foster, Lansing.

VETERANS WERE PRESENT

At the Opening of Charlevoix Public Schools, Monday.

Made Patriotic Addresses to High School Students and Staff of Teachers.

The opening of the public schools Monday morning was marked by a custom which has become one of the characteristics of Charlevoix schools, paying tribute to the members of the G. A. R. Monday morning the banner of Baxter Post was draped across the front of the high school room and Commander Harrison Berdan of Baxter Post, who was a member of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry, Custer's famous brigade; R. R. Wilkinson of the Third Ohio Cavalry, M. J. Stockman of the Fifth Ohio Sharpshooters and D. C. Nettleton of a Colorado regiment of Infantry and later of Cavalry, all gave addresses which were received with much appreciation and applause by the pupils and instructors.

Everything in the work of the school is running along finely with an enrollment in the high school of one-hundred-twenty; County Normal, eleven; grammar grades, one-hundred-fifty-nine and primary department of one-hundred-fifty-six, on the opening day.

The high school athletics are being pushed. Foot-ball practice began Monday afternoon under the skillful instruction of a new coach, Principal Wise. While the team may not average very high, it promises to be the fastest Charlevoix aggregation ever organized.

AUCTION SALES

The season for auction sales is at hand and now is the time to hold your sale. Before doing so investigate the COURIER'S plan of advertising sales. Never a dissatisfied patron is our record.

BUTTER SUBSTITUTES

Explanation of the Ten Per Cent. Tax on Oleomargarine

Not to Supress the Sale of Oleo But to Prevent Fraud in its Sale.

The great majority of people eat butter and much prefer it to any of the substitutes which have been put upon the market. However, a great many people must use a substitute on account of the high prices which prevail during certain months of the year.

Oleomargarine is the most common substitute for butter and millions of pounds of this product are consumed each year. The difference in cost of production between oleomargarine and butter is so great that when butter is retailed at forty cents per pound, oleomargarine may be retailed at twenty cents per pound at as great a profit to the dealer.

The person who chooses to purchase the substitute should be allowed to do so and he should be required to pay only the price of the substitute. The difference in price between the genuine product and the substitute is so great that dealers are tempted to sell the latter for the former. Only by requiring that the consumer may differentiate between the two articles can honest traffic in the substitute be insured.

This was contemplated by congress when the present internal revenue tax of ten cents per pound was levied upon "artificially colored oleomargarine." Many people think that all oleomargarine is taxed ten cents per pound. This is not a fact. Oleomargarine which is "artificially colored" so that the consumer cannot distinguish it from butter is the only oleomargarine that is thus taxed. When it is put upon the market in its natural color it is only taxed one-fourth of one cent per pound.

It is only when the product is made to look like butter so that it may be fraudently sold as butter that a burdensome tax is imposed upon it. The imposition of the tax is not to supress the sale of oleomargarine or to make it more expensive to the consumer, but to prevent fraud in its sale.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The postponed meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union held on Tuesday afternoon of last week, was a largely atended one and was held in the parlors of the Congregational church. Sixty or more persons being present. The district president, Mrs. P. J. Howard, with twelve other ladies from Petoskey and Mrs. Mary E. Heston, the Charlevoix county president from East Jordan, were present.

After the business was taken care of the program in charge of Mrs. P. D. Campbell was taken up and discussed. The topic being "Child Labor." Music was interspersed. Miss Mabel Stevens and Mrs. Burdick each sang a solo which was duly appreciated. The visitors expressed themselves delighted with everything. Beautiful flowers were in evidence in every nook and corner, adding their charm to the occasion. One bouquet of lovely white asters was taken to a patient in Lockwood hospital by one of the Petoskey ladies. Much credit is due the committee who had the matter in charge. Two ladies gave their names as members of the local union. Surely this was a "Red Letter Day" for the Charlevoix W. C. T. U. We almost forgot to mention the bountiful supper served to all present. It was too good to be omitted, such delicious ice cream and cake to finish up with.

Remember Mrs. Baker is again back at Baker's Inn, and they are still serving the good Sunday dinners which were so popular last winter. 38tl

DODDS A PROGRESSIVE

States His Position at Isabella County Convention

Believes That Present Tariff Law Need Remedying.

When the business of the convention was done on Wednesday, Chairman Woodruff called upon Congressman Dodds for remarks. Mr. Dodds made reference to protection as one of the basic principles on which the republican party is built, and gave a clear and interesting history of the Payne tariff law. He spoke, too, of the present disturbance in national politics, and he did this: he left no mistake in the minds of those who heard him as to what are his convictions. He said, "If by a stand-patter you mean one who stands by present conditions and refuses to make proper changes in the laws, then I am not a stand-patter, but I believe in protection as a fundamental doctrine of the Republican party as strongly as ever, and shall continue to so believe. I realize, however, that nothing made by man is perfect, and I am ready to do my part to better things. Some portions of the present tariff law do need remedying. Some schedules I am satisfied ought to be changed, and I believe in making the changes; but, I am also satisfied that the law that was passed is the best that could have been enacted under conditions existing at the time of its passage."

Mr. Dodds is a progressive in tariff legislation, as well as in other things. He made a splendid reference to President Taft. He thinks Mr. Taft is as capable and as conscientious a president as has ever officiated at Washington, and that he is possessed of a most earnest desire to do the right thing for the people of this nation. His address was well received and was roundly applauded.—Mt. Pleasant Times.

NORTH MICHIGAN PRESS CLUB

Will Meet at Elk Rapids the Latter Part of this Week.

The Northern Michigan Press Club will hold its outing at Elk Rapids, September 22-24, and the members will be the guests of the Elk Rapids Citizens' Association for two days of pleasure and business. Thursday evening John f. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, will give a lecture at the opera house, entitled, "Developing Western Michigan." Friday forenoon will be given over to a short business session and showing of industries of the village—the blast furnace, cement mill and other attractions. After dinner Friday the party will embark on the Steamer Ruth for a trip up Elk, Round and Torch lakes. It will return to Skegemog Point resort for the banquet in the evening. H. A. King, manager of the lodge, is making great preparations for the event. At the banquet C. E. Churchill, Perry F. Powers, George W. Kent, Willard A. Smith and others from the membership of the club and also members of the Citizen's association will respond to toasts. Saturday morning there will be a short business session and election of officers. The women of Elk Rapids will constitute themselves an entertainment committee and see that the visiting women have the best kind of a time.

BENZIE COUNTY WET

Judge Lamb Gives Decision which Knocks Out Local Option

Failure of Supervisors to Comply with all Features of the Law.

A decision of a revolutionary character so far as Benzie county is concerned was handed down in circuit court last week when Judge Fred S. Lamb declared that the local option law in effect in Benzie county at the present time is void and of no effect. His decision is based on the fact that the action of the board of supervisors was not properly published when the question was voted upon two years ago, and also that proper proof of publication is not on file in the office of the county clerk.

The decision was handed down in the case of the People vs. Chadrowe, who was arrested a couple of months ago for violation of the provisions of the law and two parties have served time in the county jail for violating the treating clause of the act.

Before the county went dry there were seventeen saloons in operation and at the present time there are petitions out for the purpose of having the question voted upon again at the spring election next year.

Since Judge Lamb gave his decision it is the belief of attorneys that if a saloonkeeper was to demand a license from the county officials they would be bound to grant the document. The case has been taken to the supreme court.

Inspection Trips Made.

Inspection of the northern section of Western Michigan is being made by the president of the Western Michigan Development bureau, D. H. Day, of Glen Haven, Michigan, for the purpose of gathering information that can be used in properly advertising the advantages of the territory.

The inspection is being made by automobile trips into the several districts and has already extended over a period of three weeks.

One of the earlier trips was to the Charlevoix, Petoskey and Boyne City sections. A later trip included a general survey of the territory from Traverse City to Cadillac. Un other trips the Leelanau peninsula was thoroughly explored also the Grand Traverse peninsula, many of the famous fruit orchards being visited. On still other trips the president made an examination of the country to the southward as far as Manistee. It is his belief that with the information he is obtaining that he will be able to see that the claims of each section are fairly presented in the literature of the bureau.

MICHIGAN FRUIT ALWAYS LEADS

When It Is Properly Graded and Packed to Display

AT WEST MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

George E. Rowe Demonstrated this Fact Extensively

By His Display of Western Michigan Apples—Our Growers are Awakening to Their Opportunity.

Standing out as the most important educational feature of the West Michigan State Fair, the apple display and fruit packing demonstration of Editor George E. Rowe of the Fruit Belt served to awaken many a western Michigan man to the horticultural opportunities of this section of the country.

"Are those really Michigan apples?" exclaimed hundreds of surprised fair visitors. And to this life knowing one added: "Why they beat even the famous irrigated apples of Oregon and Washington!"

The exhibition proved two facts over which Michigan may well ponder. The first is that this region can grow the finest apples in the world. The second is that Michigan apples when properly graded and packed are as lusciously tempting as any fruit that grows and are capable of commanding gilt-edged prices in any market.

Editor Rowe to make his display went out among the apple growers of this section and bought fifty bushels of the product of their orchards. These he graded up and packed in boxes as the western fruit is packed. The apples were attractive as shown in bushel baskets, but their distinctive "fancy" stock attributes were brought out with emphasis when they were in artistically packed boxes, and it was plain to even the casual observer why apples marketed in such form could command far better prices than apples handed in the old "dump 'em in" fashion. They showed themselves to be of the kind that bring from forty to sixty cents a dozen at the fruit stores.

Western Michigan is destined to become the greatest fruit growing region as well as the best located in the United States. All that is necessary is for the farmers and the land owners to awaken to their opportunities. Such displays as that conducted by Mr. Rowe at the fair constitute missionary work of the most practical character. It is not necessary to journey to the Pacific coast, thousands of miles away from the chief markets of the land, to raise the most remunerative fruit. It can be grown right here at home. Michigan is the fruitman's land of promise, far more than the distant western states.—Grand Rapids Press.

THEATRICAL

Joshua Simpkins, a four act New England play will be presented at the Opera house Friday evening, September 23. The climax as stage realism, it is asserted, has been reached in the presentation of the stirring saw-mill scene in Joshua Simpkins and will be presented in this city by a popular mechanical device which has never been introduced here before. This new mill scene is claimed to be a vast improvement over any attempted in a similar line. The company also boasts of a splendid orchestra, which is carried complete by the organization, to aid in the proper presentation of the play, which is said to abound with musical and dancing specialties of a high order. To assist Joshua Simpkins in popularity, a band of music is also carried and a concert is given which is said to be far above anything usually heard with a travelling musical organization. The parade will leave the theatre at the usual time and take the usual route, making a burlesque parade.

Dr. Auld will make his last trip to the Beaver Islands for dental work Tuesday, September 27. 38tl

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 52 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71. Since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back, or weakened manhood or any difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE in a plain sealed envelope that you can use in your own home. [illegible] let them help me every day in your life as they have tested it for yourself.

Too late for last week

Mr. and Mrs. William Pearl are visiting at Central Lake.

Saturday afternoon at the M. E. parsonage at Charlevoix, Harold Stafford and Blanch Van Dusen were united in marriage. The young couple have always lived here and have many friends, who wish them prosperity. Rev. Taylor officiated. A reception was given them at their home Monday evening. Everybody reports a good time.

About sixteen of Blanch Van Dusen's friends gave her a miscellaneous shower at her home Wednesday evening. The evening was spent in singing and several selections of instrumental music. Mr. VanDusen gave us a jig after which Miss Blanch was escorted to the dining room and presented with several very nice presents. Refreshments were served at midnight and the following took their departure: Kate Richardson, Libbie Richardson, Grace, Edith, and Jane Stafford, Ruby Alward, Della Cameron, Mae Bugbee, Emma Wagner, Martina Valentine and Alec Mayne, Eva Pearl of Norwood, and Lyna and Anna Olmstead, Myrtle Richardson and Nellie Sprick of Charlevoix.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS By MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1908 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Neil, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winnsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER V.—Plum and Neil plan to escape on the Typhoon. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Neil's sister. She is not yet married to Strang, but some mysterious influence seems to be forcing her into the union.

CHAPTER VI.—Plum suggests carrying Marion off to the ship at midnight, and sailing away with her. Neil approves of the idea and they plan to include Winnsome, with whom Neil is in love, in the enterprise. Plum discovers that the Typhoon is gone. He meets Marion and relieves her anxiety by telling her that Neil has left the island. The thunder of a gun is heard, and Plum declares Casey is bombarding St. James.

CHAPTER VII.

The Hour of Vengeance.

A shudder ran through the councilor's frame, as if the voice had startled him, his arms and body stiffened and slowly he lifted his head. Nathaniel tried to stifle the cry on his lips, tried to smile—to speak, but the terrible face that stared up into his own held him silent, motionless. He had heard the voice of madness, now he looked upon madness in the eyes that glared at him. In them was no sign of recognition, no passing flash of sanity. The white face was lined with purplish veins, the mouth was distorted, and the lips bleeding. Involuntarily he stepped back to the end of the table.

At his movement the councilor stretched out his arms with a sobbing moan.

"Nat—Nat—don't go—"

He fell again upon his face, clutching the table in a sudden convulsion. In the next room Nathaniel had noticed a pail of water and he brought this and wet the old man's head. For a long time Obadiah did not move, and when he did it was to reach out with a groping hand to find Nathaniel. A change had come into his face when he lifted it again, the mad fire had partly burned itself out of his eyes, the old chuckling laugh came from between his lips.

"A little weakness, Nat—a little weakness," he gasped faintly. "I have it now and then. Excitement—great excitement—" He straightened himself for a moment and stood, swaying free from the table, then collapsed into a chair, his head dropping upon his breast.

Without arousing him from the stupor into which he had fallen, Nathaniel again concealed himself in the shadows outside the cabin where he could better guard himself against the possible approach of Mormon visitors. But he did not remain long. He struck a match and saw that it was nearly 11 and a sudden resolution turned him back to the cabin door. He believed that Obadiah would not easily arouse himself from the strange stupor into which he had fallen. Meanwhile he would find food and then conceal himself near the path to intercept Marion.

As he mounted the step he heard for the second time since landing upon the island the solemn tolling of the great bell at St. James, and as he paused for an instant to listen, peal upon peal followed the first until its brazen thunder rolled in one long booming echo through the forests of the Mormon kingdom. There came a shrill cry at his back and he whirled about to see the councilor standing in the center of the big room, his arms outstretched, his face lifted as it had been raised in prayer at the tolling of the same bell the night before—but this time it was not prayer that fell from his lips.

"Nat, ye have returned in the hour of vengeance! The hand of God is descending upon the Mormon kingdom!"

His words came in a gasping, but triumphant cry.

"And tomorrow—tomorrow—" He stepped forward, his voice crooning a wild joy. "Tomorrow—I—ahall—be—king!"

As he spoke the cabin trembled, a tremor passed under them, and the tolling of the bell was lost in a sudden tumult that came like the bursting crash of low thunder.

"What is it?" cried Nathaniel. He leaped into the room and caught Obadiah by the arm. "What is it?"

"The hand of God!" whispered the old man again. "Nat—Nat—" It was his old self that stood grimacing and twisting his hands before Nathaniel now. "Nat—a thousand armed men are off the coast! The Lamanites of the mainland are descending upon the Mormon kingdom as the hosts of Israel upon Canaan! Strang is doomed—doomed—doomed—and tomorrow I shall be king!" His voice rose in a wailing shriek. He darted to the door and his cackling laugh rang with the old madness as he pointed into the north where a lurid glow had mounted high into the sky.

"The signal fire—the hell!" he gurgled chokingly. "They are calling the Mormons to arms—but it is too late—too late! Ha, ho, it is too late, Nat—too late!" He staggered back, gripping his throat, and fell upon the floor. "Too late—too late," he moaned, groveling weakly, as if struggling for breath. "Too late—Nat—Marion—"

A shiver passed through his body and he lay quite still.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Six Castle Chambers.

In an instant Nathaniel was upon his knees beside the prostrate form of the old councilor.

Obadiah's eyes were open but unseeing; his face was blanched to the whiteness of paper; an almost imperceptible movement of his chest showed that he still breathed. Nathaniel lifted one of the limp hands and its clammy chill struck horror to his heart. Tenderly he lifted the old man and carried him to the cot at the end of the room. He loosened his clothes, tore off the low collar about his throat, and felt with his hand to measure the faint beating of life in the councilor's breast. For a few moments it seemed to grow fainter and fainter, and a choking lump rose in his throat as he watched the pallor of death fixing itself on the councilor's shriveled face. What strange chord of sympathy was it that bound him to this old man? Was it the same mysterious influence that had attracted Marion to him? He dropped upon his knees and called the girl's name softly but it awakened no response in the sightless eyes, no tremor in the parted, unquivering lips. Very slowly as the minutes passed there came a reaction. The pulsations of the weakened heart became a little stronger, he could catch faintly the sound of breath coming from between the old man's lips.

With a gasp of relief Nathaniel rose to his feet. Through the door he saw the red glare in the northern sky and heard the great bell at St. James ring a wilder and more excited alarm. For a few moments he stood in silent, listening inaction, his nerves tingling with a strange sensation of impending peril. Obadiah's madness, the mysterious trembling of the earth beneath his feet, the volcano of fire, the clanging of the bell and the councilor's insane rejoicing had all come so suddenly that he was dazed. What great calamity, what fearful vengeance, was about to come upon the Mormon kingdom? Was it possible that the fishermen and settlers of the mainland had risen, as Obadiah had said, and were already at hand to destroy Strang and his people? The thought spurred him to the door. The blood rushed like fire through his veins. What would it mean to Marion—to Neil?

In his excitement he started down the path that led to the lilac hidden home beyond the forest. Then he thought again of Obadiah and his last choking utterance of Marion's name. He had tried to speak of her, even with that death-like rattling of the breath in his throat; and the memory of the old councilor's frantic struggle for words brought Nathaniel quickly back to the cabin. He bent over Obadiah's shriveled form and spoke the girl's name again and again in his ears. There came no response, no quiver of life to show that the old man was conscious of his presence. As he worked over him, bathing his face and chest in cool water, the feeling became strong in him that he was fighting death in this gloomy room for Marion's sake. It was like the whispering of an invisible spirit in his ears—something more than presentiment, something that made his own heart grown faint when death seemed winning in the struggle. His watchfulness was acute, intense, desperate. When, after a time, he straightened himself again, rewarded by Obadiah's more regular breathing, the sweat stood in beads upon his face. He knew that he had triumphed. Obadiah would live, and Marion—

He placed his mouth close to the councilor's ear.

"Tell me about Marion," he said again. "Marion—Marion—Marion—"

He waited, stilling his own breath to catch the sound of a whisper. None came. As he bent over him he saw, through the open door that the red glare of fire had faded to a burnt out glow in the sky. In the deep silence the sullen beating of the bell seemed nearer, and he could hear the excited barking of dogs in St. James. Slowly the hope that Obadiah might speak to him died away and he returned to the door. It still lacked an hour of midnight, when Marion had promised to come to him. He was wildly impatient and to his impatience was added the fear that had filled him as he hovered over Obadiah, a nameless, intangible fear—something which he could not have analyzed and which clutched at his heart and urged him to follow the path that led to Marion's. For a time he resisted the impulse. What if she should come by another path while he was gone? He waited nervously in the edge of the forest, watching, and listening for footsteps. Each minute seemed like an hour marked into seconds by the solemn, steady tolling of the bell, and after a little he found himself unconsciously measuring time by counting the strokes. Then he went out into the path. He followed it, step by step, until he could no longer see the light in the cabin; his pulse beat a little faster; he stared ahead into the deep gloom between the walls of forest—and quickened his pace. If Marion was coming to him he would meet her. If she was not coming—

In his old fearless way he promptly made up his mind. He would go boldly to the cabin and tell that Neil was waiting. He felt sure that the alarm sounding from St. James had drawn away the guards and that there would be nothing to interfere with his plan. If she had already left the cabin he would return quickly to Obadiah's. In his eagerness he began to run. Once a sound stopped him—the distant beating of galloping hoofs. He heard the shout of a man, a reply farther away, the quick, excited yelping of a dog. His blood danced as he thought of the gathering of the Mormon fighters, the men and boys racing down the black trails from the inland forests, the excitement in St. James. As he ran on again he thought of Arbor Croche mustering the panting, vengeful defenders; of Strang, his great voice booming encouragement and promise, above the brazen thunder of the bell; he saw in fancy the frightened huddling groups of women and children and beyond and above all the coming of the "vengeance of God"—a hundred beats, a thousand men—and there went out from his soul if not from his lips a great cry of joy. At the edge of the forest he stopped for a moment. Over beyond the clearing a light burned dimly through the lilacs. The sweet odor of the flowers came to him gently, persuasively, and nerved him into the open. He passed across the open space swiftly and plunged into a tangle of bushes close to the lighted window.

He heard a man's voice within, and then a woman's. Was it Marion? Cautiously Nathaniel crept close to the log wall of the cabin. He reached out, and hesitated. Should he look—as he had done at the king's window? The man's voice came to him again, harsh and angry, and this time it was not a woman's words that he heard but a woman's sobbing cry. He parted the bushes and a glare of light fell on his face. The lamp was on a table and beside the table there sat a woman, her white head turned from him, her face buried in her hands. She was an old woman and he knew that it was Marion's mother. He could not see the man.

Where was Marion? He wormed himself back out of the bushes and walked quickly around the house. There was no other light, no other sign of life except in that one room. With sudden resolution he stepped to the door and knocked loudly.

For a full half minute there was silence, and he knocked again. He heard the approach of a shuffling step, the thump, thump, thump of a cane, and the door swung back. It was the man who opened it, a tall giant of an old man, doubled as if with rheumatism, and close behind him was the frightened face of the woman. An involuntary shudder passed through Nathaniel as he looked at them. They were old—so old that the man's shriveled hands were like those of a skeleton; his giant frame seemed about to totter into ruin, his eyes were sunken until his face gave the horror of a death mask. Was it possible that these people were the father and mother of Marion—and of Neil? As he stepped to the threshold they timidly drew back from him. In a single glance Nathaniel swept the room and what he saw thrilled him, for everywhere were signs of Marion; in the pictures on the walls, the snowy curtains, the cushions in the window seat—and the huge vase of lilacs on the mantle.

"I Want to Speak with Marion."

"I am a messenger of the king," he said, advancing and closing the door behind him. "I want to speak with Marion."

"Strang—the king!" cried the old man, clutching the knob of his cane with both hands. "She has gone!"

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—In 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

ANDREW B. SPINNEY, M. D.

Official Call

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The State Convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet in the Wayne Pavilion in the city of Detroit on Thursday, the sixth day of October, 1910, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon for the purpose of nominating candidates for State offices, for the election of a Republican State Central Committee, and a Chairman thereof, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the Convention.

Pursuant to law, Wednesday, the 14th day of September, 1910, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the County Convention of the Republican Party for the election of delegates to the Republican State Convention herein called, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

Under the resolution of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the State Convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

By order of the Republican State Central Committee.

GERRIT J. DIKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 29th, 1910.

Under the above call Charlevoix county is entitled to ten delegates.

Pine stumps are valuable. The chemical plant at Grayling extracts 26 different products from the old stumps and the refuse is used to make steam.

One of the fastest elections ever pulled off in Michigan was at McBain, Missaukee county. County Clerk W. H. Taylor instead of having the supervisors come for the election ballots and supplies, sent them to McBain by express, via. Cadillac. The supplies did not arrive until two o'clock in the afternoon of election day. Voters were standing around the polls in bad humor. When the supplies arrived there was but three hours before the polls closed at five o'clock, the population of the city being too small to allow the polls to remain open later, according to the law. The entire electorate lined up and forming before the entrances to the booths, rushed the vote through in three hours.

A most peculiar accident occurred on Conductor Thompson's train at 2:30 Tuesday afternoon, two miles south of this village when two men were hurt. The ash pan blower of the locomotive blew out and the fireman, E. W. Moody, was blown from the cab by the force of the explosion. It was expected he was killed by the fall, and when the train could be stopped and returned to where he was supposed to be he had picked himself up and was making an effort to get along the best he could with a dislocated ankle. He was also badly burned on the right hand. Engineer Thomas A. Beamish was burned on the left hand. Both men were taken to Dr. Yerkes' office, where their wounds were dressed. This unfortunate occurrence falls most heavily on Mr. Moody, who is but just recovering from typhoid fever epidemic in his family.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Glen Pangdorn, a rural mail carrier at Alanson, met a very peculiar and painful accident Sunday afternoon about 4 o'clock, and is at a loss to fully account for it. It seems that Pangdorn and another were standing near the Hinkley office discussing the fatal possibilities of certain electric light transformers that had been left within the reach of a full grown man, though seemingly partially protected by a board fence of some description. Pangdorn stepped a little closer and attempted to point out some part of the apparatus, and says the current drew his hand into it, but the shock was so great that he fell backward, thus releasing his hand. Mr. Pangdorn must in some way have made a complete circuit, for not only was his thumb and every finger badly burned, but the electric fluid passed entirely through his body, tearing the nails from his shoes and severely burning one foot.—Petoskey News.

"IN A BAD WAY."

Many a Charlevoix Reader Will Feel Grateful for This Information.

When your back gives out;
Becomes lame, weak or aching;
When urinary troubles set in,
Your kidneys are "in a bad way."
Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you.

Here is good evidence to prove it.

Mrs. I. A. Slack, 025 Grove St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "Some time ago I suffered intensely from a lameness through my shoulders, hunips and across my kidneys. I at length, procured Doan's Kidney Pills and before I had used them long they disposed of my trouble, making it possible to stoop or lift without suffering. I am pleased to say a good word for Doan's Kidney Pills."

The above statement was given in August 1906 and was confirmed by Mrs. Slack on July 30, 1908 when she said: "I can still recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a remedy of great merit for kidney trouble and backache. The relief they brought me has been permanent. You may continue to publish my testimonial."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Chief Purposes of Parks.

Designers and builders of parks should remember that shade giving trees are a fundamental and that their beauty is an incidental. In our land of perpetual sunshine shade is a necessity in all public and private grounds. A park or garden may be so given over to embellishment alone that utility is lost sight of in a mad scramble for ornamentation. Get all the beauty you may with proper use of the park by the public, but utility must be first considered and then art. To properly combine and harmonize the two is the highest expression of landscape building.

Clean Up or Jail.

Health Commissioner Conner of Omaha, Neb., is sending out notices ordering the construction of or providing for metallic or brick receptacles for ashes and other refuse which shall be cleaned out as often as filled. Objection is made that ashes do not create an insanitary condition, but the health officials hold that they help create such a condition, and they will prosecute those who fail now to live up to the provisions of the ordinance, which has been dormant since its adoption two years ago.

How Not to Grow Old.

The Spanish wit and philosopher Quevado, who in his time gained a reputation for knowing everything, was asked if he knew of a means whereby a person could avoid growing old. "Most certainly," said he "I know of certain rules which will surely prevent your growing old."

"What are they?"

"Keep in the sun in summer and in the wet in winter. That is one rule. Never give yourself rest. That is another. Fret at everything that happens. That is another. And then if you take care always to eat meat cold and drink plenty of cold water when you are hot you may be perfectly sure that you will never grow old!"

We gladly welcome Mr. Worthington to the ranks of Charlevoix county newspaper men.

Elsewhere in this issue we print the report of the board of county canvassers and an examination of it discloses several curious things. There having been no petitions filed for all the places on any ticket several voters took advantage of their opportunity to write in names thereby causing considerable expense to the county. On the Republican ticket fifteen candidates received votes for circuit court commissioner and twenty-one for coroner. The Prohibitionists however, were the most lavish in their favors casting votes for nearly every candidate on the Republican ticket, while some of them were remembered by the Democrats.

A cruel day marked the last day of the fair at recreation park. John Ward, travelling agent for a cream separator concern, posted a life size lithograph of a beautiful woman of correct figure in his booth and had the booth photographed on post cards. The woman in the lithograph appeared prominently in the photo engaged in operating the separator.

"She's my wife," said Ward to some men friends. "Come over and I'll make you acquainted."

The men waited until Ward had left, looked at the photo, and mentally resolved that they'd like to meet that woman. P. Johnson, A. B. Jourdan, E. J. Morgan and R. L. Seeley wended their way to the Ward booth to be introduced. P. Johnson was first. The cigars cost him $1.50. Cadillac Globe.

"Gone!" exclaimed Nathaniel. For an instant his heart hounded with delight. Marion was on her way to the tryst! He sprang back to the door. "When? When did she go?"

The woman had coms forward, her hands trembling, her lips quivering. Something in the terrnr of her face sent the hot hlood from Nathaniel's cheeks.

"They sent for her an hour ago," she said. "The king sent Obadiah Price for her! O, my God!" she shrieked suddenly, clutching at her breast, "Tell me—whut are they doing with Marion—"

"Shut up!" snarled the old man. "That's Is Strang's business. She has gone to Strang." With an effort he straightened hlnaself until his towering form rose half a head shove Nathaniel. "She has gone to the king," he repeated. "Tell Strang that she will wive him tonight, aa shs has promised!"

In spite of his effort to control himself a terrihle cry burst from Nathaniel's lips. He flung open the door and stood for an instant with his white face turned back.

"She went to the castle—an hour ago?" he cried.

"Yes, to the castle—with Obadiah Price—"

The last words followed him as he sped out iato the night. As swiftly as a wolf he raced across the clearing to the trail that led down to St. James. Something seemed to have hurst in his brain; something that was not hlood, but fire, seemed to burn in his veins—a mad desire to reach Strang, to grip him hy the throat, to mete out to him the vengeance of a fiend instead of that of n man. He wns too late to save Marion! His brain reeled with the thought. Tod lnte—too late—too late. He panted the words. They came with every gasp for hreath. Too lnte! Too late! His heart pumped like an engine as he strained to keep up his speed. He passed n man und a hoy hurrying with their rifles to St. James nnd made no answer to their shout; n galloping horse forged ahead of him and he tried to keep up with it; and then, at the top of the long hill that sloped down to the stronghold of the Mormon kingdom something seemed to sweep his legs from under him, and he fell panting on the ground. For a few moments he lay there looking down upon the city. The great bell at the temple wns now silen'. He saw huge fires hurning for a mile along the coast, hundreds ot lights were twinkling in the harbor, there came up to him softly, subdued by distance, the sound of commotion nnd excitement far below.

His eyes rested on the beacon above the prophet's home burning like a ball of fire over the black canopy of tree tops. Marion was there! He rose to his feet again and went bn, reason and judgment returning to him—telling him that he was about to play against odds; that his work was to be one of strength and generalship and not of madness. As he picked his way more slowly and cautiously down ths slope a new hope flashed upou him. Was it possible that the discovery of the approach of the mainlanders had served to save Marion? In the excitement that followed the calling of the Mormons to arms and the preparations for the defense would Strang, the master of the kingdom, the bulwark of hia people, waste priceless time in carrying nut the purpose for which he had sent for Marion? Hardly did hope burn anew in his breast when there came another thought tn quench it. Why had the king sent for Marion on this particular night and at this late hour? Why, unless at the approach of his enemies he had feared that he might lose his beautiful victim, and in his overmastering passion had called her to him even as his people assembled in detense of his kingdom.

There was desperate coolneas in Nathaniel's approach now. Whatever had happened he would do what Neil had threatened to do—kill Strang. And whatever had happened he would take Marion away with him if it was only her dead body that he carried in his arms. To do these things he needed strength. He advanced more slowly and drew deeper and deeper drafts ol air into his exhausted lungs. At the edge of the grove surrounding the castle he paused to listen. For the first time it occurred to Nathaniel that the prophet might have assemhled soms of his fighters to the defense of his harem, which he knew would he one of the first places to feel ths vengeance of the outraged men of the mainland. But he heard no voices ahead of him. There were no fires to betray ths approach of the enemy. Not even the barking of a dog gave warning of his stealthy advance. Soon he could make out a light in the king's house. A few steps more and he saw that the door was open, as it had been on his first visit to the castle. He nodged swiftly from bush to bush, darted under the window through which he had seen Marion, leaped lightly up the broad steps and sprang into the great room, his pistol cocked in his hand.

The room was empty. He listened, but not a sound came tn his ears except ths rustling of a curtain in the breeze. The huge lamp over the table was hurning dimly. The five doors leading from the room were tightly closed. Nathaniel held his breath, tried to still the tumultuous pounding of his heart as he waited for a sound of life—a step heyond those doors, a woman's voice, a child's cry. But none came. The stillness of desertion hovered about him. He went to one of the five doors. It was not locked. He opened it silently, with the caution of a thief, and there loomed hefore him a chaos of gloom.

"Hello!" bo called gently. "Hello—Hello—"

There was no answer. He struck a match and advanced step by step, holding the yellow bit of flame above his head. It disclosed the narrow walls of a hall nnd sn open door leading inio another room. The match sputtered and went out and he lighted another. On a little table just outside ths door wns a half hurned candle and he replaced his match with this. Then he went in.

At a glance he knew that he had entered a woman's room, redolent with the perfums of flowers. On one side was a hed and close beside it a cradle with a child's toys scattered about it. The tumhled coverlets showed that both had been recently used. About the room were thrown articles of wearing apparel; a trunk had been dragged from a closet and was half packed; everywhere was the disorder of hurried flight. For a few moments the depth of his despair held Nathaniel motionless. The castle was deserted—Marion was gone! He ran hack into the great room, no longer trying to still the sound of his footsteps, and opened a second door. The same silence greeted him, the same disorder, the same evidence that the wives and children of the Mormon king had fled. He went into a third room—and then a fourth.

For an instant he paused nt the threshold of this fourth chamber. A light was burning in the room at the end of the hall. The door was closed with the exception of nn inch or two.

"Marion!" he called softly, and listened intently.

He went on when there was no reply, nnd pushed open the door.

A candle was burning on a stand in front of a mirror. The room was as empty as the others. But there was no disorder here. The bed was unused, the garments in the open closet had not been disarranged. On the floor, heside the bed was a pair of shoes and as Nathaniel saw them his heart seemed to leap to his throat and stilled the cry that was on his lips. He took one of them in his hand, his whole being throbbing with exeitment. It was Marion's shoe—lucrusted with mud and torn as he had seen it in the forest. With her name falling from his lips in a pleading cry he now searched the room and on the stand in froat of the mirror he found n lilac colored ribbon, soiled and crumpled. It was Marion's ribhon—the one he had seen inst in her hair, and he crushed it to his lips as he ran back into the great room, calling out her name again and again in the torture of helplessness that now possessed him.

Mechanically, rnther than with reason, he went to the fifth and last door. His candle had become extinguished in his haste and after he had opened the door he stopped at the threshold of the black hall to light it again. There was a moment's pause as he searched his pockets for a match, a silence in which he listened as he searched, and suddealy as he was nbout to strike the sulphur tipped splint there came to his ears a sound that held him chained to the spot. It was the sobbing of a woman; or was it a child? In a moment he knew that it was a woman; and then the sobbing ceased.

There was nothing but darkness ahead of him; no ray of light shone under the door; the chamber itself was in utter gloom. As quietly as possible he relighted his candle. A glance assured him that this hall was different from the others; it was deeper, and there were two doors at the end instead of one. Through which of these doors had come the sound of sobbing he had heard?

He approached and listened Each moment added to his excitement, his fears, his hopes, but at last he opened the door on the left. The room was empty; there was the same disorder as before; the same signs of hurried flight. It was the room on the right! His heart almost stopped its beating as he placed his hand on the latch, lifted it, and pulled the door in. Kneeling heside the bed he saw a woman. She had turned toward the light and in the dim illumination of the room Nathaniel recognized the heautiful face he had seen at the king's castle the preceding day—the face of the woman who had sent him to find the prophet, who had placed her gentle hand on Marion's head as he had looked through the window. There was no fear in her eyes as she saw Nathaniel. Something more terrible than that shone in their glorious depths as she rose to her feet and stood hefore him, her face lined with grief, her mouth twitching in agony. She stood with clenched hands, her hosom rising and falling in the passion ot the storm within her; and she sohbed even as Nathaniel paused there, unmanned in this sudden presence of a distress greater than his own, sobbed in a choking, tearless way, waiting for him to speak.

Tuesday, October 4, will be one of the most important meetings which the grange will have in the county this year—the county convention at Ironton. It has been several years since the grange, in Charlevoix county, has met in a county convention, with full delegations present from every grange, as, under the district system, only representatives of the districts were present.

It is hoped that every grange will elect delegates, who will be present at Ironton and who will exercise care in selection of delegates to the state grange. The meeting this year, coming on the eve of the assembling of the state legislature, with the added power which the primary system gives the farmers, will be by all odds, the most important session in the history of the order and Charlevoix county should make sure that her full quota is present and that they are active working members of the order who will carefully look after the interests of Charlevoix county.

Baby Talks Six Languages at Birth

"Miracles will never cease." At least so the saying goes. But the sensible-minded man thinks a little less about miracles than he does about everyday means of making his business pay better.

If farming is his business the fence question is a great big vital consideration.

That more than one million farmers have purchased American Fence is a standing fact that he must note—if he wants to be right with himself. It's mighty good judgment to examine and price the American Fence—to see how different it is is from ordinary fences—how perfectly there is a weight and style adapted to his particular needs—before he buys a rod of any kind.

The Charlevoix Hardware Co. is the local agent for American Fence.

We sell "American Fence" also Steel and Cast Iron Ranges and the "Malleable Range" which has taken the gold medal at every World's Fair.

New Carpet Out of Old One

As we needed a new stair carpet and did not feel that we could afford one, I began to look around the house to see what there was on hand that could be used. In the attic I found a worn-out body brussels carpet, the back of which was a light tan. I ripped the seams and on the back of the strips made a small stenciled border in brown. We now have a very pretty artistic stair carpet that wears like iron and looks, to those not in the secret, like a new art fabric.—From Woman's Home Companion for September.

Fine Mending

For darning a rent in fine white goods I use one strand of fine spool cotton, No. 80, untwisting the thread. This makes a more invisible darn than does the finest twisted thread. If carefully done it cannot be seen.—From Woman's Home Companion for September.

An Ice-Chest Suggestion

To prevent a dish from slipping when placed on the ice, put a rubber ring (such as comes on all ordinary fruit jars) underneath it.—From Woman's Home Companion for September.

The Really Trulys of Heaven

Eight-year-old William and his Uncle Will are great chums, and the latter takes delight in the quaint sayings of his namesake.

It rained on the day that William was to have gone to a wonderful picnic. The little lad stood at the window trying to keep back the tears. Uncle Will, coming by and seeing the tears, slapped his nephew on the back and unexpectedly shouted: "Hello, Bill! What's your idea of heaven?"

The small boy looked up and solemnly answered: "Heaven's the place where the really-truly-s are as nice as the just-suppasin's."—Alice Cameron in Woman's Home Companion for September.

CARING FOR COWS AT CALVING TIME.

The cow that has been given the preparatory feeding does perhaps need closer attention at calving time, for she will be in better flesh, and the fleshy cow is, of course, more liable to milk fever than her thinner sister, says a well known dairyman. If proper precautions are taken, however, no great danger from milk fever is to be apprehended.

Out of twenty-five cows on test from thirteen to fifteen had milk fever slightly. During the first two nights an attendant was always on hand, and every hour or so a wisp of hay was offered each cow. If she declined this or her eye began to look dull there were symptoms enough to indicate that perhaps milk fever might be coming on, and the usual treatment, injection of air into the udder, was applied.

Within thirty minutes the cow would be in her natural condition, and, as a rule, no further trouble would occur. In case she had a relapse the treatment was again applied. There is no risk in the treatment if the air tube is kept well disinfected.

A good ration to start with is about four or five pounds of the same mixture as was fed the cow prior to freshening. Two or three days after freshening the cow should be put on a small grain ration in conjunction with her corn silage and alfalfa or clover hay. Now, the purpose is to gradually transfer the fat from her body to the pail. This is accomplished by the use of a small nitrogenous ration. If a heavy ration rich in carbohydrates is given the cow will be further encouraged to lay fat on her body and will not respond at the pail.

Weigh the milk produced on a four pound ration and the following day increase your ration one-half pound. The following day again weigh the milk. If there has been a sufficient increase to pay for the food and a profit thereon give her an additional half pound, and thus continue raising the ration half a pound every other day, and on the days when the ration is not raised note the amount of milk given. If she is a good cow and yet does not continue to respond to increase in ration up to twelve or fifteen pounds of grain, then perhaps something is wrong with the kind of ration.

Whenever a cow gives indication of becoming too fat, then a portion of the fattening foods should be withdrawn and its place filled with foods rich in protein, the milk stimulating part of the feed. On the other hand, if a cow begins to become poor care must be taken not to feed too heavily of protein, allowing more of the fattening foods.

After the cow is on full feed care must be exercised at all times not to overdo her or sicken her by feeding too heavily. So long as she cleans up her feed with avidity, the digestive apparatus remains in good order and she is apparently lively and thrifty there is little danger of feeding her too heavily, especially if cut hay be combined with the feed at the rate of two pounds at each feeding.

If the feed is thus carefully raised the cow will be stimulated to produce the very greatest amount of milk that lies within her possibility, while if the feed were raised by large amounts at a time there would be no greater increase from the large amount of feed than from the small amount.

As for the other general care—milking, etc.—it goes without saying that a cow should have warm, dry quarters, a well bedded stall, be kept out of the cold in the winter time, given plenty of fresh air and sunshine and warm water to drink. In the summer time she should be sheltered from the heat of the sun, the hot winds and flies and given every opportunity possible to do her best work.

TREASON TO YOUR TOWN.

Why Spending Your Money Elsewhere Might Be So Described.

In a recent address before the Western New York Newspaper Publishers' association E. F. Bussey, publisher of the Phelps (N. Y.) Citizen, said:

"The problem is really a serious one and has not received the attention it should have had. This in a large measure accounts for the expansion of the business to immense proportions. One concern in Chicago claims to have a business of $53,000,000 per year, with an estimated profit of 14 per cent, amounting to over $7,000,000.

"One village with a population of 5,000 is cited as an example of what the mail order business means locally. It is claimed that during the month of December last over $5,000 was sent in money orders from that village to one Chicago mail order house. A letter of inquiry brings forth the reply that there is no foundation for such a statement, although what is considered a large amount of business is actually sent to the mail order houses. The estimate given places it at about $10,000 annually.

"A somewhat recent development of mail order business is the trade in ladies' wearing apparel. A number of ladies patronize houses dealing in these goods without realizing that in permitting themselves to be ensnared by the exponent of the new fad, the psychology of advertising, they are laying themselves open to criticism quite as much as the man who is deluded into sending away his hard earned dollars for goods which show up beautifully in the catalogue, but have a decidedly different appearance when he receives them.

"The regular mail order houses at the present time have alluring advertisements in the magazines in which they offer apparently wonderful bargains in ladies' suits. The psychological feature of the advertisements seems to be the guarantee, which is given great prominence. Of course the reader is not expected to draw the deduction that in case the goods are not right the firm has a correspondent to deal with the case who is quite as expert in his line as the high salaried man who writes the ads. In the matter of ladies' suits it should not be a difficult matter to present a strong argument in favor of making a personal selection from a large stock in a store known to be reliable in preference to sending to a distant city and buying, as it were, a cat in a bag. The local houses unquestionably have the advantage of the best arguments, and these if properly presented are bound to prove effective."

TREES THAT ADORN STREETS

Care Should Be Given These Valuable Assets to Town Improvement.

All planting and care of trees that adorn and greatly help to beautify and improve the streets should be done by the town or by permanent organizations authorized to carry on the work. The poorer the soil the larger should be the hole for the tree. If convenient add rich soil. Spread the roots carefully. Fill in with pulverized soil and press into contact with the roots. Protect the tree with a line of wire netting supported on three or four posts. It adds to the expense, but pays in the long run.

A NEAT PIECE OF TREE SURGERY. [From American City, New York.]

When a tree shows signs of decay in places get busy at once and secure the services of a competent tree doctor, have the wound dug out, scraped and a neat cement filling put in, thus prolonging the life of the tree.

But in the protection of the young trees don't forget to stir up civic pride. Provide for the small boy and enlist him if you can. It pays better than to permit arrest or threaten with arrest. Don't permit telegraph linemen to mutilate trees or climb them with spikes. Secure the passage of ordinances forcing wires and cables underground wherever practicable. Telegraph and telephone poles are unsightly and interfere with all schemes of street improvement and are plantlug

Women Paint Their Church.

Women are today playing a prominent part in the improvement and beautifying of towns. In Burlington, N. J., a number of women members of the congregation of a prominent church of that place undertook the job of painting their edifice lest a campaign of church improvement should fall through by a lack of funds. Headed by the pastor's wife, they bravely set to work with paint pots and brushes and then formed a pin money fund to employ a man to decorate the top of the building.

Care of Animals' Hoofs.

The horse's hoofs are important parts of the animal. Keep the feet of the work horses well trimmed or shod as the case demands. The colt's feet must be looked after as soon as it is a few weeks old. Where the colt is compelled to remain in the stable most of the time and not allowed to follow the mare its feet are apt to grow very long and become crooked. Keep its feet in shape by regular trimming. Exercise on hard or rock land will wear them even.

Pasture Should Be Shaded.

Where there are no trees in the pasture which will furnish ample shade for the stock during the heated months of the summer some kind of shelter should be provided; if nothing more than a shed made of poles and thatched with straw or muddy hay. A number of instances were reported during July of last year where many head of cattle died from the heat, being found piled up in a seeming attempt to gain the shelter of a little patch of shade.

To Cure Horse Lice.

For lice on horses take half a pint of kerosene in two gallons of water and wash the horse twice, with an interval of two or three days between the applications.

REPORT OF DISTRICT SUP'T

Shows Methodist Episcopal Churches In Grand Traverse District

TO BE IN PROSPEROUS CONDITION

Several Have Made Improvements on Property

Rev. F. M. Taylor Returned to Charlevoix Charge - Assignment to Neighboring Charges—Change at East Jordan.

The following extracts are taken from the report of District Superintendent Ferguson to the Michigan conference at Jackson:

On the whole, however, we have had a good year. The pastors have done faithful work, and with the cooperation of their people have been able to produce good results.

Eighteen charges began the year with an increase in the estimates for pastoral support. Petoskey added $200 to the pastor's salary late in the year, putting it at the head of the district in point of pastoral support. Asbury church Traverse City, requests the return of the pastor at an advance of $200 for next year, and Harbor Springs makes a similar request at an advance of $100.

"These advances however, are mainly among the abler charges. We have a large number of charges where the support is pitifully small. Six hundred dollars would be a low minimum support in these days of high prices; but we have several pastors with a family to support and a horse to keep, who are receiving less than $500 for a year's work. It ought not to be so. These home missionary fields where we are caring for little struggling churches and Sunday schools, and laying foundations for larger things for the kingdom of our Lord in the days to come, ought to have more missionary money to supplement the meger support they are now able to furnish.

"Bellaire has sold the old New Para parsonage and bought a commodious modern house on the main street at a cost of $1,600 which is nearly paid for. Both church and parsonage are newly painted presenting a very attractive appearance.

"Boyne City raised up the parsonage, put in a fine basement and furnace, increased the size of one of the rooms, and added an elegant mantel and grate to the living room. It is now one of our most comfortable homes. The changes cost $600.

"Charlevoix spent $500 for repairs on church and parsonage and in paying some floating debts. East Jordan repaired and re-decorated the church at a cost of over $300. Fife Lake did the same to the extent of $55, and Jennings to the extent of $155.

"Elk Rapids is jubilant over the complete wiping out of a $1,500 debt that has burdened them for years. The pastor's generous giving and tactful leadership made this victory possible, and he is wanted back for a fifth year.

Norwood spent $250 in improving the parsonage; Old Mission $200; Petoskey $200; and Harbor Springs $180.

"Alba paid on old indebtedness $110; Boyne Falls, $155; Central Lake $325; Freesoil and Fountain $350; Harrietta $125; Kewadin $100; Kingsley $200; Levering $175; Petoskey $310; Traverse City First church $665; Asbury $100 and Fourteenth street $225.

"On the Thompsonville charge a new cement block church at Wallin is well on toward completion, and will no doubt be dedicated this fall.

"We have some very fruitful revival work this year, the pastors reporting a total of nearly one thousand conversions and more than nine hundred additions to the churches. The charges reporting ten or more conversions are, Alanson 92; Bellaire 18; Boyne Falls 18; Central Lake 11; Charlevoix 31; Copemish 52; East Jordan 30; Frankfort 23; Harbor Springs 30; Kalkaska 12; Mancelona 12; Manistee 95; Manton 100; Mesick 75; Norwood 45; Pellston 12; Petoskey 125, South Frankfort 30; Thompsonville 25; Asbury church; 23; and First church, Traverse City, 11. Our Indian missions also report 30 conversions.

"We have 110 Sunday schools, and 55 Epworth Leagues doing good work for the children and young people.

"Our 87 Ladies' Aid societies render valuable assistance not only in a financial way but in promoting good fellowship in the churches.

"The Woman's Foreign Missionary society is represented by 15 auxiliaries, and the Woman's Home Missionary society by 8. These societies are a benediction to the churches in making missionary sentiment."

Rev. F. M. Taylor is returned to Charlevoix and the following are the appointments to nearby churches: Norwood, J. G. Biery; Boyne City, J. A. Bready; Horton Bay, A. A. Stephens; Clarion, Jesse Burge; East Jordan, T. Porter Bennett; Mancelona, W. W. Lamport; Boyne Falls, Chester Hill.

FOUR BILLIONS FISH

Great Lakes to be Filled With Whitefish, Perch and Trout

The great lakes are going to be good places to fish next year.

Over 4,000,000,000 whitefish, perch, and trout will be released into the waters of the lakes from the government's hatcheries at that time. These are 2,500,000 more than were released last year. They will be divided about evenly between the lakes.

Thes figures were given by George M. Bowers, United States commissioner of fisheries.

"I have just completed a circuit of the hatcheries," Mr. Bowers said at the federal building, "and we are going to release 2,500,000 more whitefish, perch and trout into the great Lakes than ever before. The salmon hatch at the west coast of the United States also will be increased next spring.

"The Seattle hatcheries are in fine shape and I have an excellent report to make to the department in regard to them."

FROM LIFE'S THRESHOLD

Kenneth Bridge is Called by Death Saturday

Loss is One Which is Felt by Entire City Active in All its Affairs.

Kenneth Bridge, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Bridge, died at his home in this city Saturday, after an illness of four weeks of typhoid fever.

In these few words we announce a death which has cast a feeling of gloom over our entire city. Few, if any, of our young men had a promise of a brighter future than Kenneth Bridge, and none were more highly esteemed by all who had been attracted to him by his bright cheery nature, as he was in all things a typical young American of promise.

Kenneth Bridge was born in Whitewater, Wisconsin, May 9, 1892, and came with his parents to this city in the spring of 1903. He gradnated from the high school in 1909 and last year attended the University of Michigan taking the literary course. During his school life he took an active part in school athletics and was always at the fore front in the work of the schools and in the social life of the city. He is survived by his parents and two brothers, Clarence and Robert of this city.

The funeral was held at the house Tuesday afternoon, Rev. H. A. Putnam, pastor of the Congregational church officiating. During the afternoon the high school was closed and the fire department of which he was a valued member, attended in a body.

The pall bearers were school mates, Leslie Crane, George Finucan, Hugo Hampton, Ned Horton, Clare Conlter and Lee Scroggie. The body was laid to rest in Brookside.

THEATRICAL

EXCURSION COMING

Grand Rapids Business Men will be Here Friday

They Will Come in a Special Train to Look After Their Business Interests in This Section.

The Wholesale Dealers' Association of the Grand Rapids board of trade has planned a four-day trade extension excursion into the territory north of Grand Rapids and west of and including the main line of the Pere Marquette railroad. The party will be made up of about eighty of the leading wholesalers of Grand Rapids and will travel in a special train of eight coaches, consisting of four compartment sleepers, two diners, a day coach and baggage car. Stops have been arranged to include every city and town in this territory that can be reached in the time allotted for the trip. The tour will extend as far north as Bay Shore and the length of the stops in each city will allow plenty of time for the members of the party to call upon their friends and customers.

This is the fifth annual excursion. During the past four years one-hundred eighty-four cities and towns in western, southern and central Michigan have been visited, and the Grand Rapids jobbers feel that they have been worth many times the expense in cementing the trade of this territory to its jobbing center.

The party is scheduled to arrive in Charlevoix Friday at 7:15 a. m., leaving here at 9:25 p. m.

M. A. Levinson & Company's store will be closed from six o'clock p. m. Monday of next week until six o'clock p. m. Wednesday on account of Jewish holiday. 3t91

DIED SUDDENLY

Bert Brown Well-Known Resident of the City of Charlevoix.

Bert Brown, aged thirty-six, a well-known resident of this city, employed on the tug Taylor, died suddenly Monday evening of heart failure. Mr. Brown had been ailing for the past three weeks but was not considered to be in a serious condition.

He leaves a wife and a three-weeks-old babe. Funeral will be held to-morrow at the home at 1:30 p. m., Rev. F. Dewey Ellis officiating. Burial at Brookside.

PROSPECTS ARE GOOD

For Another Winning Foot Ball Team to Represent High School

Will Play Petoskey a Week From Saturday at Petoskey.

The prospects are good for another winning football team to represent the Charlevoix high school the coming season. Prin. R. I. Wise has had considerable experience in athletic work and is very much pleased with the workouts the boys have had. Ten to fifteen men were out every night last week working hard for a place on the team and if the weather permits, the team will get workouts every night this week.

There are a number of new rules this year which will take considerable practice to get accustomed to. The flying tackle is eliminated, the carrier of the ball cannot be pushed or pulled by his team-mates, all forward passes must be under 20 yards and take place 5 yards back of the scrimmage line. Thus it will be seen to be a more open game and the liability of injury greatly decreased.

As yet the manager has been unable to secure a game for next Saturday, but a week hence the team will try their metal against the Petoskey eleven at Petoskey.

The old players are: Kirby, Hull, George and John Papineau, Krulik, Lyngklip, Wallace, Mitchell and Powers. Poole is laid up with a broken wrist and will be missed but hopes are high that he may get back into the game before the season is over.

A Heathens Rebuke

Sometimes a realization of the real nature of the liquor traffic and the license system may be gathered from consideration of the viewpoint of people who do not tolerate these evils. Some time ago, at a gathering of literary people in New York City, one of the speakers was the editor of a Chinese newspaper, and his theme was the exclusion of Chinamen from the United States. In his address he compared the opium vice to alcoholic indulgence, saying:

"You have singled out my people from all human creation as unworthy of your hospitality. You let in the Italian, you let in the Hun, the Turk, the Jew and the Russian, you let in the underworld of Europe and Asia—the idle, the ignorant and criminal, and you shut out the peaceable and industrious Chinese, because, you say, we are heathen and we do smoke opium; but you are Christian and you drink whisky. And if I were a woman: I would rather my husband smoke opium every time than drink your Christian whiskey. Opium puts him asleep; opium makes him harmless like a corpse; whiskey makes him wild beast; whiskey wakes up devil and makes him brute. 'Merican man come home full of whiskey—kicks wife; China man comes home full opium—wife kick him. You be Christian, we be heathen. With my knowledge of your American saloon, if I were to return to my country, and the issue were a choice between the opium den of my heathen China and the saloon of your Christian America, I would choose for my people opium rather than whiskey"—Selected.

SECOND ANNUAL EXHIBITION SUCCESS

Magnificent Showing of Charlevoix County Farm Products

THIRTY-THREE DIFFERENT EXHIBITORS

Display Exceeded in Quality Anything Before Shown in County

October Eight Another Exhibition Will Take Place—Grain, Corn, Potatoes and Fruit will Compete for Valuable Prizes

The first bargain Saturday of the second annual exhibition and bargain day of the Charlevoix Retail Merchants Association, last Saturday, was a success, notwithstanding the weather was in every way against it.

The display of Charlevoix county vegetables and fruits was a grand one, surpassing in quality any similar display ever before made in this county, and the generally expressed opinion was that a better display was never shown at any state or county fair.

In all thirty-three entries were made, proving that the farmers in this vicinity are alive and are producing good stuff, which they are not afraid to show in competition.

The following made entries: Bert Crandall, E. G. Wightman, I. Price, R. S. Shapton, Mrs. Whitley, Karl Wardrop, Henry Black, Argo Milling Co., A. Eckland, George Durrance, William Straw, Mrs. James Adams, Thomas Wetzell, Frank Kane, H. Peebles, Isaac Mills, S. Godbold, B. B. Blair, Frank Sneathen, H. Gornell, Robert Gregory, J. J. Edwards, John Struthers, Armstrong & Meech, Ed McClanathan, William Withers.

Prizes were given the following:

J. J. Edwards, Alexander apples 1st. prize.

John Struthers, Alexander apples, 2nd prize.

Armstrong & Meech, Wolf River apples, 1st. prize.

Ed McClanathan, Wolf River apples, 2nd. prize.

William Withers, Wealthy apples, 1st. prize.

H. Gornell, Peaches, 1st. prize.

Robert Gregory, Peaches, 2nd prize.

H. Peebles, pears, 1st. prize.

Frank Sneathen, pears, 2nd prize.

H. Peebles, pumpkin, 1st. prize.

Isaac Mills, pumpkin, 2nd. prize.

S. Godbold, squash, 1st. prize; cucumbers, 1st. prize.

B. B. Blair tomatoes, 1st. prize.

I. Price, tomatoes, 2nd. prize.

E. G. Wightman, cabbage, 1st. prize.

J. Price, cabbage, 2nd. prize.

R. S. Shapton, carrots, 1st. prize; cucumbers, 2nd. prize; cauliflower 1st. prize.

Henry Black, carrots, 2nd prize.

Thomas Wetzell, white onions, 1st prize.

A. Eckhund, red onions, 1st. prize; cauliflower 2nd. prize.

Frank Kane, red onions, 2nd prize.

October 8 another bargain Saturday will be held at which time valuable prizes will be given for grain, corn, potatoes and fruit. Watch for the announcement of prizes later, and everybody come to Charlevoix and see what our farmers are doing.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 37 years' experience in cases, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 75 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 50 and the zeal of my early life is spent in aiding suffering manhood. I learn that my time is short, but while I have power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking cure, I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought cure in their grasp, and if you send for my free prescriptions and book of private writings to men only, the result of study since I began practice as a student, I have not been disappointed in a case. Both have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED ME. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself again.

If you are suffering from any of the following ills LET ME SEND YOU A RECIPE in a plain sealed envelope that you can use in your own home. I am confident that you will thank me every day that it ever came to you, and I know that it will cure you, as I have tested it for years.

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally.

ESSENTIALS FOR GOOD DIRT ROADS

Much Depends on Grading and Drainage.

WATER IS A CHIEF ENEMY.

Any Slight Damage Should Be Repaired Immediately to Prevent Mudholes From Growing—After the Highway Is Completed Strict Attention Is Necessary to Maintain It.

When one stops to consider the number of miles of road in any state of the Union and compare this aggregate with the very small mileage of improved road one can see readily that it will be a great many years and perhaps generations before all, or even half, of the roads are surfaced with some hard material.

For this reason one should give careful consideration and thought to the construction and maintenance of dirt roads, which will continue to represent the greatest mileage for years to come.

WELL BUILT DIRT ROAD

[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

In planning out a system of dirt roads for a state or even a county it is just as necessary to plan out the location and construction of the outlying dirt roads as it is of the highways which are surfaced with macadam or other hard material and of which these dirt roads are the feeders.

In road construction the ultimate end is to reach a certain point by the most economic route. Thus in its location the grade is one of the most important factors to be considered. While a steep grade may shorten the distance between two points, it is false economy inasmuch as the load a horse can pull decreases very rapidly with the increase in grade, and it will be found that it is far more economical to increase the distance and decrease the grade.

The earth road is more susceptible to damage by water than any of the specially surfaced roads, and therefore any little breaks or holes that may be made in an earth road by rain or a heavy load should be repaired immediately to prevent their growing into mudholes. As water is the greatest enemy of any road, so drainage is the most important consideration in road building. The rain which falls on the road must be permitted to run off as rapidly as possible and by a very easy grade.

After the road is located and graded the preparations are made for the drainage the surface of the roadbed should be brought into just as smooth a condition as possible. The center of the road must be the highest and the crown slope gradually to the ditches. The same care should be taken in constructing the surface of the dirt road that is given to the surface of a macadam or a smadeby road. The surface of a dirt road should be free from all stumps, rocks and vegetable matter, for if not the cost of maintenance will be greatly increased and the cost of hauling will be much more.

It is necessary that a dirt road after once it is constructed be maintained as a dirt road if it is to be kept in the best condition. In repairing it do not use rock, gravel or brush, but use dirt of nearly the same character as that of the roadbed in order to make the roadway uniform, so that it wears well and evenly. If holes and ruts are filled with rock, gravel or brush the wearing effect will be uneven and will cause other holes to be formed.

When the road surface is made entirely of dirt it can be kept in condition by means of the split log drag. This simple contrivance, if used regularly after a rain when the roadbed is moist, will smooth and shape up the road so that as soon as it is dried out it will be smooth and hard. The drag will fill up the ruts and holes.

Another point to bear in mind in connection with a dirt road is that it should be exposed as much as possible to sunshine and wind on account of their drying effect. Shade is good for a macadam road, but bad for a dirt road. Many a muddy place on a dirt road has been remedied by cutting away the shade and giving the sun and wind a chance to dry out the roadbed.

RURAL ROUTES AND ROADS.

Postal Department Has Become Strong Agency of Highway Improvement.

The marvelous development of the rural mail service shows how greatly the people prize this daily blessing and indicates that they would be extremely reluctant to give it up or be deprived of it for any reason. This being so, the postal department has in its power to become a stronger agency for highway improvement.

There are certainly few communities that would give up their mail service rather than improve their roads, and if the department should see fit to put it up to the people where the roads are bad, give them the choice of making better roads or doing without mail, it seems that they would, in common parlance, "get busy." The department has sent out a number of bulletins containing a warning, and these are said to have been partially effective. Part of the last bulletin issued to postmasters contained this:

"You are directed to inform yourself with reference to the condition of roads and bridges on the rural routes out of your office, and if you find that they require improvements you should present the matter in the strongest and most positive way to the patrons and road officials, informing them that improvements must be made as soon as practicable. If, after a reasonable time has elapsed, the improvements have not been made or started, you will report the fact to this office in order that action may be taken looking to the discontinuance of the service.

"The department is not immediately concerned in elaborate road improvements, but in the interest of the best service to the largest number of patrons it must insist upon roads being kept in good repair, the lack of which is usually due to improper drainage and unsuitable grading and surface work, which can be easily and cheaply accomplished by timely work and the regular use of the split log drag or similar device."

TO TEACH ROAD BUILDING.

Colleges In Three States Establish Chairs of Good Roads.

The board of directors of the Texas Agricultural and Mechanical college has decided to establish a chair of good roads. The state of Washington and the state of Virginia have done the same. The Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, in citing this, hopes that the next Arkansas legislature will do the same thing.

"If we had all over this state men who have been taught to build roads we should soon have better roads," it says, "Some of the graduates in road building would devote themselves to the engineering profession of highway construction and maintenance.

"Others, in various lines of business and especially in farming, would be useful to their communities in the matter of highways. How fortunate, for instance, would a township be to have for road overseer a graduate in road building!"

Interesting to Roadmakers.

The number of automobiles now owned in the United States is estimated at 250,000, and the number is rapidly increasing.

France is said to have the most superb system of highways in the world. It is said that her good roads have cost her $2,000,000,000.

Scientific road builders are concentrating attention on securing a road surface that will withstand the tremendous wear and tear of automobiles. Nothing damages an improved road as much as a heavy machine driven at a high rate of speed. Little or no damage is inflicted by automobiles moving at any rate up to twenty miles an hour. Beyond that the damage is plainly seen.

It is claimed that nine-tenths of the dust produced by man comes from his streets and highways. The roads, therefore, have been dubbed the "national dust factory." The dustless road is an ideal of builders. Dust not only means that the improved road is wearing away, but it is highly injurious to public health, to stock and to crops along the way.

Bill Nye's Good Roads Sermon.

"Our wagon roads throughout the country," said Bill Nye, "are a disgrace to civilization, and before we undertake to supply underwear and sealskin covered Bibles with flexible backs to the Africans it might be well to put a few dollars into the relief of gulled and broken down horses that have lost their health on our miserable highways."—Extract From "State's Duty."

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS By MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1907 by BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Neil, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winnsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER V.—Plum and Neil plan to escape on the Typhoon. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Neil's sister. She is not yet married to Strang, but some mysterious influence seems to be forcing her into the union.

CHAPTER VI.—Plum suggests carrying Marion off to the ship at midnight, and sailing away with her. Neil approves of the idea and they plan to include Winnsome, with whom Neil is in love, in the enterprise. Plum discovers that the Typhoon is gone. He meets Marion and relieves her anxiety by telling her that Neil has left the island. The thunder of a gun is heard, and Plum declares Casey is bombarding St. James.

CHAPTER VII.—Marion tells him that his ship has been captured by the Mormons, and that the guns are guns of triumph. She pleads with him to leave the island and to prevent her brother from returning. She says nothing can save her from Strang. Plum finds Price raving mad. In a lucid interval he tells Nat that Strang is drowned, that armed men are descending on the island.

CHAPTER VIII.—Nat learns from Marion's parents that she has gone to Strang in obedience to a summons. He goes to the castle to look for her. One of Strang's wives tells him that she is gone and urges him to leave the island. He is confronted by Strang.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Six Castle Chambers.

"Forgive me," he spoke gently. "I have come—for—Marion." He felt that he had no reason to lie to this woman. His face betrayed his own anguish as he came nearer to her. "I want Marion," he repeated. "My God, won't you tell me—?"

She struggled to calm herself as he spoke the girl's name.

"Marion is not here," she said. She crushed his hands against her bosom and a softer look came into her eyes; her voice was low and sweet, as it had been the morning he asked for Strang. As she saw the despair deepening in the man's face a great pity swept over her and she stretched out her arms to him with an aching cry. "Marion is gone—gone—gone," she moaned, "and you must go, too! O, I know you love her—she told me that you loved her, as I love Strang, my king! We have both lost—lost—and you must go—as—I—shall—go!" She turned away from him with a cry so heart-breaking in its pain that Nathaniel felt himself trembling to the soul. In another instant she had faced him again, fighting back a strange calm into her face.

"I love Marion," she breathed softly. "I would help you—I would help her—if I could." For a moment her pale beautiful face was filled with a light that might have shone from the face of an angel. "Don't you understand?" she continued, scarcely above a whisper. "I have been Strang's one great love—his life—until Marion came into his heart. I have lost—you have lost—but mine is the more bitter because Marion loves you, and Strang—"

With a cry Nathaniel sprang to her side. The candle fell from his hand, sputtered on the floor, and left them in darkness.

"Marion loves me! You say that Marion loves me?"

The woman's voice came to him in a whisper filled with the sweetness of sympathy.

"She said so tonight—in this room. She told me that she loved you as she never thought that she could love a man in this world. O, my God, is that not a balm for your heart, if it is broken? And Strang—my Strang—has forgotten his love for me!"

Nathaniel reached out his arms. They found the woman and for a time he held her hands in his, while a great silence fell upon them. He could hear the sobbing of her breath and as her fingers tightened about his own his heart seemed bursting with its hatred of this man who called himself a prophet of God; a hatred that burned furiously even as his being throbbed with the wild joys of the words he had just heard.

"Where is Marion?" he pleaded.

"I don't know," replied the woman. "They took her away alone. The others have gone to the temple."

"Do you think she is at the temple?" he inquired insistently.

"No. One of the others came back a little while ago. She said that Marion was not there."

"Where is Strang?"

This time he felt the woman tremble.

"Strang—"

She drew her hands away from him. There was a strange quiver in her voice.

"Yes—where is Strang?"

There came no reply.

"Tell me—where is he?"

"I don't know."

"Is he at the temple?"

"I don't know."

He could hear her stifled breath; he could almost feel her trembling. An arm's reach out there in the darkness. What a woman was this whose heart the Mormon king had broken for a new love!

"Listen," he said gently. "I am going to find Marion. I am going to take her away. Tomorrow you shall have Strang again—if he is alive!"

There was no answer and he moved slowly back to the door. He closed it after him as he entered the hall. Once in the big room he paused for a moment under the hanging lamp to examine his pistol and then went outside. The grove in which the castle stood was absolutely deserted. So far as he could see not even a guard watched over the property of the king. Nathaniel had become too accustomed to the surprises of Beaver island to wonder at this. He could see by the lights flaring along the harbor that the castle was in an isolated position and easy of attack. From what Strang's wife had told him and the evidences of panic in the chambers of the harem he believed that the Mormon king had abandoned the castle to its fate and that the approaching conflict would center about the temple.

Was Marion at the temple? If so he realized that she was beyond his reach. But the woman had said that she was not there. Where could she have gone? Why had not Strang taken her with his wives? In a flash Nathaniel thought of Arbor Croche and Obadiah—the two men who always knew what the king was doing. If he could find the sheriff alone—if he could only nurse Obadiah back into sane life again! He thrust his pistol into its holster. There was but one thing for him to do and that was to return to the old councilor. It would be madness for him to go down to St. James. He had lost—Strang had won. But his love for Marion was undying. If he found her Strang's wife it would make no difference to him. It would all be evened up when he killed the king. For Marion loved him—loved him—

He turned his face toward Obadiah's, his heart singing the glad words which the woman had spoken to him back there in the sixth chamber.

And as he was about to take the first step in that long race back to the mad councilor's he heard behind him the approach of quick feet. He crouched behind a clump of bushes and waited. A shadowy form was hurrying through the grove. It passed close to him, mounted the castle steps and in the doorway turned and looked back for an instant in the direction of St. James.

Nathaniel's lips quivered; the pounding of his heart half choked him; a shriek of mad, terrible joy was ready to leap from his lips.

There in the dim glow of the great lamp stood Strang, the Mormon king.

CHAPTER IX.

The Hand of Fate.

Like a panther Nathaniel crouched and watched the man on the steps. His muscles jerked, his hands were clenched; each instant he seemed about to spring. But he held himself back until Strang had passed through the door. Then he slipped along the log wall of the castle, hugging the shadows, fearing that the king might reappear and see him in time to close the door. What an opportunity fate had made for him! His fingers itched to get at Strang's thick bull-like throat. He felt no fear, no hesitation about the outcome of the struggle with this giant prophet of God. He did not plan to shoot, for a shot would destroy the secret of Marion's fate. He would choke the truth from Strang; rob him of life slowly, gasp by gasp, until in the horror of death the king would reveal her hiding place—would tell what he had done with her.

Then he would kill him!

There was the strength of tempered steel in his arms; his body, slender as an athlete's, quivered to hurl itself into action. Up the steps he crept so cautiously that he made no sound. In the intensity of his purpose Nathaniel looked only ahead of him—to the door. He did not see that another figure was stealing through the gloom behind him as cautiously, as quietly as himself. He passed through the door and stood erect. Strang had not seen him. He had not heard him. He was standing with his huge back toward him, facing the hall that led to the sixth chamber—and the woman. Nathaniel drew his pistol. He would not shoot, but Strang might be made to tell the truth with death leveling itself at his heart. He groped behind him, found the door, and slammed it shut. There would be no retreat for the king!

And the man who turned toward him at the slamming of that door, turned slowly, coolly, and gazed into the black muzzle of his pistol looked, indeed every inch of him a king. The muscles of his face betrayed no surprise, no fear. His splendid nerve was unshaken, his eyes unfaltering as they rose above the pistol to the face behind it. For fifteen seconds there was a strange terrible silence as the eyes of the two men met. In that quarter of a minute Nathaniel knew that he had not guessed rightly. Strang was not afraid. He would not tell him where Marion was. The insuperable courage of this man maddened Captain Plum and unconsciously his finger fell upon the trigger of his pistol. He almost shrieked the words that he meant to speak calmly:

"Where is Marion?"

"She is safe, Captain Plum. She is where the friends who are invading us from the mainland will have no chance of finding her."

Strang spoke as quietly as though in his own office beside the temple. Suddenly he raised his voice.

"She is safe, Captain Plum—safe!"

His eyes wavered, and traveled beyond. As accurately as a striking serpent Nathaniel measured that glance. It had gone to the door. He heard a movement, felt a draft of air, and in an instant he whirled about with his pistol pointed to the door. In another instant he had fired and the huge form of Arbor Croche toppled headlong into the room. A roar like that of a beast came from behind him and before he could turn again Strang was upon him. In that moment he felt that all was lost. Under the weight of the Mormon king he was crushed to the floor; his pistol slipped from his grasp; two great hands choked a despairing cry from his throat. He saw the prophet's face over him, distorted with passion, his huge neck bulging, his eyes flaming like angry garnets. He struggled to free his pinioned arms, to wrench off the death grip at his throat, but his efforts were like those of a child against a giant. In a last terrible attempt he drew up his knees inch by inch under the weight of his enemy; it was his only chance—his only hope. Even as he felt the fingers about his throat sinking like hot iron into his flesh and the breath slipping from his body he remembered this murderous knee-punch of the rough fighters of the inland seas and with all the life that remained in him he sent it crushing into the abdomen of the Mormon king. It was a moment before he knew that it had been successful, before the film cleared from his eyes and he saw Strang groveling at his feet; another moment and he hurled himself on the prophet. His fist shot out like a hammer against Strang's jaw. Again and again he struck until the great shaggy head fell back limp. Then his fingers twined themselves like the links of a chain about the purplish throat and he choked until Strang's eyes opened wide and lifeless and his convulsions ceased. He would have held on until there was no doubt of the end, had not the king's wife—the woman whose misery he had shared that night—suddenly flung herself with a piercing cry, between him and the blackened face, clutching at his hands with all her fragile strength.

His Fingers Twined About the Purplish Throat.

"My God, you are killing him—killing him!" she moaned.

Her eyes blazed as she tore at his fingers.

"You are killing him—killing him!" she shrieked. "He has not destroyed Marion! You said you would take her and leave him—for me—" She struck her head against his breast, tearing the flesh of his wrists with her nails.

Nathaniel loosened his grip and staggered to his feet.

"For you!" he panted. "If you had only come—a little sooner—" He stumbled to his pistol and picked it up. "I am afraid he is—dead!"

He did not look back.

Arbor Croche barred the door. He had not moved since he had fallen. His head was twisted so that his face was turned to the glow of the lamp and Nathaniel shuddered as he saw where his shot had struck. He had apparently died with that last cry on his lips.

There was no longer a fear of the Mormons in Nathaniel. He believed the king and Arbor Croche dead, and that in the gloom and excitement of the night he could go among the people of St. James undiscovered. A great load was lifted from his soul, for if he had not been in time to save Marion he had at least delivered her after a short bondage. He had now only to save Marion and she would go with him, for she loved him—and Strang was no more.

He hurried through the grove toward the temple. Even before he had come near to it he could see that a great crowd had congregated there. The street which he passed was deserted. No lights shone in the houses. Even the dogs were gone. For the first time he understood what it meant. The whole town had fled to that huge log stronghold for protection. Buildings and trees shut out his view seaward but he could see the flare of great fires mounting into the sky and he knew that those who were not at the temple were guarding the shore.

Suddenly he almost fell over a figure in his path. It was an old woman mumbling and sobbing incoherently as she stumbled weakly in the direction of the temple. Like an inspiration the thought came to him that here was his opportunity of gaining admittance to that multitude of women and children. He seized the old woman by the arm and spoke words of courage to her as he half carried her on her way. A few minutes more and a blaze of light burst upon them and the great square in which the temple was situated lay open before them. Half a hundred yards ahead a fire was burning, oil and pine sent their lurid flame high up into the night, and in the thick gloom behind it, intensified by the blinding glare, Nathaniel saw the shadows of men. He caught the old woman in his arms and went on boldly. He passed close to a thin line of waiting men, saw the faint glint of firelight on their rifles, and staggering past them unchallenged with his weight he stopped for a moment to look back. The effect was startling. Beyond the three great fires that blazed around the temple the clearing was bathed in a sea of light; in its concealment of giant trees the temple

DO YOU WORK FOR YOUR TOWN?

The Movement to Help It Along Needs You.

IF IT PROSPERS SO DO YOU.

It Cannot Win In the Battle For Supremacy Unless Each of Its Citizens Does His Share—We Can All Boost at Least, Even if We Do Not Build, In Our Respective Towns.

Every merchant should be a good citizen; interested in bettering the town in which he gains a living, say town development. Here are some points to consider:

Where is our town on the map?
Who knows our town is on the map?
Who cares—other than our home folks?
What does our town mean industrially to America?
Anything?
What is its rank in the American development game?
What's the score?
Are we really in the game?

Boys, it is almighty important the position our town takes in this race for municipal supremacy.

And the old town cannot fight her battles without you and me to boost. We can boost at least, if we do not build.

No town is better than her men.

No town ever went ahead without men to push her ahead.

A lazy farmer allows his crops to run to weeds.

A lazy townsman allows his town to run to weeds—literally and figuratively.

Let's cut down the weeds.

Let's cultivate our ground.

There is a reason for our town being on the map or it would not be there.

Let us study our town a little.

Find out why we are on the map; why you and I and our neighbors settled in this spot instead of some other. In making this inquiry we probably will discover reasons why other persons, other business men, would like to live and do business in our town. We will discover our advantages.

After we know our town, let's tell others; let's pass the information around; send it abroad.

Our private business is important and must not be neglected, but our general business interests are inseparably associated with the welfare of the town.

If the town prospers we will have a better chance to prosper.

What are you and what am I willing to do to make our town more prominent on the map?

TAKING CHILDREN TO SCHOOL

How an Automobile Is Utilized at Small Cost In Colorado.

A prominent educational superintendent who recently made a tour of inspection of the various states to become acquainted with the methods of instruction and getting pupils to the schoolhouses makes the following statement:

I have just come from an official visit to the schools of Imperial county, a green and fertile region that less than a dozen years ago was the grim and desolate heart of the Colorado desert. In a night a wonderful civilization has sprung up. More than eighty schools are already in operation. The people in this new world are peculiarly free—free from tradition, free from common prejudice, free to do the best things they know. They can go directly to the newest and best educational ideas at once, without intermediate evolution.

I have picked out one of these ideas as worth passing on to the school people in other parts of the state or country. It is worth reflective attention and is illustrated by a huge automobile that is used at the town of Imperial to knit the surrounding country into a strong school organization. Every day it makes its trips into the country, gathering up the older children for the agricultural high school and the younger ones for a strong grammar school in the town. The machine has seats in front and a freight compartment in the rear.

It costs the schools about $100 per month, or less than 15 cents per day per child. The value of the machine is about $3,500. Its use compelled the building of good roads immediately. It is a means of communication and an agent of civilization for the community.

The moral of the story lies in the idea of neighborhood co-operation. Perhaps this particular thing cannot be used elsewhere, but it shows that a line of intercommunication can be established in sparsely settled regions that brings strength and life and social feeling to the neighborhood that unites the weak and dying districts into strong, ambitious, graded schools and high schools adapted to rural life.

THE POWER OF A LETTER.

When Well Worded It Is a Valuable Asset For a Business Man.

Among today's business men the art of letter writing is a most valuable one and represents capital to the man who is so fortunate as to possess it. Your letters are personal messengers carrying your ideas, and they can be made to work for you almost as well as a living servant by personal persuasion and argument.

With a right command of language and skill in tactfully applying it you can make your proposal or statement nearly as well by letter as if face to face with your man. You can back it up by example, stir up interest, sustain it, convince, argue, drive home the point and get the business by the proper use of paper and ink.

But a weak letter does nothing. If you have not studied letter writing from a good many points already, then there is something for you to do now. The formal letter of yesterday, with its say-nothing, hackneyed and meaningless phrases, can be put aside by progressive men as a thing of the past.

An invention which gives promise of being of immense benefit to the orange packing industry has lately been installed in the plant of the Redlands Orange Growers' association. In brief, it is a device in which the fruit is subjected to an alcohol bath, the perfectly sound and solid fruit going to the bottom of the tank and the light and imperfect fruit remaining at the surface, whence it is removed by an endless conveyor. This simple device not only accomplishes what the human hand and eye cannot, but it has been found that fruit given the alcohol bath keeps longer and in a better state of preservation through a destruction of all rot spores on the surface. The cost of the operation is 1¾ cents per box for alcohol and 2¾ cents for labor.

BRAZIL'S LEADER IS ON WAY HERE

President Elect Fonseca Highly Entertained In Europe.

IS SOLDIER AND STATESMAN.

Marvelously Popular In Own Land Despite Anti-military Feeling—Great South American Republic Possessor of Most Formidable Warship Now In Commission and Heavy Immigration.

The visit which is announced of Marshal Hermes da Fonseca, the leading soldier and the president elect of Brazil, may be regarded as a step toward more intimate relations between the United States and the great South American republic. Since his election last March the marshal has been visiting the capitals of Europe, palpably, though not avowedly, with political intent.

Brazil, as was shown at the last Hague peace conference, is more than eager to impress herself on the world as, if not quite, yet a first class power, at least soon to attain that rank. The marshal, who is a man of brilliant parts and now clothed with some of the dignity of the office he is soon to hold, is an informal ambassador of no small impressiveness.

Month's Stay In America.

Marshal Fonseca is to stay a month. This will leave him ample time to make a call on President Diaz of Mexico and to visit one or two of the leading South American republics on his way home should he so desire, for his inauguration as president does not occur until Nov. 15.

Probably the most elaborate program ever prepared for the entertainment in the United States of a dignitary from South America is being arranged for General Fonseca. From the time he lands in New York until his departure he will be kept on the go, seeing the sights of America and being entertained with much display.

Charge Silva of the Brazilian embassy is arranging for the presentation of General Fonseca to President Taft at Beverly. Immediately after that formality he will visit Valley Forge, Pa., to meet Secretary Knox. Receptions are being planned at Philadelphia, Boston, Washington, Chicago and Pittsburg.

To Inspect West Point.

On account of his own accomplishments in military organization the Brazilian will be taken to West Point and to Annapolis to inspect the schools there.

He is by far the most distinguished representative of Brazil who has appeared in this country since the Emperor Don Pedro made his visit in 1876. He has a marvelous popularity among his own people, as was shown in his election to the presidency despite the anti-military feeling, which is strong in Brazil.

He has also met with high recognition abroad. He attended the army maneuvers in Germany in 1908, and the kaiser then singled him out for special attentions and honors.

The first of Brazil's three Dreadnoughts has already arrived at Rio de Janeiro. It is perhaps the most formidable warship now actually in commission. The second, the Sao Paulo, is to be ready for service in October.

In 1906 there was an extension of 10,649 kilometers (roughly 12,000 miles) in the Brazilian railway system. In a few months more 2,383 kilometers, or about 1,430 miles, additional will be open to traffic.

Immigration Is Large.

In 1909 85,410 immigrants landed in Brazil. Of these 61,162 paid their own expenses; 23,083 of them were agriculturists. At present thirty-one colonies are in process of development, of which thirteen are backed by the states, the federal government merely guaranteeing to supply the colonists. The enterprising state of Sao Paulo is backing six colonies out of its own resources.

The weak spot so far in the national life is its finances. The last financial year left a deficit of nearly $100,000,000 Brazilian dollars (about 54 cents to the dollar in gold and nearly 11,000,000 in paper about 32 cents to the dollar).

"Miracles will never cease." At least so the saying goes. But the sensible-minded man thinks a lot less about miracles than he does about everyday means of making his business pay better.

If farming is his business the fence question is a great big vital consideration.

That more than one million farmers have purchased American Fence is a standing fact that he must note—if he wants to be right with himself. It's mighty good judgment to examine and price the American Fence—to see how different it is is from ordinary fences—how perfectly there is a weight and style adapted to his particular needs—before he buys a rod of any kind.

Kubick went through the pockets of Mr. O'Leary's pants, which were hanging in the livery barn, Sunday afternoon, but was quickly captured by Undersheriff Werkel. Monday he was sentenced to ninety days at the Detroit House of Correction, where he was taken Tuesday morning by Sheriff McWain.

An important business change took place last week by the appointment of M. C. Coyle as superintendent of the Detroit and Charlevoix railroad. Mr. Coyle is also in charge of the Mackinac division of the M. C. R. R. Auditor W. P. Squier will continue with the company and as Mr. Coyle will probably still continue to devote his attention to the main line, the branch line will be virtually in charge of Mr. Squire.—East Jordan Herald.

The Northern Michigan Press club held its fall meeting at Elk Rapids the three last days of last week, and it is reported to have been one of the best meetings of the society ever held. The name and territory covered by the club was slightly changed at this meeting, the new name being the Western Michigan Press club and will cover the territory now embraced in the Western Michigan Development bureau, and will co-operate with that organization. Perry Powers of the Cadillac Daily News, was elected president of the club, and its next meeting will be held at Cadillac during the fair week in 1911. G. W. Perry of the Elk Rapids Progress, was re-elected secretary-treasurer of the association.

The Palace Clothing store will be closed from six o'clock Monday night, October 3, until six o'clock Wednesday night, on account of Jewish holidays. 39tf

AN ANTI-SPITTING MOVE.

Women War on Those Who Expectorate on Flushing Streets.

Anti-expectoratingitis! Never heard of it before? Well, it is a beneficial civic affliction that is prevalent in the town of Flushing, N. Y. This affliction (if the writer may call it such) was brought about by the Good Citizenship league, which is composed of the wealthiest women of the town.

A delegation headed by Mrs. Winifred Lay called on Borough President Dresser and urged him to support their war on the spitters, a class obnoxious to any progressive town or city. The borough president notified them that he would do all in his power to assist them in their work and notified the health board and advised that each member of the league be empowered to make arrests of violators.

From now on those who go about the streets expectorating will be taken before a magistrate and permitted to contribute $2 each to the town's finances.

If other towns and cities whose citizens are wide awake and consider the health of themselves and fellow townspeople and the advancement of their respective communities would follow the example of these society women they would realize within a short time the benefits that can be derived from it.

Keeping the Sidewalks Clean.

Property and residence owners who have allowed the mud and dirt washed down on the sidewalks of their premises by the heavy rains to remain had better get out their hoes and shovels and "clean up" if they do not desire to be summoned to court. Warrants for such property owners in Kansas City, Mo., were recently issued by a city councilor on complaint of an inspector of the street repair department. If this splendid idea is carried on by other towns and cities it will tend toward making the whole country clean and beautiful.

A GOOD POSITION.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or Railway Telegraphy. Since the eight-hour law became effective and since the Wireless Companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $50 to $80 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R. R. and Wireless Officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write them for full details at Cincinnati, O., or Philadelphia, Pa. 38tf

THE CREAMERY PROMOTER.

A good many queries are being received by agricultural journals in different sections of the country relative to the dependence that can be placed upon the so called creamery promoter. The reply given in every instance that has come under our notice is that these chaps should be given a wide berth. This advice is sound and should be followed. These fellows know about as much of the creamery business, the conditions which exist in any given locality and the problems which would arise, as a cat does about Hebrew. They are in the business of promoting creameries primarily for the purpose of filling their pockets with easy money and not to further the dairy or creamery business and to bring profits to the patrons of a creamery enterprise. If the farmers in any section make up their minds that they want to embark in the creamery business—and the decision is a wise one where there are enough patrons to support it—the sensible thing to do is to call in some one who has a permanent postoffice address, the state dairy commissioner, some representative he may send or some man of repute who is known to have had extended and successful experience in the creamery business. Many an enterprise of this kind has fizzled out because of a bad start and because those interested in it did not have an adequate idea of the conditions which really existed or the degree of success that it was possible to attain. The kind of authorities referred to will know about the problems likely to confront a new project of this kind and will be able to give helpful directions and suggestions. The difference between the fat sum that would have to be forked over to a fly by night promoter and the modest sum required to defray the traveling and hotel expenses of some reputable creamery authority will go quite a way in buying equipment, coal and machine oil.

A DOUGHTY WEED PEST.

What is coming to be a nefarious weed pest in many a central state and eastern garden patch is crab grass, which is also known by the name five finger, descriptive of the five spurs or sprays into which the seed head is usually divided. This grass is late in sprouting and thus escapes much of the effect of the May and June cultivation. When the garden crops are laid by it gets busy and by Sept. 1, unless it is given frequent attention, will furnish as effective a mat over the surface of the ground as would miles of binding twine secured with twenty-penny spikes. Of course this is hyperbolical, but this figure is the only one that in any adequate degree fits the case. While this grass does not live over the winter in its root system, it yet has the pernicious faculty of sending out lusty roots wherever the recumbent joints touch the ground. The only way to rid a patch of land of it is to hack away at it during July and August and prevent any of it from producing seed. If manure contains the seed it should be well rotted and the seed destroyed before it is applied to the soil.

Where it appears in the lawn the only way to eradicate it is to dig it out with a jackknife or plow up and reseed the lawn anew. It may be kept in check in a fairly satisfactory manner by keeping the lawn grasses in a thrifty and growing condition by frequent watering during the dry weather, when the crab grass gets in its work. The removal of the clipped heads by the use of the grass catcher will reduce greatly the amount of seed which will settle among the roots of the grass to germinate next season.

A Delaware hen, bought to furnish stuffing for a pie, laid her owner 249 eggs between Jan. 27 1909, and Dec. 6 of the same year. Unlike the milking habit in dairy cows, the egg producing habit in hens seems incapable of development in any considerable degree by the selection of pullets from mothers of high egg laying capacity.

The writer varied the March pruning of his peach trees considerably this year, cutting some lightly and others severely at blossom time. It is interesting to note that those cut most heavily are not only making the most vigorous growth of new wood, which will bear next year's crop, but carry the best sized and most thrifty looking fruit at the present writing.

When one is contemplating the purchase of fruit or agricultural land in a new section it is not only a good plan to take a spade and investigate the character of the subsoil and look into the exact status of the water right if the tract is in an irrigation section, but to take the trouble of inquiring into the business integrity and financial rating of the chap with whom the farm or ranch is listed for sale.

A POSSIBLE CAUSE OF FAILURE.

Many a failure with alfalfa and clover seems directly traceable to the fact that the soil on which the seed was sown was sour and needed sweetening with an application of lime at the rate of two or three tons per acre. Where such treatment has followed previous failure with alfalfa really remarkable results have been secured. The lime should be applied to the land in manure with a spreader or spread with a seeder of some kind which will insure an even distribution. While a sour condition of soil may be inferred from the fact that clover will not grow and from the presence of sorrel, it can be determined much more definitely by running a spade into the earth a few inches and inserting a piece of blue litmus paper, which may be got at any drug store. If the soil is acid this test paper will turn from blue to pink. Of equal importance with the lime treatment is the inoculation of the soil with bacteria in the soil from an established alfalfa field. The tract intended for such use should also be well drained and have a porous subsoil of good depth.

In selecting a site for the orchard it is perhaps natural to make the mistake of choosing a soil which is in reality too rich and fat for the best production of apples. On such soil conditions seem to exist which tend to a production of wood rather than fruit growth, thus defeating the object one has in view. Pears will produce fruit on rich, moist soils, while peach trees should be set on the thinnest soil on the place.

Kansas took a step ahead as a fruit producing state when the law recently passed making the spraying for San Jose scale and other pests compulsory was declared constitutional. The law requires orchard owners to spray and otherwise properly care for their trees. Representatives of the federal department of agriculture and of the Kansas experiment station are planning to thoroughly demonstrate spraying in several counties in the eastern part of the state this season.

The soy bean is being put to a use by Chinese and Japanese farmers which might be adopted with decided advantage by American farmers who live in sections where this legume does well. The oil which is extracted from the bean is taking the place of linseed oil, while the cake which is left after the oil is removed is used with excellent results as a substitute for linseed And cottonseed meal as a stock ration. The advantage of the soy bean is that the growing of it means soil enrichment and not soil impoverishment, as is true of both flax and cotton.

The regular bearing of fruit by trees which have suffered some injury, seriously impairing their vitality, has led orchardists to experiment along the line of a purposeful cutting or wounding of orchard trees with the object in view of getting them to produce something besides healthy and glossy looking leaves. In some cases this is done by removing several narrow strips of bark lengthwise from the trunk of the tree, enough of the bark and underlying cambium being left between the strips removed so that the tree will be able to heal. Another plan followed with considerable success consists in cutting a circular trench about the tree to the depth of three or four feet and four or five feet from the trunk and severing all of the roots which cross it. In both of these methods it is well for the novice to try them on a limited scale with two or three trees.

Next fall there will be inaugurated at Lyndon, Vt., a plan that should commend itself to friends of agricultural education in other parts of the country. The characteristic feature of the plan is a labor system which will enable too unlebodied students to pay their way with the work they do on the farm connected with the Lyndon academy. The expenses for the nine months are figured at $36 for tuition, $108 for board and room and $18 for books. The boys are to be taught the theory of agriculture in the class room and will work these theories out on the farm under intelligent supervision. Remuneration is to be at the rate of 15 cents per hour, or $25 a month during the summer. This plan will enable many an energetic boy to acquire a helpful education without having acquired a bank account of his own or getting help from the old folks.

A friend whose acquaintance the writer has lately made, though seventy-five years old and financially situated so that he could well get along without working, nevertheless puts in most every day on his acre ranch, cultivating, hoeing and raking. He works in rain and shine and seems to enjoy his labor. We asked him the other day why he worked so hard, and he told us he would be lost without something to keep him busy and, besides, he felt better and had a better appetite and slept better. This working within the limits of his strength is doubtless the primary cause of his rugged health and to some extent for the genial good feeling radiating from him. It is a very simple means our good friend takes to keep himself shipshape and his view of things rational and wholesome, but yet one might well be used by many another elderly man with gain to himself and those about him.

Neighborhood Notes

We hear a lot about the large quantity of liquor that comes into Elk Rapids since local option went into effect. We admit that there is some being shipped in and brought in via the suit case and telescope route. A little looks like a lot when it comes in as contraband goods, but all criminal law is to a certain extent violated. In the old days this village supported five saloons and the most conservative estimates put the expense of maintaining a saloon at not less than $30 a day or $150 a day for the five, that we as a community supported. Now if $150 worth a week is slipped in or brought in suit cases or under the belt, it looks like a lot, but then it is only one-sixth the amount that was blown over the bars previous to May 1. We are not prepared to admit that $150 worth of booze, or even one-half that quantity, comes into Elk Rapids each week.—Progress.

On Wednesday night the Harbor Springs train ran into a drove of five deer at Page. There were three old deer and two fawns and all were standing on or near the track watching the lights of the approaching train. The three old deer left the track upon the approach of the train but the two little ones seemed fascinated and were run into and instantly killed.—Petoskey Record.

As proof that Harbor Springs is the most peaceable town on the great Lakes, about a year ago our city was presented with a souvenir cannon, from the famous Gettysburg battlefield, which, on account of the sleepy, peaceful attitude of our citizens, the city fathers have not had an occasion to even mount; it still slumbers peacefully where it was dumped in the old court house yard corn-field.—Harbor Springs Graphic.

Mr. Harrison M. Parker formerly business manager of the Chicago Tribune and now vice-president of the Stack-Parker Advertising agency of this city, is planning to aid materially in the agricultural development of western Michigan. Mr. Parker now owns over 2,000 acres of western Michigan land. His latest purchase consummated last week, included a tract of 927 acres in Muskegon county which Mr. Parker intended to devote to stock raising. "I have had my eye on Michigan for some time," said Mr. Parker today. "I believe Chicago is destined to become the biggest city in the United States. The people who live in Chicago have to be fed. I believe that Michigan is the logical place for truck, dairy and cattle farms. I have been picking up land in Michigan for the last five years. I am very glad to say that I own at the present time over 2,000 acres of it. I believe that the land on the east coast of Lake Michigan will be worth vastly more than it is now, in the course of the next 25 years."—Grand Rapids Herald 15th.

The state banks of Michigan are in an excellent condition according to the report of State Bank Commissioner Zimmerman. There are 387 banks and five trust companies in the state under supervision of the state banking department.

Sixteen new banks have been organized during the year ending September 1, with an aggregate capital of $365,000, while ten banks have increased their capital stock for a total of $1,118,000.

Since June 30, the aggregate business of the state banks has shown a material increase. The increase amounts to $2,503,101.57. Net loans have increased $4,992,455.50, while the commercial deposits show a gain of $82,702.13. Savings deposits have been increased $2,212,535.17.

During the past twelve months loans have increased $31,025,316.73 and deposits have gained $8,037,170.10.

Commissioner Zimmerman says that the insolvent Peoples' Savings bank of Mt. Pleasant has been closed up and dividends of 95 per cent paid to creditors and depositors. The receiver's report for the White Pigeon bank shows that creditors and depositors received 98 per cent dividends.

The department during the past year made 562 bank examinations.

CURE YOUR KIDNEYS

No Need to Take Any Further Risks.

Why will people continue to suffer the agonies of kidney complaint, backache, urinary disorders, lameness, headaches, languor, why allow themselves to become chronic invalids, when a certain cure is offered them?

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use, because it gives to the kidneys the help they need to perform their work.

If you have any, even one, of the symptoms of kidney diseases, cure yourself now, before diabetes, dropsy or Bright's disease sets in. Can Charlevoix residents demand more convincing proof than the following:

Everett W. Davis, Maple St., Mancelona, Mich., says "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills to be a valuable kidney remedy. My back pained me severely and I had other symptoms of kidney complaint. Some time ago I obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and it did not take them long to remove my aches and pains. I have no hesitation whatever in giving Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement."

Good Fishing.

An enthusiast was telling some friends about a proposed fishing trip to a lake in Colorado he had in contemplation.

"Are there any trout there?" asked one friend.

"Thousands of 'em," replied the enthusiast.

"Will they bite easily?" asked another friend.

"Will they?" said the enthusiast. "Why, they're absolutely vicious. A man has to hide behind a tree to bait a hook."—St. Paul Dispatch.

was buried in gloom. From the gloom a hundred cool men might slaughter five times their number charging across that death square!

Nathaniel could not repress a shudder as he looked. Screened behind each of the three fires was a cannon. He figured that there were more than a hundred rifles in that silent cordon of men. What was there on the opposite side of the temple?

He turned with the old woman and joined the throng that was seething about the temple doors. There were women, children and old men, crushing and crowding, fighting with panic-stricken fierceness for admittance to the thick log walls. Through the doors there came the low thunder of countless voices pierced by the shrill cries of little children. Foot by foot Nathaniel fought his way up the steps. At the top were drawn a dozen men forming barriers with their rifles. One of them shoved him back.

"Not you!" he shouted. "This is for the women!"

Nathaniel fell back, filled with horror. A glance had shown him the vast dimly lighted interior of the temple packed to suffocation. What sins had this people wrought that it thus feared the vengeance of the men from the mainland! He felt the sweat break out upon his face as he thought of Marion being in that mob, tired and fainting with her terrible day's experience—perhaps dying under the panic-stricken feet of those stronger than herself. He hoped now, at that which at first had filled him with despair—that Strang had hidden Marion away from the terror and suffocation of this multitude that fought for its breath within the temple. Freeing himself of the crowd he ran to the farther side of the building. A fourth fire blazed in his face. But on this side there was no cannon; scarcely a score of men were guarding the rear of the temple.

For a full minute he stood concealed in the gloom. He realized now that it would be useless to return to Oladiah. The old councilor could probably have told him all that he had discovered for himself: that Marion had fled to the castle—that Strang, mistaking her purpose, had forced the mainlanders to seek a landing farther down the coast. The light of dawn had already begun to disperse the thick gloom of night, and an eighth of a mile below Nathaniel the Mormon forces were creeping slowly along the shore. The pale ghostly mistiness of the sea hung like a curtain between him and what was beyond, and even as he strained his eyes to catch a glimpse of the avenging fleet a vivid light leaped out of the white distance, followed by the thunder of a cannon. He saw the head of the Mormon line falter. In an instant it had been thrown into confusion. A second shot from the sea—a storm of cheering voices from out of that white chaos of mist—and the Mormons fell back from the shore in a panic-stricken, fleeing mob. Were those frightened cowards the fierce rangers of whom he had heard so much? Were they the men who had made themselves masters of a kingdom in the land of their enemies—whose mere name carried terror for a hundred miles along the coast? He was stupefied, bewildered. He made no effort to conceal himself as they approached the hill, but drew his pistol, ready to fire down upon them as they came. Suddenly there was a change. So quickly that he could scarcely believe his eyes the flying Mormons had disappeared. Not a man was visible upon that narrow plain between the hill and the sea. Like a huge covey of quail they had dropped to the ground, their rifles lost in that ghostly gloom through which the voices of the mainlanders came in fierce cries of triumph. It was magnificent! Even as the crushing truth of what it all meant came to him, the fighting blood in his veins leaped at the sight of it—the pretended effect of the shots from sea, the shrill confusion, the disorderly flight, the wonderful quickness and precision with which the rabble of armed men had thrown itself into ambush!

Would the mainlanders rush into the trap? Had some keen eye seen those shadowy forms dropping through the mist? Each instant the ghostly pall that shut out vision seaward seemed drifting away. Nathaniel's staring eyes saw a vague shape appear in it, an indistinct dirt-gray blotch, and he knew that it was a boat. Another followed, and then another; he heard the sound of oars, the grinding of keels upon the sand, and where the Mormons had been a few moments before the beach was now alive with mainlanders. In the growing light he could make out the king's men below him, inanimate spots in the middle of the narrow plain. Helpless he stood clutching his pistol, the horror in him growing with each breath. Could he give no warning? Could he do nothing—nothing—

At least he could join in the fight! He ran down the hill, swinging to the left of the Mormons. Half way, and he stopped as a thundering cheer swept up from the shore. The mainlanders had started toward the hill! Without rank, without order—shouting their triumph as they came they were rushing blindly into the arms of the ambush! A shriek of warning left Nathaniel's lips. It was drowned in a crash of rifle fire. Volley after volley burst from that shadowy stretch of plain. Before the furious fire the van of the mainlanders crumpled into ruin. Like chaff before a wind those behind were swept back. Apparently they were flying without waiting to fire a shot! Nathaniel dashed down into the plain. Ahead of him the Mormons were charging in a solid line, and in another moment the shore had become a mass of fighting men. Far to the left he saw a group of the mainlanders running along the beach toward the conflict. If he could only intercept them—and bring them into the rear! Like the wind he sped to cut them off, shouting and firing his pistol. He won by a hundred yards—and stood panting as they came toward him. Dawn had dispelled the mist-gloom and as the remnants of it drew nearer he discerned in the lead a figure that brought a cry of joy from his lips.

"Neil!" he shouted. "Neil—"

He turned as Marion's brother darted to his side.

"This way, friends!"

The two led the way side by side, followed by a dozen men. A moment told Nathaniel that he was much less than a lad could turn the tide of battle. Half of the mainlanders were floating in the water. Others were struggling desperately to get away in the boats. Foot by foot the Mormons were crushing them back, their battle cries now turned into despairing wails of victory. Into the rear of the struggling mass, firing as they ran, charged the handful of men behind Captain Plum and Neil. For a little space the king's men gave way before them and with wild cheers the powerful fishermen from the coast fought their way toward their comrades. Many of them were armed with long knives; some had pistols; others used their empty rifles as clubs. A dozen more men and they would have split like a wedge through the Mormon mass. Above the din of battle Nathaniel's voice rose in thundering shouts to the men in the sea, and close beside him he heard Neil shrieking out a name between his blows. Like demons they fought straight ahead, slashing with their knives. The Mormon line was thinning. The mainlanders had turned and were fighting their way back, gaining foot by foot what they had lost. Suddenly there came a terrific cheer from the plain and the hope that had flamed in Nathaniel's breast died out as he heard it. He knew what it meant—that the Mormons at St. James had come to reinforce their comrades. He fought now to reach the boats, calling to Neil, whom he could no longer see. Even in that moment he thought of Marion. His only chance was to escape with the others, his only hope of wresting her from the kingdom lay in his own freedom. He had waited too long. A crushing blow fell upon him from behind and with a last cry to Neil he sank under the trampling feet. Indistinctly there came to him the surging shock of the fresh body of Mormons. The din about him became fainter and fainter as though he was being carried rapidly away from it; shouting voices came to him in whispers, and deadened sounds, like the quick tapping of a finger on his forehead, were all that he heard of the stemly rifle fire that pursued the defeated mainlanders in their flight.

After a little he began struggling back into consciousness. There was a splitting pain somewhere in his head and he tried to reach his hand to it.

"You won't have to carry him," he heard a voice say. "Give him a little water and he'll walk."

He felt the dash of the water in his face and it put new life into him. Somebody had raised him to a sitting posture and was supporting him there while a second person bound a cloth about his head. He opened his eyes and the light of day shot into them like a stinging, burning charge of needle-points, and he closed them again with a sharp cry of pain. That second's glance had shown him that it was a woman who was binding his head. He had not seen her face. Beyond her he had caught a half-formed vision of many people and the glistening edge of the sea, and as he lay with closed eyes the murmur of voices came to him. The support at his back was taken away, slowly, as if the person who held him feared that he would fall. Nathaniel stiffened himself to show his returning strength and opened his eyes again. This time the pain was not so great. A few yards away he saw a group of people and among them were women; still farther away, so far that his brain grew dizzy as he looked, there was a black moving crowd. He was among the wounded. The Mormon women were here. Down there along the shore—among the dead—had assembled the population of St. James.

A strange sickness overpowered him and he sank back against his supporter. A cool hand passed over his face. It was a soothing, gentle touch—the hand of the woman. He felt the sweep of soft hair against his cheek—a breath whispering in his ear.

"You will be better soon."

His heart stood still.

"You will be better—"

Against his rough cheek there fell the soft pressure of a woman's lips.

Nathaniel pulled himself erect, every drop of blood in him striving for the mastery of his body, his vision, his strength. He tried to turn, but strong arms seized him from behind. A man's voice spoke to him, a man's strength held him. In an agony of appeal Marion's name burst from his lips.

"Sh-h-!" warned the voice behind him. "Are you crazy?"

The arms relaxed their hold and Nathaniel dragged himself to his knees. The woman was gone. As far as he could see there were people—scores of them, hundreds of them—multiplied into thousands and millions as he looked, until there was only a black cloud about him. He staggered to his feet and a strong hand kept him from falling while his brain slowly cleared. The millions and thousands and hundreds of people dissolved themselves into the day until only a handful was left where he had seen multitudes. He turned his face weakly to the man beside him.

"Where did she go?" he asked.

It was a boyish face into which his pleading eyes gazed, a face white with the strain of battle, reddened a little on one cheek with a smear of blood, and there was a startled, frightened look in it that did not come of the strife that had passed.

"Who? What are you talking about?"

"The woman," whispered Nathaniel. "The woman—Marion—she kissed—me—"

The young fellow's hand gripped his arm in a sudden fierce clinch.

"You've been dreaming!" he exclaimed in a threatening voice. "Shut up!" He spoke the words loudly. Then quickly he bent his face to a whisper he added: "For God's sake don't betray her! They saw her with us—everybody knew that it was the king's wife with you!"

The king's wife! Nathaniel was too weak to analyze the words beyond the fact that they carried the dread truth of his fears deep into his soul. Who would have come to him but Marion? Who else would have kissed him? It was her voice that had whispered in his ear—the thrill of her hand that had passed over his face.

Strang Was Alive.

And this man had said that she was the wife of the king! He heard the voices of other men near him but did not understand what they were saying. He knew that after a moment there was a man on each side of him holding him by the arms, and mechanically he moved his legs, knowing that they wanted him to walk. They did not guess how weak he was—how he struggled to keep from becoming too great a weight on their hands. Once or twice they stopped in their agonizing climb up the hill. On its top the cool sea air swept into Nathaniel's face and it was like water to a parched throat.

In response to several inquiries we print the grange law and decisions in regard to the holding of county conventions and election of delegates to state grange.

SECTION 1 Article IV. By Laws State grange. The voting members of the Michigan State grange shall be chosen from fourth degree members, who are in good standing, proportion to one brother and his wife (if a matron,) to each five subordinate granges, or major part thereof, in each county, also one brother and his wife, who are fifth degree members, chosen by each Pomona grange in the state; provided that a single brother and a single sister who are fifth degree members in good standing, may be elected to act as voting members in lieu of a brother and his wife who are fifth degree members in good standing.

SECTION III. The selection of voting members by subordinate granges shall take place on the first Tuesday of October of each year, by a convention of subordinate granges at the county seat of each county, unless the place of meeting has been elsewhere located by the preceeding annual convention. (Charlevoix county convention will be held at Ironton next Tuesday.)

SECTION IV. Provides that each grange in good standing shall be entitled to four delegates and no more, and that each delegate can have but one vote in the convention.

SECTION V. Provides that conventions may divide into districts for the purpose of agreeing upon the person or persons whose names are to be presented to the convention for ratification and election as delegates to the state grange.

CHICAGO WOMAN EDUCATORS' PRIDE

Mrs. Young's Handling of City's Schools Praised.

RECEIVES A $10,000 SALARY

Defeated Six Male Candidates For Position, Then Amputated Curriculume of Fade and Runs Big System on Common Sense, With the Old Log Schoolhouse as Starting Point.

Chicago's public school system is coming in for pretty close attention just now, and all because for the first time in its history a woman is running it. That woman is Dr. Ella Flagg Young, who was elected president of the National Educational association in Boston the other day.

There are other woman Ph. D.'s in this country, but Mrs. Young is the first woman chosen to run the public school system of a big city, a job requiring no end of executive ability. Chicago's school population is only second in size to New York's, and Mrs. Young wields authority over thousands and thousands of children and hundreds of teachers.

Receives $10,000 Salary.

Mrs. Young gets a salary of $10,000 a year and hence is one of the highest paid woman workers in this country. She is sixty-four and began to teach when she was sixteen. She has been a widow twenty-five years. The University of Chicago gave Mrs. Young her Ph. D. several years ago when she was already looked upon as being in the front rank of educators.

Although she was born in New York state, Mrs. Young has lived in Chicago practically all her life, has been principal of its normal school and a professor in the University of Chicago. She is editor of the Educational Bimonthly and a member of the Chicago Woman's club and the Everyday club. So much do they think of Mrs. Young that they have the Ella F. Young club in Chicago made up of woman principals in the schools.

MRS. ELLA FLAGG YOUNG.

Defeated Six Men.

Mrs. Young defeated six men for the position she now holds. It was said that she won over the board of education in her favor by sheer force of her personality.

Mrs. Young believes in cutting out some of the fads. At the time of her election she was quoted as saying:

"The time has come to put a check on the fads and to ask ourselves which of them are really useful. We must not confuse the real purposes of teaching by too many trimmings. Much that was good was added to the old log schoolhouse curriculum, but much that was useless was added also."

A radical change in the study of German in the Chicago public schools, which involves the elimination of Gothic type and German script, is under consideration by Mrs. Young in connection with the revision of the course of study now under way.

Two reasons are given by Mrs. Young for her desire to use Roman type and English script in place of the German characters. She claims that Gothic type and German script are harder on the eyes than the type and script used by English speaking people and that pupils who attempt to learn both the English and German script usually are poor penmen in both languages.

ICE, GOLD AND ESKIMO HINDER ALASKA CENSUS.

Cannot Be Finished Before Spring. Doubled Population Expected.

The Alaska census, including the enumeration of all the inhabitants of the northern territory, may not be completed before next spring, according to A. N. Evans, in charge of the bureau of education.

The entire census will not be finished along the coast before winter because of the difficulty of finding any one at home. The residents of the coast towns and villages either are in the interior prospecting or off the coast on islands engaged in fishing and canning salmon and other fish.

The work of counting the people in Alaska was begun last October with a view of getting all the white people during the winter season, when they usually are idle. The stampede to the newly discovered gold diggings drew hundreds from each camp, and the census takers were compelled to follow the miners to the interior to get the required data.

The most difficult district for the enumerators and where the influence of the bureau of education has been least felt is in the Kuskokwim region. Here the work of the census takers was in the hands of Dr. C. D. Scott. Untold hardships were endured by the doctor, who traveled over 3,000 miles to obtain data. He lost three guides and forty dogs on the trail. In all he counted less than 500 souls. The trip required seven months, and he was paid $15 per diem by Uncle Sam for his work.

In the districts where government agents never have had dealings with the natives the Eskimos were distrustful and would not give the information to the interpreters. They often carried the white men and their native talkers out of their camps by force and set their dogs on them.

It is estimated, according to the information already collected, that the northern territory will show more than double the number of people it did ten years ago, in spite of the fact that in 1900 the population was greatly increased by the Klondike gold stampede.

BEAUCHAMP, VERSATILE PEER

But Drawing of Social Lines Sometimes Went Wrong.

Lord Beauchamp, who succeeds Viscount Wolverhampton as lord president of the council, is one of the most versatile of peers. He succeeded his father as seventh holder of the earldom when he was nineteen and shortly after coming of age was a member of the London school board and mayor of Worcester.

At twenty-seven he became governor general of New South Wales and there was noted, among other things, for the exclusiveness of his official entertainments.

The story goes that for one function he issued tickets of different colors—blue ones for the more important guests and yellow for those who stood not quite so high in the social scale.

By some error a certain dignitary and his wife got cards of different colors and on arriving at Government House were requested to enter by different doors. The lady's anger rose, and she paralyzed the flunky by exclaiming, "I'll let them see that my husband and I are not a seidlitz powder!"

CHILEREN MUST ATTEND SCHOOL

Superintendent DeVoe Calls Attention to Non-Attendance.

PARENTS ARE LIABLE TO ARREST

Must Give Child Opportunity to Get Education

Compulsory Law Makes in Provision for Excusing Children Under Fourteen Years of Age From School.

Upon comparing the enrollment with the census list we find that a number of children between the ages of seven and sixteen are not yet in attendance at either public or the parochial school. We deem it timely, therefore to call attention of parents and guardians to certain provisions of the compulsory education law.

It is the intent of the law to safeguard the interests of the child primarily in securing to him his chance of an education against, not only the selfishness and indifference of his parents but even against the porents' business interests. The cumpulsory law makes no provision for excusing children under fourteen years of age from achool ottendance becouse their services would be conveient at home, or because the children have not suitable clothing. Provisions is made by law to relieve the latter condition upon application to the proper authorities.

Section one, of Act 200, 1905, provides that children between the ages of aeven and sixteen years are required to be in coutinnous and conaecutive attendance at the public achools during the entire school year, except in the following cases:

(a) Children in attendance in private or parochial schools.

(b) Children who have completed the eigth grade.

(c) Children who are physically unable to atteud school. A physician's certificate may be required.

(d) Children over fourteen years of age whose aervices are essential to the support of their parents may be excused by the superintendent upon the recommendation of the achool boord.

(e) Children under nine years of age whose parents do not reside within 2½ miles, by the uearest traveled road, of some public school unless transportation is furnished.

(f) Any child twelve to fourteen years of age while in attendance at confirmation classes couducted for a period of not to exceed five months in either of said years.

If any parent or guardian wishes to claim exemption for any child under the above provisions he ahould notify the superiutendent at once. The truant officer is required by low to investigate in all cases of irregular or non-attendance reported to him by the proper authority. Where liability is found formal notice must be aerved to cumply with the law. Please note the following:

"The attorney General haa ruled that one notice is sufficient for the year and if after receiving the notice the child is not in consecutive and regular attendance you should proceed at once to have the parent arrested and brought into court. The law contemplates that the attendance shall be consecntive and when it fails in that the parent is liable to arrest."—L. L. Wright, State Supt. of Public Instruction.

The enforcement of the compulsory law seems right and proper to all who respect the rights of childreu. We trust that oll such will cooperate with the school outhorities to secnre the full attendonce of all our children, for the good of the child and the safety of the community, and this withoutresort to the law's penalties.

Will Organize Association.

Steps are being taken to organize what will be known as the Charlevoix Poultry association, and a meeting will take place in the council chambers, Saturday, October 8, at 7:30, for the election of officers, and completing the organization. All poultry raisers and persons interested in poultry are invited to attend the meeting.

DAIRYING IN THE SOUTH

Growing More In Popularity Among Farmers Each Year

Have Learned the Great Value of the Dairy Herd.

Dairying is growing in popularity among the farmers of the southern states. They are learning that the dairy cow can do for the cotton grower of the south what she has done for the wheat grower in the north, i. e., increase the fertility of the soil in addition to making most satisfactory returns for labor and money expended for feed.

The United States Department of Agriculture has been giving particular attention to to this question in the southern states the past few years and a great service has been rendered. A great impetus has been given to the dairy movement until now there are thousands of influential dairymen singing the praises of the dairy cow and demonstrating by actual experiments that dairying is the salvation of that section of the country.

Certain politicians, in order to create an issue by which they might retain office, have greatly retarded the development of the dairy industry in the cotton growing states by creating the impression there that the interests of the cotton grower are opposed to those of the dairymen. It has been brought about in this wo): Cottonseed oil is used in the manufacture of some kinds of oleomargarine. This has been used to prejudice the cotton producer against any and all kinds of legislation which in any way regulates or restricts the sale of oleomargarine.

A careful estimate compiled from government reports shows that through the sale of cottonseed oil which was used in the manufacture of oleomargarine last year, the cotton growers of the south actually received one and one-half cents for every acre planted to cotton.

For every dollar's worth of cottonseed oil used last year in making oleomargarine, one hundred and seven dollars worth of butter was produced in those same cotton growing states.

These are facts which every cotton producer should consider before lending his support to any movement which is intended to retard the growth and development of the dairy industry in the south.

CRUSHED HIS FOOT

Clarion Resident Badly Hurt in Hay Press Last Saturday.

While working on his farm near Clarion, Saturday, Perry Stoops fell in some manner and caught his foot in the plunger of a hay press receiving a serious injury as a result.

It is not knowo just how badly the limb was wounded, and whether or not it is broken, as the physician in attendance was unable to make a satisfactory examination owing to nervous trouble that has been contracted by Mr. Stoops as a result of the accident. It is thought however, that there is little danger from the injury itself; although the nervousness that has developed is of a very serious nature and may possibly result in tetanus.

Latest reports from Mr. Stopp's home state that he is resting somewhat easier, and it is hoped that he will soon recover from the shock as well.

START SEASON WITH VICTORY

Charlevoix High School Foot Ball Team Wins First Game

DEFEATS EAST JORDAN 10 TO 0

Charlevoix Had Game Cinched From Very Start

Good Clean Playing Characterized Game Throughout—Will Play Petoskey Next Saturday.

The Charlevoix high school foot ball team won a most decisive victory over the East Jordan eleven last Saturday, at East Jordan, the score ending in 10 to 0. The boys played with the vim and snap characteristic of a college team and from the start of the referee's whistle East Jordan's fate was clearly seen. The boys kept the ball almost wholly in the East Jordan territory and never once was Charlevoix's goal in danger. The first touch down was made on a quick trick play which Coach Wise had given to the team two nights before the game. The ball was passed before the opposing team had time to live up and Wallace got away for a 60 yard run.

The second touch down came from a cross buck to the left on a delayed pass by Capt. Hull. In neither case did Charlevoix succeed in kicking goal. The game was characterized by open plays and trickery, our team pulling off three good forward passes, East Jordau one. It was a clean game from start to finish and no player received any injury. The East Jordan boys and rooters are to be complimented on their squareness and manner in which they used the Charlevoix crowd. The return game will be played here November 5. Leo Powers was referee and his work was very satisfactory to both teams.

The Charlevoix lineup as played Saturday is as follows:

Center, Durance; l. guard, Lyngklip; r. guard, Kirby; l. tackle, Gaskin, Gray; r. tackle, J. Papineau, l. end, Mitchell; r. end, G. Papineau; quarter, Wallace; l. half, Powers; full, Krulik; r. half, Capt Hull.

They play Petoskey at Petoskey next Saturday.

LETTER FROM ALBERT ARNOLD

Tells of the Successful Lift on September Twenty-eight.

The following is an extract from the letter of Albert Arnold, one of the bunch of fishermen who left here some time ago, to Henry Papinow of this city, telling of the first lift they made in their new field:

To our Friends and Brother Fishermen:

The fishing industry is good. We made our first lift on September 28, with the following results: Prince Olaf, 3,815 lbs fish; Minder a, 3,875 lbs; Hope, 3,920 lbs; Weazel, 1,018 lbs.; Eagle, 3,915 lbs. The total amount being 19,538 lbs. The fishermen are very much pleased. Mr. Arnold states that on their way down from Boston they encountered a severe gale which lasted eight hours. Every thing is working out nicely. Mrs. William Geer, and daughter, and Mrs. J. Nordrum, and family, leave for Gloucester, Mass., Thursday morning. Mrs. Anderson will join them at Traverse City. Mrs. Stores and Mrs. Tyaver left last Friday.

ERECT NEW BUILDING

Agricultural Society Plan Many Improvements

New Dining Hall and House for Caretaker to be Built.

The executive committee of the Charlevoix Agricultural Society met at East Jordan the fore part of last week to review the improvements planned to the grounds. It was decided to start building at once on the new dining hall. The old dining hall will be entirely torn down and in its place will be erected a residence for a caretaker, who will be in charge of the grounds at all times except during the annual exhibit. This new building will also have a large dining hall built with it, large enough to place a table over seventy feet long, besides two tables about half this length.

One barn 36x50 and three 36x40 will be built to provide comfortable quarters for the race horses and speed entries.

More room is also planned for the florol Hall and administration building. Many other repairs will also be made.

The Charlevoix County Fair has come to be recognized as the leading institution of the kind in this portion of the state, one of which the people of East Jordau and Charlevoix county are justly proud, and the improvements that are now being made are in line with the progressive policy which has enabled the association to successfully weather the storm of the earlier years of its existence.

PLOWING MATCH

Annual Event Will Take Place October 12 With Marion Center Grange

The sixteenth annual plowing match, given under the auspices of the Marion Center Grange, will be held October 12, at the farm of Bert Ingalls, on the county road north of the grange hall.

Cootests in four classes of plowing will be held and the usual prizes awarded to the winners of each event.

The ladies auxiliary of the grange will serve a chicken predinner at the grange hall, and in the evening a dauce will be given.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS CHANGE

Block Brothers Purchase Grocery Business of E. A. Jeffries.

Will Move Into the Building With Grocery This Week.

Last Monday the Block Brothers purchased the grocery business of E. A. Jeffries and are consolidating the two stores into one.

Mr. Jefferies who has been in business for four years is retiring and will go south soon. The Block Brothers have been in the meat business for nearly two years and have shown themselves to be progressing business men. Their success in the meat business is a full assurance that they will be successful in this new undertaking.

The cooler will be placed in the southwest corner of the grocery store and the north side of the store will be occupied by the grocery department. Everything will be neatly arranged so as to give room and accommodations will be the same as was always found at the meat market.

These young men believe in going after the business. The uniting of the two stores will be a new enterprize and a sure method of accommodating the public, which is one of the main features of success in business.

New Meat Market

J. J. Wattle, an experienced meat man, has opened up a meat market in the store of S. H. Smith. Mr. Wattle is well known in this section and solicits a part of your patronage.

NO PROTECTION TO DRUGGISTS

When it Comes to Selling Whiskey to Habitual Drunkards

PHYSICIANS PRECRIPTIONS NO GOOD

Case of Considerable Importance Decided by Supreme Court

Alma Druggist Must Abide by Decision of Lower Courts—Sold Liquor to Habitual Drunkard.

The supreme court has affirmed the conviction of George Sharrar, a former Alma druggist, who was found guilty of selling whiskey to an habitnal drunkard on a doctor's prescription.

According to testimony taken in the circuit court in Gratiot county, Simon Oberlin a farmer, secured a prescription of an Alma physician for a mixture, or quinine and whiskey and the prescription was filled at Sharrar's drug store in that city. It was shown in the trial that Oberlin was addicted to the excessive use of liquor.

The prescription was introduced in evidence at the time of the trial in the circuit court but Judge Searl, in charging the jury, said that the prescription, the reliability of the physician or the good faith of the druggist did not enter into the merits of the case and could not be considered by the jury under the law and the decisions of the higher courts.

In reviewing the case the supreme court holds: "We are of the opinion that the statute forbids and was intended to forbid sales of liquor by druggists to certain persons even for medical purposes."

The case is an important one and one that had not been decided by the Michigan supreme court before and involved some very close questiods.

According to the decision the physicians prescription is no protection whatever to the druggist and it is up to them to know whether a person is a habitnal drunkard, minor or one of the forbidden classes.

STORES CLOSE AT 7:00

Charlevoix Merchants Started Early Closing Monday Night

Will Close at 7:00 From Octocer to May, Except in December

Monday evening was the beginning of the early closing of the stores of the city, a move that we cannot help but approve. The early closing of the stores will prove very agreeable to the business men and the clerks, while it will not work a particular hardship to the public. The following merchants have given their names to the early closing agreement: B. W. Miller, Est., Palace Clothing Store, H. Bedford, A. E. Mason, M. A. Levinson & Co., J. L. Crane, Block Brothers, Cohen's Store, F. E. Frazier, Emrey Clothing Store, Raymond Bentley, F. S. Blanchard, F. C., C. R. and Will Bellinger, and John Timmer. Prospects are that others will join the movement.

The hour of closing will be seven o'clock from October 3 to May 1, with the exception of during the the holiday rush, when the stores will remain open evenings from December 15 to 25.

Fine Display Silverware

C. R. Bellinger, the Pioneer Jeweler, has one of the finest line of silverware ever seen in this city. Beautiful sets of spoons, knives and forks, and other pieces for table use of the famous Rockford silverware, in Rosemary patterns, fill his shelves to their utmost capacity.

Price list for Mrs. Gray's hair dressing parlors, from October 1st, until June 1st, as follows:

Last Thursday, ten-year-old Jasper Lincoln, halter in hand, left his fathers' barn on the farm near Cadillac and entered the pasture to get a horse which was to take the family to to the Reed City fair. A short time afterward the parents were horified to see the boy, entangled in the halter strap, being dragged about the field by the frightened animal. "Save me, papa, save me," cried the little fellow. The horse stopped at the cries and in prancing about stepped on the lad. When recovered the boy was dead, his body mashed beyond recognition. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lincoln. The fatal strap was found fastened to one wrist.

Robert White of Ellsworth brought some strawberries to the Torch office last Friday from his farm which were some of the finest specimens that have grown around here.

It is not very often that one hears of these berries being grown at this time of the year but the ones of Mr. White's were exceptions. The plants were set out this spring but did not yield very heavy and this fall they commenced to blossom. The chickens kept picking the blossoms off so Mr. White covered some of them up to see what would be come of them with the result that he now has a fine patch of strawberries for use.

Mr. White says that he does not see why he could not get a fall crop of these berries and intends to try it next year.—Central Lake Torch.

Thursday at Traverse City Judge Mayne disposed of the twelve cases in the circuit court in which as many saloonkeepers of that city were charged with selling liquor to Indians. Three of the Indians who became drunk lost their lives. Judge Mayne allowed the twelve saloonkeepers to plead guilty and sentenced them to pay a fine of $50 each or serve ninety days in the county jail. The men all paid. The court said in explaining why the men were let off so easily that he had investigated the cases closely and found that the three Indians did not get their liquor from the men in court, further, if the twelve men decided to stand trial it would be perhaps two years before all the trials would be completed, the county would be put to considerable expense, and it would not be unlikely that some of the men would be acquitted. Hence he felt it better that the men plead guilty and pay fine imposed. The twelve men were Frank Brock, Frank Kluzak, James McGinnis, Samuel Brown, James McGarry, Fred Dunn, John Kratochvil, Hugh McDonald, Sylvester Brown, August Fisher, William Crocker, Frank Johnson.

HALCYON DAYS IN SPORT.

Oh, for ye good old days of sport
When Arthur ruled ye famed Round Table,
When every champion of ye court
At coming back proved quite, quite able!

No purse of gold was e'er in sight
To pay ye smiter or ye smitten,
No novelist spoiled paper white
In telling how ye fight was fytten.

No authors (price, one word ten cents)
Wrote columns on ye brutes abysmal
Ner protoplasmic elements
Nor other high browed language dismal.

No tour of ye ten, twent and thirt
Would make ye lucky winner wealthy,
But he must don ye iron shirt
And fight some challenger quite healthy.

And at ye end of some great match
Ye base reformers, with their strictures,
No mollycoddlish plota could hatch
And stop, perforce, ye moving pictures.

—Arthur Chapman in Denver Republican.

Regarding Tree Surgery.

An evidence of the beneficent spirit of conservation of the useful and beautiful that is now being so happily shown throughout our country is to be seen in the minor but none the less important rehabilitation of the stately and beautiful shade trees of our eastern country. These one time monarchs of the forest that formerly covered this section of the country have been allowed to decay and fall by the thousands, but now a wise system of tree surgery and repair is inaugurated, and skilled men diagnose the condition of these grand sentinels, and by a system of judicious cutting away the dead wood, filling in the gashes with bricks and mortar and in some cases with cement, thus strengthening the otherwise weak trunks, and then by a skillful covering of the exposed parts with tin or zinc, carefully painted to represent the natural hues of the bark, the tree is restored to its beauty and guarded against further premature decay.

Praised Away From Home.

Walters, Okla., slipped one over on Lawton. The other day a Walters man was in Lawton and overheard a conversation between some men as to the standing of several towns. One of them said, "Walters is surely a live wire." The Walters man kept the good news a secret until he returned home, and the next week his editor made the incident one of his leading editorials.—Agricultural Southwest.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

ILLUSTRATIONS BY MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1906 BY BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and counsellor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Nell, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winnsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER V.—Plum and Nell plan to escape on the Typhoon. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Nell's sister. She is not yet married to Strang, but some mysterious influence seems to be forcing her into the union.

CHAPTER VI.—Plum suggests carrying Marion off to the ship at midnight, and sailing away with her. Nell approves of the idea and they plan to include Winnsome, with whom Nell is in love, in the enterprise. Plum discovers that the Typhoon is gone. He meets Marion and relieves her anxiety by telling her that Nell has left the island. The thunder of a gun is heard, and Plum declares Casey is bombarding St. James.

CHAPTER VII.—Marion tells him that his ship has been captured by the Mormons, and that the guns are guns of triumph. She pleads with him to leave the island and to prevent her brother from returning. She says nothing can save her from Strang. Plum finds Price raving mad. In a lucid interval he tells Nat that Strang is doomed, that armed men are descending on the island.

CHAPTER VIII.—Nat learns from Marion's parents that she has gone to Strang in obedience to a summons. He goes to the castle to look for her. One of Strang's wives tells him that she is gone and urges him to leave the island. He is confronted by Strang.

CHAPTER IX.—They engage in a desperate fight. Strang's wife interferes. Nat believes that he has killed the king. He finds Arbor Croche barring the door and kills him. The avenging host from the mainland descends on St. James. Nell and Nat take part in the battle and the latter is wounded. Strang, whom he thought he had killed, orders Nat thrown into a dungeon.

CHAPTER IX.

The Hand of Fate

After a time—it seemed a day of terrible work and pain to him—they came to the streets of the town, and in a half conscious sort of way he cursed at the rabble trailing at their heels. They passed close to the temple, dirt and blood and a burning torment shutting the vision of it from his eyes, and beyond this there was another crowd. An aisle opened for them, as it had opened for others ahead of them. In front of the jail they stopped. Nathaniel's head hung heavily upon his breast and he made no effort to raise it. All ambition and desire had left him, all desire but one, and that was to drop upon the ground and lie there for endless, restful years. What consciousness was left in him was ebbing swiftly; he saw black, fathomless night about him and the earth seemed slipping from under his feet.

A voice dragged him back into life—a voice that boomed in his ears like rolling thunder and set every fiber in him quivering with emotion. He drew himself erect with the involuntary strength of one mastering the last spasm of death and as they dragged him through the door he saw there within an arm's reach of him the great, living face of Strang, gloating at him as if from out of a mist—red eyed, white fanged, filled with the vengefulness of a beast.

The great voice rumbled in his ears again.

"Take that man to the dungeon!"

CHAPTER X.

Winnsome's Verdict of Death.

The voice—the condemning words—followed Nathaniel as he staggered on between his two guards; it haunted him still as the cold chill of the rotting dungeon walls struck in his face; it remained with him as he stood swaying in the thick gloom—the voice rumbling in his ears, the words beating against his brain until the shock of them sickened him, until he stretched out his arms and there fell from him such a cry as had never tortured his lips before.

Strang was alive! He had left the spark of life in him, and the woman who loved him had fanned it back into full flame.

Strang was alive! And Marion—Marion was his wife!

The voice of the king taunted him from the black chaos that hid the dungeon walls. The words struck at him, filling his head with shooting pain, and he tottered back and sank to the ground to get away from them. They followed, and that vengeful leer of the king was behind them, urging them on, until they beat his face into the sticky earth, and smothered him into what he thought was death.

There came rest after that, a long silent rest. When Nathaniel slowly climbed up out of the ebon shadows again the first consciousness that came to him was that the word-demons had stopped their beating against his brain and that he no longer heard the voice of the king. His relief was so great that he breathed a restful sigh. Something touched him then. Great God! were they coming back? Were they still there—waiting—waiting—

It was a wonderfully familiar voice that spoke to him.

"Hello there, Nat! Want a drink?"

He gulped eagerly at the cool liquid that touched his lips.

"Nell," he whispered

"It's me, Nat. They chucked me in with you. Hell's hole, isn't it?"

Nathaniel sat up. Nell's strong arm at his back. There was a light in the room now and he could see his companion's face, smiling at him encouragingly. The sight of it was like an elixir to him. He drank again and new life coursed through him.

"Yes—hell of a hole!" he repeated drowsily. "Sorry for you—Nell—" and he seemed to sleep again.

Nell laughed as he wiped his companion's face with a wet cloth.

"I'm used to it, Nat. Been here before," he said. "Can you get up? There's a bench over here—not long enough to stretch you out on or I would have made you a bed of it, but it's better than this mud to sit on."

He put his arms about Nathaniel and helped him to his feet. For a few moments the wounded man stood without moving.

"I'm not very bad, I guess," he said, taking a slow step. "Where is the seat, Nell? I'm going to walk to it. What sort of a bump have I got on the head?"

"Nothing much," assured Nell. "Suspicious, though," he grinned cheerfully. "Looks as though you were running and somebody came up and tapped you from behind!"

Nathaniel's strength returned to him quickly. The pain had gone from his head and his eyes no longer hurt him. In the dim candle-light he could distinguish the four walls of the dungeon, glistening with the water and mold that reeked from between their rotting logs. The floor was of wet, sticky earth which clung to his boots, and the air that he breathed filled his nostrils and throat with the uncomfortable thickness of a night fog at sea. Through it the candle burned in a misty halo. Near the candle, which stood on a shelf-like table against one of the walls, was a big dish which caught Nathaniel's eyes.

"What's that?" he asked, pointing toward it.

"Grub," replied Nell. "Hungry?"

He went to the table and got the plate of food. There were chunks of boiled meat, unbuttered bread and cold potatoes. For several minutes they ate in silence. Now that Nathaniel was himself again Nell could no longer keep up his forced spirits. Both realized that they had played their game and that it had ended in defeat. And each believed that it was his individual power to alleviate to some extent the other's misery. To Nell what was ahead of them held no mystery. A few hours more and then—death. It was only the form in which it would come that troubled him, that made him think. Usually the victims of this dungeon cell were shot. Sometimes they were hanged. But why tell Nathaniel? So he ate his meat and bread without words, waiting for the other to speak, as the other waited for him. And Nathaniel, on his part, kept to himself the secret of Marion's fate. After they had done with the meat and the bread and the cold potatoes he pulled out his beloved pipe, and filled it with the last scraps of his tobacco, and as the fumes of it clouded round his head, soothing him in its old friendship, he told of his fight with Strang and his killing of Arbor Croche.

"I'm glad for Winnsome's sake," said Nell, after a moment. "Oh, if you'd only killed Strang!"

Nathaniel thought of what Marion had said to him in the forest.

"Nell," he said quietly, "do you know that Winnsome loves you—not as the little girl whom you toted about on your shoulders—but as a woman? Do you know that?" In the other's silence he added: "When I last saw Marion she sent this message to you—'Tell Nell that he must go, for Winnsome's sake. Tell him that her fate is shortly to be as cruel as mine—tell him that Winnsome loves him and that she will escape and come to him on the mainland.'" Like words of fire they had burned themselves in his brain and as Nathaniel repeated them he thought of that other broken heart that had sobbed out its anguish to him in the castle chamber. "Nell, a man can die easier when he knows that a woman loves him!"

He had risen to his feet and was walking back and forth through the thick gloom.

"I'm glad!" Nell's voice came to him softly, as though he scarcely dared to speak the words aloud. After a moment he added: "Have you got a pencil, Nat? I would like to leave a little note for Winnsome."

Nathaniel found both pencil and paper in one of his pockets and Nell dropped upon his knees in the mud beside the table. Ten minutes later he turned to Nathaniel and a great change had come into his face.

"Winnsome Croche Demands the Death of Her Father's Murderer."

"She always seemed like such a little child to me that I never dared—to—tell her," he faltered. "I've done it in this."

"How will you get the note to her?"

"I know the jailer. Perhaps when he comes to bring us our dinner I can persuade him to send it to her."

Nathaniel thrust his hands into his pockets. His fingers dug into Obadiah's gold.

"Would this help?" he asked.

He brought out a shimmering handful of it and counted the pieces upon the table.

"Two hundred dollars—if he will deliver that note," he said.

Nell stared at him in amazement.

"If he won't take it for that—I've got more. I'll go a thousand."

Nell stood silent, wondering if his companion was mad. Nathaniel saw the look in his face and his own flushed with sudden excitement.

"Don't you understand?" he cried. "That note means heaven or hell for Winnsome—it means life—her whole future! And you know what this cell means for us," he said more calmly. "It means that we're at the end of our rope, that the game is up, that neither of us will ever see Marion or Winnsome again. That note is the last word in life from us—from you. It's a dying prayer. Tell Winnsome your love, tell her that it is your last wish that she go out into the big, free world—away from this hell-hole, away from Strang, away from the Mormons, and live as other women live! And commanded by your love—she will go!"

"I've told her that!" breathed Nell. "I knew you would!"

Nathaniel threw another handful of gold on the table.

"Five hundred!" he exclaimed. "It's cheap enough for a woman's soul!"

He motioned for Nell to put the money in his pocket. The pain was coming back into his head, he grew dizzy, and hastened to the bench. Nell came and sat beside him.

"So you think it's the end?" he asked. He was glad that his companion had guessed the truth.

"Don't you?"

"Yes."

There was a minute's dark silence. The ticking of Nathaniel's watch sounded like the tapping of a stick.

"What will happen?"

"I don't know. But whatever it may be it will come to us soon. Usually it happens at night."

"There is no hope?"

"Absolutely none. The whole mainland is at the mercy of Strang. He fears no retribution now, no punishment for his crimes, no hand stronger than his own. He will not even give us the pretense of a hearing. I am a traitor, a revolutionist—you have attempted the life of the king. We are both condemned—both doomed."

Nell spoke calmly and his companion strove to master the terrible pain at his heart as he thought of Marion. If Nell could go to the end like a martyr he would at least make an attempt to do as much. Yet he could not keep from saying:

"What will become of Marion?"

He felt the tremor that passed through his companion's body.

"I have implored Winnsome to do all that she can to get her away," replied Nell. "If Marion won't go—" He clenched his hands with a moaning curse and sprang to his feet, again pacing back and forth through the gloomy dungeon. "If she won't go I swear that Strang's triumph will be short!" he cried suddenly. "I cannot guess the terrible power that the king possesses over her, but I know that once his wife she will not endure it long. The moment she becomes that, her bondage is broken. I know it. I have seen it in her eyes. She will kill herself!"

Nathaniel rose slowly from the bench and came to his side.

"She won't do that!" he groaned. "My God—she won't do that!"

Nell's face was blanched to the whiteness of paper.

"She will," he repeated quietly. "Her terrible pact with Strang will have been fulfilled. And I—I am glad—glad—"

He raised his arms to the dripping blackness of the dungeon ceiling, his voice shaking with a cold, stifled anguish. Nathaniel drew back from that tall, straight figure, step by step, as though to hide beyond the flickering candle glow the betrayal that had come into his face, the blazing fire that seemed burning out his eyes. If what Nell had said was true—

Something choked him as he dropped alone upon the bench.

If it was true—Marion was dead!

He dropped his head in his hands and sat for a long time in silence, listening to Nell as he walked tirelessly over the muddy earth. Not until there came a rattling of the chain at the cell door and a creaking of the rusty hinges did he lift his face. It was the jailer with a huge armful of straw. He saw Nell approach him after he had thrown it down. Their low voices came to him in an indistinct murmur. After a little he caught the sound of the chinking gold pieces.

Nell came and sat down beside him as the heavy door closed upon them again.

"He took it," he whispered exultantly. "He will deliver it this morning. If possible he will bring us an answer. I kept out a hundred and told him that a reply would be worth that to him."

Nathaniel did not speak, and after a moment's silence Nell continued:

"The jury is assembling. We will know our fate very soon."

He rose to his feet, his words quivering with nervous excitement, and Nathaniel heard him kicking about in the straw. In another breath his voice hissed through the gloom in a sharp, startled command:

"Good God, Nat, come here!"

Something in the strange fierceness of Nell's words startled Nathaniel, like the thrilling twinges of an electric shock. He darted across the cell and found Marion's brother with his shoulder against the door.

"It's open!" he whispered. "The door—is—open!"

The hinges creaked under his weight. A current of air struck them in the face. Another instant and they stood in the corridor, listening, crushing back the breath in their lungs, not daring to speak. Gently Nell drew his companion back into the cell.

"There's a chance—one chance in Wilkson, District No. 3, were selected as delegates to represent this county at the state grange at Traverse City in November.

DOUBLE CHIN.

How to Get Rid of One by Paying Attention to Diet and Exercise.

If you have a double chin you must give up the wearing of tight collars, as they never fail to give one the baggy pouch of the confirmed double chin. See to it that your stocks are loose and not very high. If your neck is not too thin for the fashion make a practice of wearing the collarless dresses so popular now. They will give your throat an opportunity to bend and turn, and in this way the muscles get the needed exercise. Tight high collars hold the throat as in a vise, and the muscles underneath the chin become flabby. Eating between meals and late at night is sure to cause a double chin and very often a triple chin. If you eat lobster a la Newburg or perhaps a sweet just before retiring you will be sure to wake up next morning with an extra layer of flesh under your pretty chin.

A strenuous exercise warranted to reduce chins is as follows: Stand erect in front of your mirror, put a hand on either hip and take a deep breath, filling the lungs to the fullest extent. Hold the breath and hit your extra chin ten sharp blows with the back of your hand. Strike hard enough to make the tears come to your eyes. Now exhale. Once more inhale and slap the unwanted folds of flesh with your left hand. If you will practice this exercise for five minutes every morning the extra chin will melt away in a very short space of time.—New Idea Woman's Magazine For June.

How to Keep Cut Flowers.

Choose flowers that are not quite fully out and cut them early in the morning with long stems. Arrange them not too close together in a vase deep enough to immerse two-thirds of the stems. By previously putting some pieces of charcoal in the vase the water can be kept sweet, but in any case it should be changed every five or six days. Keep the vase always full of water. Keep the flowers in a cool but not too drafty place. Certain flowers do much better if a small portion of the stem is cut off, especially if they have been carried a long way, and a certain number are better for slicing the stems up so as to let them absorb the water more easily. This is especially so with flowers that are apt to go off quickly, like the hellebores.—Gardening Illustrated.

A Good Provider.

Wife—Now, see here, Jim, if yer don't provide fer me better I shall quit, so I warns yer.

Husband—Provide better! Well, I like that. Why, ain't I got yer three good jobs o' work this larst month?—London Sketch.

LEARN TO SAY "NO!"

On the cornerstone of that fabric which we entitle manhood is engraved the monosyllable "No." He who early learns the use of that invaluable word has already learned the way to peace and comfort and safety. An easy compliance frustrates everything. Respect for others need not degenerate into servitude, but respect for oneself. That is the very alpha and omega of all inward command.

ORNAMENTING THE RURAL HOME

Everything Done to Make the Grounds Beautiful.

HEDGES PLAY IMPORTANT PART

They Tend to Beautify and at the Same Time Hide Many Unsightly Spots About the House—Stone and Wire Fences Replacing the Dilapidated Old Picket Fence.

Visitors from the cities frequently express surprise when observing the manner in which those living in the rural sections are fast improving the grounds surrounding their homes. Improvement in the matter of fencing is particularly noticeable.

Fences are replacing the hedges. While certain kinds of hedges will remain, and in some sections will always be popular, the fencing material of the future is certain to be very largely of wire. Certain kinds of hedges are ornamental and they have their place about the home for hiding unsightly spots and for the beauty they possess themselves. As practical field dividers, however, they are not generally successful, because they involve a good deal of time and expense each year in keeping them in repair.

Where stone is abundant the stone fence is not only picturesque, but is the most permanent and satisfactory of all fences. It requires building but once and to keep in repair is an item of small expense, considering a period of many years' duration. One objection to the stone fence is the amount of land occupied. This is an item belonging to the individuality of the owner. The stake and rider rail fence that we knew so well when we were boys is fast disappearing even in sections where lumber is abundant.

The picket fence, too, is going. It was not many years ago that long lines of picket fences were to be seen on many farms, but these have been seldom replaced. Has this been due to dissatisfaction? That can hardly be given as the principal reason. The cheapest and in some ways the most satisfactory fence for the business farm is wire. The reasonable price at which woven wire can be obtained or fence building machinery for stretching wire can be bought has made the farm fence for the present and more so for the future of this material. Wire fences are satisfactory. They turn the stock, they occupy a minimum amount of land, they take up but little land in the fence row, they admit tillage near to them, and they permit mowing right up to the posts, thus obviating much hand labor in keeping out weeds.

In building fences an important problem arises in connection with the posts. Wooden posts are becoming more expensive because of their scarcity, and iron for field purposes is out of the question. Undoubtedly the cement post will be the post for the future. When posts are made of cement and re-enforced by steel the problem will be solved. Especially for end posts for permanent fences it will pay to use re-enforced cement, and in many permanent fence lines posts of these materials are in the end the best.

Line posts are ordinarily quite strong enough if re-enforced by placing in each corner a string of two wires twisted together, of the same size as that used in double barbed wire, or even new barbed wire may be used weighing rather less than two pounds for the four strings of wire. Where strong posts are required the base can be made 6 by 6 inches and the tops 3 by 6 inches. Shorter and longer posts, also with lesser or greater dimension, will fit the particular requirements. With cement costing $2 a barrel, sand and gravel 50 cents a cubic foot, wire fencing at 6 cents a post and labor 20 cents an hour, allowing for cost of molds and miscellaneous expenses, the cost of the smaller of these posts should be about 25 cents and for the larger ones about 30 cents apiece.

Cement posts, unlike cement blocks, cannot well be made in a machine and carried aside on pallets, because the pallets bend and the posts crack. Molds for making fenceposts can be readily obtained from manufacturers or they can be home built. Posts can be made by using cement and clean sand in the proportion of one to three. If gravel, about one-half inch in diameter, or broken stone of the same size is used, the posts will be stronger and cheaper when using say one part cement to two and one half parts of sand and five parts of gravel or stone. In building any kind of fence it is important to have the corner post well braced, otherwise the fence will sag and look bad.

They expect to widely advertise this land and place it upon the market in a short time.

Such a choke, ain't it. One of the households in a neighboring city was the scene of an amusing incident last week, when the midday meal was being partaken of. The young wife somehow managed to choke on a piece of meat and the case became so serious that her husband dashed to the rescue and began thumping her on the back, a method that soon brought relief. When the excitement had subsided the young woman said, "It's a funny thing that I have to choke every time before you pat me on the back."

Mrs. John Nichols, widow of the late Dr. John Nichols, whose death occurred last April in New Zealand, arrived in the city the fore part of last week, for a short visit at the home of the Hon. Realistic Indeed.

The illustrator who had secured a trial position on a fashion magazine was told to make a realistic fashion plate of the prevailing styles. The publisher did not seem satisfied with the first sketch submitted.

"You wanted something realistic, didn't you?" said the illustrator.

"Yes, but"—

"Then, what's the matter with this?" broke in the illustrator. "Every woman in the bunch has got her head turned to see what all the rest have on. If that isn't realistic, what is?"—Exchange.

ten thousand!" he whispered. "At the end of this corridor there is a door—the jailer's door. If that's not locked, we can make a run for it! I'd rather die fighting—than here!"

He slipped out again, pressing Nathaniel back.

"Wait for me!"

Nathaniel heard him stealing slowly through the blackness. A minute later he returned.

"Locked!" he exclaimed.

In the opposite direction a ray of light caught Nathaniel's eye.

"Where does that light come from?" he asked.

"Through a hole about as big as your two hands. It was made for a stove pipe. If we were up there we could see into the jury room."

They moved quietly down the corridor until they stood under the aperture, which was four or five feet above their heads. Through it they could hear the sounds of voices but could not distinguish the words that were being spoken.

"The jury," explained Neil. "They're in a devil of a hurry! I wonder why?"

Nathaniel could feel his companion shrug himself in the darkness.

"Lord—for my revolver!" he whispered excitedly. "One shot through that hole would be worth a thousand notes to the girls!" He caught Marion's brother by the arm as a voice louder than the others came to them.

"Strang!"

"Yes—the—king!" affirmed Neil laying an expostulating hand on him. "Hush!"

"I would like to see—"

Even in these last hours of failure and defeat the fire of adventure flamed up in Nathaniel's blood. He felt his nerves leaping again to action, his arms grew tense with new ambition—almost he forgot that death had him cornered and was already preparing to strike him down. Another thought replaced all fear of this. A few feet beyond that big wall were gathered the men whose bloodthirsty deeds had written for them one of the reddest pages in history—men who had burned their souls out in the destruction of human lives, whose passions and loves and hatreds carried with them life and death; men who had bathed themselves in blood and lived in blood until the people of the mainland called them "the leeches."

"The Mormon jury!" Nathaniel spoke the words scarcely above his breath.

"I'd like to take a look through that hole, Neil," he added.

"Easy enough—if you keep quiet. Here!" He doubled himself against the wall. "Climb up on my shoulders."

No sooner had Nathaniel's face come to a level with the hole than a soft cry of astonishment escaped him. Neil whispered hoarsely but he did not reply. He was looking into a room twice as large as the dungeon cell and lighted by narrow windows whose lower panes were on a level with the ground outside. At the farther end of the room, in full view, was a platform raised several feet from the main floor. On this platform were seated ten men, immovable as statues, every face gazing straight ahead. Directly in front of them, on the lower floor, stood the Mormon king, and at his side, partly held in the embrace of one of his arms was Winnsome!

Strang's voice came to him in a low, solemn monotone, its rumbling depth drowning the words he was speaking, and as Nathaniel saw him lift his arm from about the girl's shoulders and place his great hand upon her head he dug his own fingers fiercely into the rotting logs and an imprecation burned in his breath. He did not need to hear what the king was saying. It was a pantomime in which every gesture was understandable. But even Neil, huddled against the wall, heard the last words of the prophet as they thundered forth in sudden passion.

"Winnsome Croche demands the death of her father's murderer!"

Nathaniel felt his companion's shoulders sinking under his weight and he leaped quickly to the floor.

"Winnsome is there!" he panted desperately. "Do you want to see her?"

Neil hesitated.

"No. Your boots gouge my shoulder. Take them off."

The scene had changed when Nathaniel took his position again. The jury had left its platform and was filing through a small door. Winnsome and the king were alone.

The girl had turned from him. She was deathly pale and yet she was wondrously beautiful, so beautiful that Nathaniel's breath came in quick dread as the king approached her. He could see the triumph in his eyes, a terrible eagerness in his face. He seized Winnsome's hand and spoke to her in a soft, low voice, so low that it came to Nathaniel only in a murmur. Then, in a moment, he began stroking the shimmering glory of her hair, caressing the silken curls between his fingers until the blood seemed as if it must burst like hot sweat from Nathaniel's face. Suddenly Winnsome drew back from him, the pallor gone from her face, her eyes blazing like angry stars. She had retreated but a step when the prophet sprang to her and caught her in his arms, straining her to him until the scream on her lips was choked to a gasping cry. In answer to that cry a yell of rage hurled itself from Nathaniel's throat.

"Stop, you hell-hound!" he cried threateningly. "Stop!"

He shrieked the words again and again, maddened beyond control, and the Mormon king, whose self-possession was more that of devil than man, still held the struggling girl in his arms as he turned his head toward the voice and saw Nathaniel's long arm and knotted fist threatening him through the hole in the wall. Then Neil's name in a piercing scream resounded through the dungeon corridor and in response to it the man under Nathaniel straightened himself so quickly that his companion fell back to the floor.

"Great God! what is the matter, Nat? Quick! let me up!"

Nathaniel staggered to his feet, the breath half gone out of his body, and in another instant Neil was at the opening. The great room into which he looked was empty.

"What was it?" he cried, leaping down. "What were they doing with Winnsome?"

"It was the king," said Nathaniel, struggling to master himself. "The king put his arms around Winnsome and—she struck him!"

"That was all?"

"He kissed her as she fought—and I yelled."

"She struck him!" Neil cried. "God bless little Winnsome, Nat! and—God bless her!"

Neil's breath came fast as he caught the other's hand.

"I'd give my life if I could help you—and Marion!"

"We'll give them together," said Nathaniel coolly, turning down the corridor. "Here's our chance. They'll come through that door to relock us in our cell. Shall we die fighting?"

He was groping about in the mud of the floor for some object.

"If we had a couple of stones—"

"It would be madness—worse than madness!" interposed Neil, steadying himself. "There will be a dozen rifles at that door when they open it. We must return to the cell. It is worth dying a harder death to hear from Marion and Winnsome. And we will hear from them before night."

They retreated into the dungeon. A few minutes later the door open cautiously at the head of the corridor. A light blazed through the blackness and after an interval of silence the jailer made his appearance in front of the cell, a pistol in his hand.

"Don't be afraid, Jeekum," said Neil reassuringly. "You forgot the door and we've been having a little fun with the jury. That's all!"

The nervous whiteness left Jeekum's face at this cheerful report and he was about to close the door when Nathaniel exhibited a handful of gold pieces in the candle-light and frantically beckoned the man to come in. The jailer's eyes glittered understandingly and with a backward glance down the lighted corridor he thrust his head and shoulders inside.

"Five hundred dollars for that note!" he whispered. "Five hundred beside the four you've got!"

"Jeekum's a fool!" said Neil, as the door closed on them. "I feel sorry for him."

"Why?"

"Because he is accepting the money. Don't you suppose that you have been searched? Of course you have—probably before I came, while you were half dead on the floor. Somebody knows that you have the gold."

"Why hasn't it been taken?"

For a full minute Neil made no answer. And his answer, when it did come, first of all was a laugh.

"By George, that's good!" he cried exultingly. "Of course you were searched—and by Jeekum! He knows, but he hasn't made a report of it to Strang because he believes that in some way he will get hold of the money. He is taking a big risk—but he's winning! I wonder what his first scheme was?"

"Thought I'd bury it, perhaps," vouchsafed Nathaniel, throwing himself upon the straw. "There's room for two here, Neil."

A long silence fell between them. The action during the last few minutes had been too great an effort for Nathaniel and his wound troubled him again. As the pain and his terrible thoughts of Marion's fate returned to him he regretted that they had not ended it all in one last fight at the door. There, at least, they might have died like men instead of waiting to be shot down like dogs, their hands bound behind them, their breasts naked to the Mormon rifles. He did not fear death. In more than one game he had played against his hand, more often for love of the sport than not, but there was a horror in being penned up and tortured by it. He had come to look upon it as a fair enemy, filled, of course, with subterfuge and treachery, which were the laws of the game; but he had never dreamed of it as anything but merciful in its quickness. It was as if his adversary had broken an inviolable pact with him and he sweated and tossed on his bed of straw while Neil sat cool and silent on the bench against the dungeon wall. Sheer exhaustion brought him relief, and after a time he fell asleep.

He was awakened by Neil. The white face of Marion's brother was over him when he opened his eyes and he was shaking him roughly by the shoulder.

"Wake up, Nat!" he cried. "For heaven's sake—wake up!"

He drew back as Nathaniel sleepily roused himself.

"I couldn't help it, Nat," he apologized, laughing nervously. "You've lain there like a dead man for hours. My head is splitting with this damned silence. Come—smoke up! I got some tobacco from our jailer and he loaned me his pipe."

Nathaniel jumped to his feet. A fresh candle was burning on the table and in its light he saw that a startling change had come into Neil's face during the hours he had slept. It looked to him thinner and whiter, its lines had deepened, and the young man's eyes were filled with gloomy dejection.

"Why didn't you awaken me sooner?" he exclaimed. "I deserve a good drubbing for leaving you alone here!" He saw fresh food on the table. "It's late—" he began.

"That is our dinner and supper," interrupted Neil. He held his watch close to the candle. "Half past eight!"

"And no word—from—"

"No."

The two men looked deeply into each other's eyes.

"Jeekum delivered my note to her at noon when he was relieved," said Neil. "He did not carry it personally, but swears that he saw her receive it. He sent her word that he would call at a certain place for a reply when he was relieved again at five. There was no reply for him—not a word from Winnsome."

Their silence was painful. It was Nathaniel who spoke first, hesitatingly, as though afraid to say what was passing in his mind.

"I killed Winnsome's father, Neil," he said, "and Winnsome has demanded my death. I know that I am condemned to die. But you—" His eyes flashed sudden fire. "How do you know that my fate is to be yours? I begin to see the truth. Winnsome has not answered your note because she knows that you are to live and that she will see you soon. Between Winnsome and—Marion you will be saved!"

"I've Got Word—but No Note!" He Whispered Hoarsely.

Neil had taken a piece of meat and was eating it as though he had not heard his companion's words.

"Help yourself, Nat. It's our last opportunity."

"You don't believe—"

"No. Lord, man, do you suppose that Strang is going to let me live to kill him?"

Somebody was fumbling with the chain at the dungeon door.

The two men stared as it opened slowly and Jeekum appeared. The jailer was highly excited.

"I've got word—but no note!" he whispered hoarsely. "Quick! Is it worth—"

"Yes! Yes!"

Nathaniel dug the gold pieces out of his pockets and dropped them into the jailer's outstretched hand.

"I've had my boy watching Winnsome Croche's house," continued the sheriff, white with the knowledge of the risk he was taking. "An hour ago Winnsome came out of the house and went into the woods. My boy followed. She ran to the lake, got into a skiff, and rowed straight out to sea. She is following your instructions!"

In his excitement he betrayed himself. He had read the note.

There came a sound up the corridor, the opening of a door, the echo of voices, and Jeekum leaped back. Nathaniel's foot held the cell door from closing.

"Where is Marion?" he cried softly, his heart standing still with dread. "Great God—what about Marion?"

For an instant the sheriff's ghastly face was pressed against the opening.

"Marion has not been seen since morning. The king's officers are searching for her."

The door slammed, the chains clanked loudly, and above the sound of Jeekum's departure Neil's voice rose in a muffled cry of joy.

"They are gone! They are leaving the island!"

Nathaniel stood like one turned into stone. His heart grew cold within him. When he spoke his words were passionless echoes of what had been.

"You are sure that Marion would kill herself as soon as she became the wife of Strang?" he asked.

"Yes—before his vile hands touched more than the dress she wore!" shouted Neil.

"Then Marion is dead," replied Nathaniel, as coldly as though he were talking to the walls about him. "For last night Marion was forced into the harem of the king."

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange No. 1451 met in regular session on Tuesday evening September 27, with W. M. Newville in the chair Received six applications for membership. Brother O. D. Wilson was given a rising vote of thanks for his efforts in preparing the vegetable exhibit which brought the Harmony Grange the 3rd prize of $10 at the county fair. Delegates were elected to the county convention, to be held at Ironton October 3, as follows. O. D. Wilson, J. A. Newville, Mrs. Myrtle Willson, L. A. Willson, with alternates as follows: John R. Newville, Mrs. Coykendall, Mrs. Murcia Burdick, Mrs. H. L. Willson. The question, "Is Farming Gambling?" was discussed by nearly all the gentlemen present. The general opinion being that it is not according to the dictionary definition of gambling, though many farmers seem to take lots of chances by risking nearly all their energy on some one crop or by not following any established plan. The ladies discussed "Ideal conditions of house-keeping" briefly assisted by J. A. Newville. It was decided to hold a special meeting for practice in initiatory work on Monday evening, October 3 in view of the fact that the new grange will have its first experience at initiating at the next regular meeting to be held October 11th.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange No. 815 met in regular session Saturday evening, October 1, 1910, Worthy Master St. John, presiding.

The fair committee turned in $25 as the grange's share of the premiums.

The committee on the chicken pie social turned in a balance of $8.25 as proceeds from the social.

Brother H. L. Olney's note of $50 with interest, was taken up and paid. This leaves the grange entirely free of debt.

Under the head of new business, Brother Walter Burbank and Jas. Nice and Sisters Ida Burbank and Ruth Nice were elected delegates to the county convention held at Ironton. Lecturer's hour was then carried out with songs, recitations, reading and stories. Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks, when we will have another "blow out." Everybody come and enjoy yourselves.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met in regular session September 26, with but 30 members present as it had been raining and was bad walking. Three visitors were present.

One application for membership was received.

Lecturer's programme consisted of a roll call and nearly all of the members responded with either a quotation or current events, discussion, recitation and songs.

For good of order the motion was made and carried that there be a box social October 14, at the Ironton grange hall. Everybody come. Ladies bring boxes.

The motion was also made and carried that they have a special meeting October 4, for the degree team to practice.

Baby Talks Six Languages at Birth

"Miracles will never cease." At least so the saying goes. But the sensible-minded man thinks a lot less about miracles than he does about everyday means of making his business pay better.

If farming is his business the fence question is a great big vital consideration.

That more than one million farmers have purchased American Fence is a standing fact that he must note—if he wants to be right with himself. It's mighty good judgment to examine and price the American Fence—to see how different it is from ordinary fences—how perfectly there is a weight and style adapted to his particular needs—before he buys a rod of any kind.

The Charlevoix Hardware Co. is the local agent for American Fence.

THEATRICAL

The Majectic opened Monday night under the management of C. F. Hoffman of Boyne City. The act failed to arrive in time so only motion pictures were shown. Tuesday night Raymond and Scranton opened in their musical comedy act, "The Instructor and the Baby." The act seemed to please in most respects. Songs were introduced by both people. The pictures were clearer than usual and go to prove that correct operating will do lots even though the films are old. The theater was well packed Tuesday night for all shows. The act for the last of the week is Denells and Nolan in a comedy talking and singing sketch.

The Candy Girl.

Is all new this season. A new play equally as funny as last year and much better. Instead of it being some trashy play like most musical comedy plays without any plot, it is a very nice refined play with a very interesting plot and would please if there was not a musical number in it. There are 18 up-to-date musical hits sung with the assistance of 12 pretty chorus girls who appear in different costumes each time which show a nice display of wardrobe. Last season the company had no electrical effects. This season the electrical effects are one of the features and there is special scenery for each act. The show is equally as good as the high priced productions, yet it plays at popular prices and deserves packed houses everywhere. At the Charlevoix Opera House, Monday evening, October 10. See what the press says:

The Candy Girl was without doubt the best popular priced musical show on the road last season and it is still better this season.—New York Telegraph.

The Candy Girl has a new play play this season; in fact everything new and the company is two to one better than last season.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Interest Your Boy in Music

"There once lived a boy," says Constance Osborn in Woman's Home Companion for October, "in a family where three members had gained musical recognition, who grew to be nineteen, without evincing any interest in the refining art, beyond a mild pride in his relatives' achievements. Golden opportunities to take lessons on the already much-abused piano had been tossed aside. Then he went away to college, and one evening dropped in at orchestra rehearsal. It chanced on that fatal night that the student who played the snare drum was absent, and the boy was asked to try his hand. In a moment he found himself in the center of rising, vibrating tones and melodies, he himself a vital part, endeavoring to mark their rhythm and swell their volume, and his own heart swelled in response. From then on he became the most enthusiastic member of the orchestra. He began to board himself that he might save money for lessons in drumming, and he washed his socks and handkerchiefs to buy a metronome.

"The family heard of these rumors with amusement and awaited his home coming with some consternation. In due time he arrived and practiced drumming in the attic, and, moreover, taught a younger brother all he knew. He in turn became drummer in the high school orchestra, but soon the boys fancy took a melodic flight and he became the owner of a clarinet. The younger brother began to throw longing eyes on the 'cello, procured one and in a short time the clarinet and 'cello began to sing duets in the attic and, later, trios with the piano, in the parlor, for company.

"Now these boys did not grow up and become renowned musicians, but they acquired a proficiency that enabled them to play with pleasure for themselves and others. Through their awakened interest and understanding of music, they gained one of life's greatest assets, from a very small and unusual beginning."

How a Lawyer Learned His Lesson

An exchange had this interesting account of a lawyer's conversion to total abstinence. For years he had been the liberal patron of a saloon whose proprietor was soon able to purchase a house and lot. To this particular lawyer's surprise the saloonkeeper engaged another lawyer to examine and pass upon the abstract of title. He instituted inquiries. Why did the saloonkeeper turn away from his own customer and give business to a man who never bought anything of him—nor of any other saloon keeper? The saloonkeeper was amazed at the complaint: he thought the explanation ought to be plain enough: "When I've got business," he said with childlike frankness, "I want it done by a sober lawyer." Sure enough. The reason was so sensible and cogent that the bibulous lawyer yielded to it and has not touched liquor since.—Exchange.

Many years ago a judge was riding in a stage coach, in the mountains of Pennsylvania, with three engaged in all sorts of discussion. Finally the three got on to the liquor question. Two were in favor of whiskey and one against. Finally the whiskey men appealed to the judge for his opinion. The judge quietly replied: "Nothing is better than whiskey." The pro-liquor men laughed heartily and as the stage stopped at the next inn, they invited the judge to take "something." The judge shook his head with a decisive no! "Why, we thought you said nothing is better than whiskey." So I did; hence I take nothing."—Exchange.

Infant Mortality Increasing.

The department of state has received reports of 3,587 deaths as occuring during the month of August, or 501 more deaths than were returned for the month of July. It is stated that the increase is due to the large number of children under two years of age, and the unusually large number of deaths from typhoid fever, which is somewhat surprising in view of the efforts of the state food and dairy department to check the inroads of typhoid fever and save the little children by a more careful inspection of the milk supply this year than ever before.

There were 5,197 certificates of births returned to the state department as having occurred during the month of August.

At the Republican State Convention Held Last Week

FIVE CANDIDATES FOR ATT'Y-GENERAL

Franz C. Kuhn Nominated on the First Ballot

Platform is of Progressive Tenor. Primary Law Is Commended. Tax Commission of Experts Is Urged.

Peace reigned in the republican state convention held at Detroit last week. The platform adopted is calculated to offend neither the "stalwarts" nor the "insurgents." The Taft administration is commended, the tariff bill is tactily indorsed, the national congress is congratulated for its many beneficial measures, and state issues are handled in a way that seems to please the antagonists in the bitter pre-primary campaign.

The mention of Theodore Roosevelt by the speakers brought applause. He was enlogized by Chase S. Osborn, the nominee for governoor, while Congressman Diekema linked his name and Taft's as two of the world's greatest men. Congressman Townsend and Senator Smith also spoke.

The only contest—that over the oomination for the attorney generalship—was won by Franz Kuhn, the incumbent, against four competitors. The other nominations, all by acclamation, are:

John E. Bird, jnstice of the supreme court.

Frederick C. Martindale, secretary of state.

Albert Sleeper, state treasurer.

Huntley Russell, commissioner of the land office.

O. B. Fuller, auditor general.

W. Frank Knox of Sault Ste. Marie was named as chairman of the state committee. Chase S. Osborn and John Q. Ross, already had been selected in the primaries held four weeks ago as the candidates for governor and lieutenant-governor.

Grant Fellows of Adrian made a strong bid for the nomination for attorney-general, the first ballot resulting: Kuhn, 548; Fellows, 462; J. F. O'Keefe, of Saginaw, 105; William Smith, of St. Johns, 61; C. E. Sweet, of Cass, 77; necessary for a choice, 653. On the second ballott the Sweet supporters went to Kuhn other breaks quickly followed and Kuhn's nomination was made nnanimous.

The platform, while satisfactory to both wings of the party, is of progressive tenor. It endorses the primary nominations for governor, lieutenant-governor and United States senator and pledges the nominees to an honest, economical and business-like administration of state affairs. The primary law is commended and a law requiring the publication of expenditures of candidates before election is recommended. A commission of experts to review the entire taxation system is urged, and a non-salaried nonpartisan control the propagation, conservation and protection of the state's wild game and fish was favored.

Chase S. Osborn made a stirring address.

NEW RESORT AT HORTON BAY

Pine Lake Will Soon be Entirely Lined with Resorts.

County Surveyor E. A. Robinson left Monday morning for Horton's Bay where he will be busy for several days laying out a resort property for Floyd W. Dilworth of that place.

The resort will be located on Horton's Bay Point where Mr. Dilworth owns several acres of land and will be in an excellent location. Mr. Robinson will cut it up into lots, it is expected will be placed on the market before long.

Another indication that Pine Lake is coming into its own as a resort territory is to be seen in the work done by Mr. Robinson last week for John Stuart of Chicago at Bedwin point near the Ironton ferry. Mr. Stuart who is known to fame as "The Quaker Oats Man," owns 150 acres of line land overlooking the lake at this point and is going to build a fine bungalow as a summer home. Mr. Robinson laid out the grounds and outlined a place for the home which is to be an expensive one.

It is such acts of enterprise as these that tend to bring Pine Lake, and with it Charlevoix county, to the front. It will not be many years until the entire shore of the lake is lined with resorts and summer homes and the farmers will profit by the increased market for their supplies.—Boyne Citizen.

PURPOSED AMENDMENT

Charlevoix County Would Not be Affected If it Were Adopted

Last Week We Published the Purposed Amendment Which Will Be Submitted to the Voters Next Fall

If the people of the state approved of the proposed amendment it will have the practical effect of allowing the smaller counties to raise larger sums for road building than they can do under the present constitution. Charlevoix county would not be affected because its assessed valuation is over the five million mark, but Otsego county would benefit as would many of the smaller counties.

The following table compliled from the Michigan manual shows the assesed valuation of several counties in this district in 1906, the last date for which figures were available. The figures show the snpervisors valuation. In each case the state board of equalization set the figures higher for purposes of state taxation.

Charlevoix	5,652 462
Artrim	5,248.615
Emmett	7,881.229
Otsego	2,777.769
Cheboygan	6,426.000

The limit of tax that may be imposed in any one year for the building of roads is set at $3 on the thousand dollars. At this rate and with the assesed valuation given above Charlevoix county could if it were under the county good roads system, raise and spend $16,596 yearly for good roads.

SENT EXHIBITS TO INDIANA

To Show What Charlevoix County Can Produce in Fruits, Grains and Vegetables.

Mr. W. A. Loveday, our hustling real estate agent has gathered together a fine collections of fruits, grains and vegetables grown this year on the rich farming lands adjacent to East Jordan and on Tuesday sent the exhibit to a fair being held in one of the richest farming districts of Indiana, where it will be displayed in competition with the best that country can produce. Along with the exhibit Mr. Loveday sent a lot of literature descriptive of this region, telling all about our climate and soil, our schools, and churches and the many other advantages which we enjoy and the whole thing must appeal most strongly to the progressive farmers who are laboring under the disadvantages of prohibitive land values and excessive rents in the older yet less favored sections of the country. —East Jordan Enterprise.

GROWING GINSENG IN WESTERN MICHIGAN

Abnut the largest returns per acre for the products of the soil are those obtained from growing gen-seng. This plant is found in the woods of Western Michigan and is grown upon many farms as a side line. One-year-old roots sell for from $80 to $5 per hundred; three-year-old roots for from $30 to $40 per hundred, and the ginseng seeds bring $5 to $20 per thousand. The above is a view of the David B. Rose ginseng beds near Grawn.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION

Former Charlevoix Superintendent Pioneer in New System

F. W. Howe, State Supervisor of the State of New York.

F. W. Howe, a native of Michigan and long a student and teacher in this state, has become the first state supervisor of agricultural education. Previous to his acceptance of an offer from New York, no state had ever had such an officer.

Mr. Howe has been doing agricultural education work for the government in the office of experiment stations. He will assume his new duties at Albany, October 12. He was born in Bowne township, Kent county, and is a graduate of both the University of Michigan and the Michigan Agricultural college.

Mr. Howe has already been a pioneer in agricultural education and now he will be the first to enter a field which gives promise of great extension. His work will be to devise courses of agricultural instruction for high schools, to oversee the teaching and to help in securing a supply of teachers for this comparatively new branch. He will give instructions along this line at the Cornell summer school. His first duty will be to act as official promoter for agricultural education in high schools.

New York has done better than many other states in this sort of education, having now three secondary agricultural schools. But the start is just being made in the introduction of agriculture into the the high schools. Mr. Howe will be fairly well satisfied if six high schools introdnce courses this year By showing school boards the advantage of this training he hopes to get a great many schools to take it up for the school year beginning in the fall of 1911.

The state legislature of New York has taken a marked step in the encouragement of agricultural instruction. It has enacted a law providing that any high school introducing a course in agriculture which requires an extra instructor may receive from the state treasury $500. Any high school which also institutes a course of trainlug in domestic science may receive an additional $200, providing it employs a special teacher for this purpose. And if a course is added in book and class instruction along lines akin to agriculture and domestic science another $200 is provided from the state treasnry. Thus a high school employing three special teachers for these lines may receive $900 in state aid.

The probability is that before very long Mr. Howe may be called upon to fit his courses of instruction to pupils entering the seventh grade. This is due to a move which is being made in New York and which is worth the attention of Michigan and every other state. The educational authorities there are trying to remove that breaking off point at the end of the eighth grade, where boys so often conclude that they have had enough. Consequently they are working toward elimination of the grammar school, and instead of dividing the school course into three periods of four years each, as is done in Michigan they will divide the twelve years into two periods of six years each.

The seventh grade will be in the high school, and at that point will begin the initiation of the pupils into agricultural education and such other modern lines as have direct and practical application to the problem of making a living. Mr. Howe is particularly interested in this, and he hopes that the result will be to keep boys interested in school until they have completed the full twelve grades.

Mr. Howe's preparation has been calculated to especially fit him for the New York position. He saw this movement for agricultural education coming and quit ordinary high school teaching in order that he might be ready. When the idea fully struck him he was superintendent of schools at Manmee, O. He resigned his position and went to the Michigan Agricultural College, receiving his master's degree in 1907. He became an instructor at M. A. C. until he was called to the place in the agricultural department which he is just leaving.

Previously he had followed the ordinary line of education. Having attended the common schools at Kent county he went to the Allegan and Petoskey high schools. After graduation at Petoskey he took the scientific course at Battle Creek college and followed with the classical course at the University of Michigan, giving special attention to pedagogy. He taught in California and then spent a little time as editor of the Christian Educator at Battle Creek. Then he became principal of the Petoskey high school and was later superintendent of schools at Mancelona and Charlevoix.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain vim, strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and lacking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71, so that time I have cured many class ... are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yours of old manhood.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakened manhood ... difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A TRIAL in a plain sealed envelope (FREE) ... can use in your own home, and a sufficient trial will thank me every day in the year ... can take treatment for yourself.

School Reports

Hilton School

School opened September 13 with an enrollment of twenty-four. Eight boys and sixteen girls.

Ula Robbins went to East Jordan Monday to live with her father and attend school there.

We are much pleased to note the the interest parents take in sending their children to school regularly. We would advise them to keep up their interest throughout the entire year.

The percentage of attendance the past month is ninety-eight.

Visitors this month were Mr Bashaw, Charlotte Hull, Pearl Wells Anna Knoch and Louise Dishrn.

Mr. Bashaw gave the children a very interesting talk on compulsory education.

A burdock contest between the boys and girls of our school opened Thursday, of last week and will close Friday of this week. The side that has the largest pile of burrs shall have two pounds of homemade candy. At present we have about ten bushels, and the children are still hard at work gathering them. In this way we hope to destroy many of these plants which by multiplying might be a greater bother to the farmer the coming year were it not for the work of our farmer-to-be.

The following pupils were neither tardy nor absent the past month: Ellen Cook, Effie Cook, Franckie Cook, Elinor Gravelin, Emnice Hoyt Eliza Hull, Maggie Hull, Myrtle Hull, Walter Hull, Albert Hull, Emily Hartwell, Catherine Hartwell, Frankie Hartwell, Ella Mae VanDusen, Bell Wells, Orville Hilton, Edna Scott and Bernice Wells

Farm and Garden

DOUBLING THE CORN YIELD.

Every Farmer Can Breed Better Grain, Says Wisconsin Authority.

If it is possible to increase the yield of corn from ten to thirty bushels per acre we should all be made aware of that fact in the shortest possible time, for it makes a great difference to the farmer who is on high priced land whether he is growing thirty-five bushels of corn per acre or sixty, says Professor R. A. Moore of the University of Wisconsin, writing in Farm and Fireside.

A large portion of the advanced yield of corn in Wisconsin has been brought about by using definite select breeds of kiln dried seed that has high energy and vitality. Better culture has of course contributed to the result.

We cannot emphasize too much the importance of having seed corn grown in close proximity to where it is to be used. It usually takes several years' continual growing before corn becomes thoroughly acclimated to the surrounding environment of soil and climate, and if a radical change is made the corn will deteriorate.

As far as possible every farmer after getting started with highly bred seed should grow and develop his own seed from year to year. His first efforts should be toward selecting for an ideal corn plant. He should have in his mind those special characteristics he desires to perpetuate. Such ideal corn plants are to be found in his general field. Their selection is the first step in corn breeding.

EAR TO THE ROW CORN BREEDING.

In order to do this well the farmer should go through the field, following definite rows, at a time when the plant will show its general characteristics to the best possible advantage. This is usually when the corn is in the milk, as then the leaf, ear and stalk can be studied to good advantage. We should select a medium stalk which puts out one good ear about three feet above the ground. The stalk should have numerous broad healthy leaves.

When the ideal stalk is found it should be marked so as to recognize the plant after the corn has ripened. After the first plant is found other plants are selected that conform closely to the first selected stalk. In this way 200 or 300 stalks are marked, and after the corn is well ripened the ears from them are picked and husked. The ears that are not uniform in character are rejected, and only those that show good type are saved for the second year's work. These ears should be thoroughly cured and put away where mice will not molest them or where they will not be subject to frequent variation in temperature.

The second step in corn breeding is known as the ear to the row method of breeding. For this we use the ears selected the previous year. The ears are tested for germination and only the strongly germinating ears kept. Of these the butts and tips are rejected, and the middle two-thirds of the ear is generally used.

Ground should be selected upon which similar crops have been grown from year to year so that the soil will be in a uniform condition. Each ear is planted in a separate row until 50 or 100 ears are used. The hills are an equal distance apart, and the same number of kernels, usually three, are planted to the hill.

The outcome is astonishing. Some of the ears of corn planted have the energy, vitality and projected efficiency to produce as much as ten times the amount of select seed corn that other sister ears are able to produce. The rows that are to be the heavy yielders of good seed corn early become noticeable for the general uniformity which they hold throughout the entire row.

The next year's seed corn should be secured from these high yielding rows, and it will transmit this special function of yield and perfection of ears to its progeny of the next year's crop.

In some instances every alternate row is detasseled, so as to prevent close fertilization, and the seed corn selected then from the detasseled rows.

Good seed corn does not, of course, guarantee good crops. Poor soil poorly cared for will give a poor crop no matter how good the seed is. But using good seed you are sure good care will not be wasted by the failure of the seed in germinating or breeding power.

Thousands of Dollars Wasted.

Small grains should be shocked securely. Thousands of dollars are lost every year on account of poor work in shocking grain. Brace the sheaves firmly and press the heads together closely at the top. When well braced, cap to cover the grain and protect it from rains, storms and depredations of birds. See that the shocks are put up in good condition for curing.

How to Polish Hardwood Floors.

To repolish hardwood floors melt half a pound of pure beeswax and add a pint of turpentine and half as much ammonia. Stand the mixture over a boiling kettle in order to keep it warm. Apply to the floor with flannel cloth and let stand until quite cold. Now, as to polishing, the merriest and quickest method is to give the children a lark. Collect from the rag bag all the discarded stockings and socks, draw them on over the children's shoes, start a twostep on the piano, and the children will do the rest. If unfortunately your neighborhood offers no children your second choice of a polisher is an adult with a piece of brussels carpet wrapped around a brick.—Harper's Bazar.

How to Clean White Felt Hats.

To clean white felt hats mix powdered magnesia and water into a paste and rub it on the felt with a clean toothbrush. Let it dry thoroughly and then brush out the magnesia, when the hat will probably look quite clean. If this is not the case repeat the process.

How to Enamel Pantry Shelves.

An excellent idea for pantry shelves is to give them two coats of ordinary white paint and then a third finishing coat of white enamel. As soon as the enamel dries wash it over with cold water, and then it will harden quickly. Do not cover these shelves with paper, but leave them bare and notice the improvement. As there are no covers under which crumbs, etc., can collect, there is nothing to encourage mice, and the enamel is easily wiped clean with a damp cloth.

The COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
ILLUSTRATIONS By MAGNUS G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1909 by BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man, and councilor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts Nat and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man, but Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James.

CHAPTER II.—Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Casey, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, who, Price says, is the seventh wife.

CHAPTER III.—Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office where a young woman warns him that his life is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses.

CHAPTER IV.—Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger. He rescues Neil, who is being publicly whipped. The king orders Arbor Croche, his sheriff, and father of Winnsome, the girl who warned Plum of his danger, to pursue the two men and kill them.

CHAPTER V.—Plum and Neil plan to escape on the Typhoon. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Neil's sister. She is not yet married to Strang, but some mysterious influence seems to be forcing her into the union.

CHAPTER VI.—Plum suggests carrying Marion off to the ship at midnight, and sailing away with her. Neil approves of the idea and they plan to include Winnsome, with whom Neil is in love, in the enterprise. Plum discovers that the Typhoon is gone. He meets Marion and relieves her anxiety by telling her that Neil has left the island. The thunder of a gun is heard, and Plum declares Casey is bombarding St. James.

CHAPTER VII.—Marion tells him that his ship has been captured by the Mormons, and that the guns are guns of triumph. She pleads with him to leave the island and to prevent her brother from returning. She says nothing can save her from Strang. Plum finds Price raving mad. In a lucid interval he tells Nat that Strang is doomed, that armed men are descending on the island.

CHAPTER VIII.—Nat learns from Marion's parents that she has gone to Strang in obedience to a summons. He goes to the castle to look for her. One of Strang's wives tells him that she is gone and urges him to leave the island. He is confronted by Strang.

CHAPTER IX.—They engage in a desperate fight. Strang's wife interferes. Nat believes that he has killed the king. He finds Arbor Croche barring the door and kills him. The avenging host from the mainland descends on St. James. Neil and Nat take part in the battle and the latter is wounded. Strang, whom he thought he had killed, orders Nat thrown into a dungeon.

CHAPTER X.—He finds Neil a fellow prisoner. They overhear the Mormon jury deciding their fate. Winnsome Croche demands the death of the man who killed her father.

As he revealed the secret whose torture he meant to keep imprisoned in his own breast he dropped upon the pallet of straw and hurled his face between his arms, cursing himself that he had weakened in these last hours of their comradeship.

He dared not look to see the effect of his words on Neil. His companion uttered no sound. Instead there was a silence that was terrifying.

At the end of it Neil spoke in a voice so strangely calm that Nathaniel sat up and stared at him through the gloom.

"I believe they are coming after us, Nat. Listen!"

The tread of many feet came to them faintly from beyond the corridor wall.

Nathaniel had risen. They drew close together, and their hands clasped.

"Whatever it may be," whispered Neil, "may God have mercy on our souls!"

"Amen!" breathed Captain Plum.

CHAPTER XI.

"The Straight Death."

Hands were fumbling with the chain at the dungeon door.

It opened and Jeekum's ashen face shone in the candle-light. For a moment his frightened eyes rested on the two men still standing in their last embrace of friendship. A word of betrayal from them and he knew that his own doom was sealed.

He came in, followed by four men. One of them was MacDougall, the king's whipper. In the corridor were other faces, like ghostly shadows in the darkness. Only MacDougall's face was uncovered. The others were hidden behind white masks. The men uttered no sound, but ranged themselves like spectres in front of the door, their cocked rifles swung into the crooks of their arms. There was a triumphant leer on MacDougall's lips as he and the jailer approached. As the whipper bound Neil's hands behind his back he hissed in his ear:

"This will be a better job than the whipping, damn you!"

Neil laughed.

"Hear that, Nat?" he asked, loud enough for all in the cell to hear. "MacDougall says this will be a better job than the whipping. He remembers how I thrashed him once when he said something to Marion one day."

Neil was as cool as though acting his part in a play. His face was flushed, his eyes gleamed fearlessly defiant. And Nathaniel, looking upon the courage of this man, from under whose feet had been swept all hope of life, felt a twinge of shame at his own nervousness. MacDougall grew black with passion at the taunting reminder of his humiliation and tightened the thongs about Neil's wrists until they cut into the flesh.

"That's enough, you coward!" exclaimed Nathaniel, as he saw the blood start. "Here—take this!"

Like lightning he struck out and his fist fell with crushing force against the side of the man's head. MacDougall toppled back with a hollow groan, blood spurting from his mouth and nose. Nathaniel turned coolly to the four rifles leveled at his breast.

"A pretty puppet to do the king's commands!" he cried. "If there's a man among you let him finish the work!"

Jeekum had fallen upon his knees beside the whipper.

"Great God!" he shrieked. "You've killed him! You've stove in the side of his head!"

There was a sudden commotion in the corridor. A terrible voice boomed forth in a roar.

"Let me in!"

Strang stood in the door. He gave a single glance at the man gasping and bleeding in the mud. Then he looked at Nathaniel. The eyes of the two men met unflinching. There was no hatred now in the prophet's face.

"Captain Plum, I would give a tenth of my kingdom for a brother like you!" he said calmly. "Here—I will finish the work." He went boldly to the task, and as he tied Nathaniel's arms behind him he added "The vicissitudes of war, Captain Plum. You are a man—and can appreciate what they sometimes mean!"

A few minutes later, gagged and bound, the prisoners fell behind two of the armed guards and at a command from the king, given in a low tone to Jeekum, marched through the corridor and up the short flight of steps that led out of the jail. To Nathaniel's astonishment there was no light to guide them. Candles and lights had been extinguished. What words he heard were spoken in whispers. In the deep shadow of the prison wall a third guard joined the two ahead and like automatons they strode through the gloom with slow, measured step, their rifles held with soldierly precision. Nathaniel glanced over his shoulder and saw three other white masked faces a dozen feet away. The king remained behind.

He shuddered and looked at Neil. His companion's appearance was almost startling. He seemed half a head taller than himself, yet he knew that he was shorter by an inch or two; his shoulders were thrown back, his chin held high, he kept step with the guards ahead. He was marching to his death as coolly as though on parade.

Nathaniel's heart beat excitedly as they came to where the scrub of the forest met the plain. They were taking the path that led to Marion's! Again he looked at Neil. There was no change in the fearless attitude of Marion's brother, no lowering of his head, no faltering in his step. They passed the graves and entered the opening in the forest where lay Marion's home, and as once more the sweet odor of lilac came to him, awakening within his soul all those things that he had tried to stifle that he might meet death like a man, he felt himself weakening, until only the cloth about his mouth restrained the moaning cry that forced itself to his lips. If he had possessed a life to give he would have sacrificed it gladly then for a word with the Mormon king, a last prayer that death might be meted to him here, where eternity would come to him with his glazing eyes fixed in the end upon the home of his beloved, and where the sweetness of the flower that had become a part of Marion herself might soothe the pain of his final moment on earth.

His heart leaped with a hope as a sharp voice from the rear commanded a halt. It was Jeekum. He came up out of the darkness from behind the rear guard, his face still unmasked, and for a few moments was in whispered consultation with the guards ahead. And Strang, in the virulence of that hatred which he concealed so well, conceived of this spot to give added torment to death? It was the poetry of vengeance! For the first time Neil turned toward his companion. Each read what the other had guessed. Neil, who was nearest to he whispering four, turned suddenly toward them and listened. When he looked at Nathaniel again it was with a slow negative shake of his head.

Jeekum returned quickly and placed himself between them, seizing each by an arm, and the forward guards, pivoting to the left, set off at their steady pace across the clearing. As they entered the denser gloom of the forest on the farther side Nathaniel felt the jailer's fingers tighten about his arm, then relax—and tighten again. A gentle pressure held him back and the guards in front gained half a dozen feet. In a low voice Jeekum called for those behind to fall a few paces to the rear.

Then came again the mysterious working of the man's fingers on Nathaniel's arm.

Was Jeekum signaling to him?

He could see Neil's white face still turned stoically to the front. Evidently nothing had occurred to arouse his suspicions. If the maneuvering of Jeekum's fingers meant anything it was intended for him alone. Action had been the mania of his life. The possibility of new adventure, even in the face of death, thrilled him. He waited, breathless—and the strange pressure came again, so hard that it hurt his flesh.

There was no longer a doubt in his mind. The king's sheriff wanted to speak to him.

And he was afraid of the eyes and ears behind.

The fingers were cautioning him to be ready—when the opportunity came.

The path widened and through the thin treetops above their heads the starlight filtered down upon them. The leading guards were 20 feet away. How far behind were the others?

A moment more and they plunged into deep night again. The figures ahead were mere shadows. Again the fingers dug into Nathaniel's arm, and pressing close to the sheriff he bent down his head.

A low, quick whisper fell in his ear.

"Don't give up hope! Marion—Winnsome—"

The sheriff jerked himself erect without finishing. Hurried footsteps had come close to their heels. The rear guards were so near that they could have touched them with their guns. Had some spot of lesser gloom shead betrayed the prisoner's bowed head and Jeekum's white face turned to it? There was a steady pressure on Nathaniel's arm now, a warning, frightened pressure, and the hand that made it trembled. Jeekum feared the worst—but his fear was not greater than the chill of disappointment that came to smother the excited beating of Nathaniel's heart. What had the jailer meant to say? What did he know about Marion and Winnsome, and why had he given birth to new hope in the same breath that he mentioned their names?

His words carried at least one conviction. Marion was alive despite her brother's somber prophecies. If she had killed herself the sheriff would not have coupled her name with Winnsome's in the way he had.

Nathaniel's nerves were breaking with suspense. He stifled his breath to listen to catch the faintest whisper [illegible] come to him from the [illegible] at his side. Each passing moment of silence added to his desperation. He squeezed the sheriff's hand in his arm, but there was no responding signal; in a patch of thick gloom that almost concealed the figures ahead he pressed near to him and lowered his head again—and Jeekum pushed him back fiercely, with a low curse.

They emerged from the forest and the clear starlight shone down upon them. A little distance off lay the lake in shimmering stillness. Nathaniel looked boldly at the sheriff now, and as his glance passed beyond him he was amazed at the change that had come over Neil. The young man's head was bowed heavily upon his breast, his shoulders were hunched forward, and he walked with a listless, uneven step. Was it possible that his magnificent courage had at last given way?

A hundred steps farther they came to the beach and Nathaniel saw a boat at the water's edge with a single figure guarding it. Straight to this Jeekum led his prisoners. For the first time he spoke to them aloud.

"One in front, the other in back," he said.

For an instant Nathaniel found himself close beside Neil and he prodded him sharply with his knee. His companion did not lift his head. He made no sign, gave no last flashing comradeship with his eyes, but climbed into the bow of the boat and sat down with his chin still on his chest, like a man lost in stupor.

"Don't Give Up Hope—Marion—Winnsome—"

Nathaniel followed him, scarcely believing his eyes, and sat himself in the stern, leaning comfortably against the knees of the man who took the tiller. He felt a curious thrill pass through him when he discovered a moment later that this man was Jeekum. Two men seized the oars amidships. A fourth, with his rifle across his knees, sat facing Neil.

For the first time Nathaniel found himself wondering what this voyage meant. Were they to be rowed far down the shore to some secret fastness where no other ears would hear the sound of the avenging rifles, and where, a few inches under the forest mold, their bodies would never be discovered? Each stroke of the oars added to the remoteness of this possibility. The boat was heading straight out to sea. Perhaps they were to meet a less terrible death by drowning, an end which, though altogether unpleasant, held something comforting in it for Captain Plum. Two hours passed without pause in the steady labor of the men at the oars. In those hours not a word was spoken. The two men amidships held no communication. The guard in the bow moved a little now and then only to relieve his cramped limbs. Neil was absolutely motionless, as though he had ceased to breathe. Jeekum uttered not a whisper.

It was his whisper that Nathaniel waited for, the signaling clutch of his fingers, the sound of his breath close to his ears. Again and again he pressed himself against the sheriff's knees. He knew that he was understood, and yet there came no answer. At last he looked up, and Jeekum's face was far above him, staring straight and unseeing into the darkness ahead. His last spark of hope went out.

After a time a dark rim loomed slowly up out of the sea. It was land, half a mile or so away. Nathaniel sat up with fresh interest, and as they drew nearer Jeekum rose to his feet and gazed long and steadily in both directions along the coast. When he returned to his seat the boat's course was changed. A few minutes later the bow grated upon sand. Still voiceless as specters the guards leaped ashore and Neil roused himself to follow them, climbing over the gunwale like a sick man. Nathaniel was close at his heels. With a growing sense of horror he saw two ghostly stakes thrusting themselves out of the beach a dozen paces away. He looked beyond them. As far as he could see there was sand—nothing but sand, as white as paper, scintillating in a billion flashing needle-points in the starlight. Instinctively he guessed what the stakes were for, and walked toward them with the blood turning cold in his veins. Neil was before him and stopped at the first stake, making no effort to lift his eyes as Nathaniel strode past him. At the second, a dozen feet beyond, Nathaniel's two guards halted, and placed him with his back to the post. Two minutes later, bound hand and foot to the stake, he shifted his head so that he could look at his companion.

WITHOUT saying anything against the gentlemen who are candidates on the Charlevoix county labor party and Socialist tickets for county offices, for we all believe they are all good citizens and entitled to the respect of their fellow citizens, we desire to call the attention of voters to the difference between their nomination and the nomination of the Republican ticket. After a long contest the people of Michigan have secured the right to name their party candidates by direct vote and while the primary law is not perfect, as the old line politicians have endeavored to make it as obnoxious as possible, it has demonstrated that it has came to stay and will be simplified as time goes on. In response to the people's will, Charlevoix county named their candidates by the direct method. The Labor party who still clung to the old discredited machine method and thirty of forty leaders met in convention at Boyne City and picked out the candidates who would be voted upon at the primary, and the ticket which they presented to the voters was nominated by less than forty votes. The Socialists named their party ticket in practically the same manner.

On the other hand the Republican ticket was named as the choice of over twelve hundred voters in this county, who uninfluenced by any party boss, went to the polls and voted for the man of their choice and did their work well.

Ford P. Robbins, who heads the ticket for sheriff, is a man who is in the prime of his life, has served his township so well as supervisor that last spring, while laying on a sick bed, he was renominated and elected which shows how he is regarded where he is known best, and we predict he will be just as triumpally elected in November despite the methods which it is rumored are being used against him.

Mr. Fitch, the other new man on the ticket, defeated two opponents, and is well fitted in every way for the position to which he has been named. He will be found a worthy successor to the present efficient prosecutor.

The other candidates have all been tried and not found wanting, as was proven by the endorsement they received at the primary.

Dehumanizing Effect of the Liquor Business

In Fermington, Illinois a coal mining town, where the miners were on a strike, an owner of saloon property became intolerably distressed over the wasting of miners' strike benefits in saloons. He saw the women and children of the town slowly starving while the husbands and father were spending for drink the money that the national union was sending in for the support of their families during the period of idleness. Unable to endure it no longer, this owner proposed to his saloon tenants that he would remit their rent if they would close up their places until the strike was ended. To make his proposition more practical he got the mayor of the place to join him in urging all the other saloonists of the place to close likewise. Dealers were promised that they would give rebate on their licenses if they would suspend business. But all pleas were absolutely for naught. The conditions which stirred normal men to pity had no effect on the saloon keepers. They declared their intention to keep selling to everybody who had the price regardless of of home conditions. The whole incident is but another proof of the weird dehumanizing effect of the liquor business.—The Interior.

A Costly Painting

"My! but these art works do run into money," remarked a passenger. "When I was in Chicago I saw a little painting about a foot square, that was held at five hundred dollars. If I had a million of money you'd never catch me paying five hundred dollars for a painting like that." "That's the way you talk," spoke up a bashful traveler, "but I'll guarantee that you paid four times as much money for a painting not a tenth part as big." "What, me?" "Yes, you." "What kind of a painting?" "The one at the end of your nose."—American Issue.

MICHIGAN LEADS

All States in the Production of the Sugar Beet

Estimated Yield this Year is Nine-Hundred Twenty Thousand Ton.

At the hearing before the House Ways and Means committee when the sugar schedule of the Payne tariff bill was up for consideration, representatives of the cane sugar interests boldly asserted that the climatic conditions in Michigan were such that it was unfitted for sugar beet culture and the industry would never thrive here. Edward Atkinson of Boston, having extensive business interests in Cuba, and concerned more in building up a foreign industry for the purpose of dumping his cane sugar, product in the American market, was one of those who made an especial attack upon the Michigan beet sugar factory.

The facts are that according to preliminary estimates obtained from the best authority show that in sugar beet production Michigan will be the banner state of the beet sugar states in the union in the present year. The estimated acreage, the harvesting of the crop just now commencing, 115,000 and it is calculated in these will yield 920,000 tons of beets to 2,000 pounds each. Colorado comes next with 900,000 tons, and California third with 850,000 tons of beets. Utah is estimated 400,000 tons, and Wisconsin at 162,000 tons. In sugar output, Michigan it is estimated will produce 120,000 short tons, and an estimate gives California 122,655 tons, but the national Farmer believes the actual results will place Michigan in first place. Colorado is calculated to produce 108,000 short tons of sugar, Utah 50,000 tons and Wisconsin 16,820. Some of the smaller states may increase this estimate owing to more favorable conditions recently.

As a matter of fact, Michigan has the soil, climatic conditions and and area to produce all the sugar consumed in the United States, if congress through proper legislation would give the home industry the protection and encouragement to which it is entitled.

Little Things That Count.

Little drops of water poured into the milk give the milkman's daughter lovely gowns of silk. Little grains of sugar mingled with the grocer's sand make the grocer's assets swell to beat the band. Little bowls of custard, humble though they seem, help enrich the fellow selling pure ice cream. Little rocks and bowlders, little chunks of slate, make the coal man's fortune something fierce and great. Little ads. well written, printed nice and neat, give the joyful merchant homes on Easy street.—Walt Mason in Farm and Ranch Review.

PROPER TYPE OF ROAD TO BUILD

One That Will Make Best Use of Material at Hand.

PLAN OF BUILDING MACADAM.

If Satisfactory Ideas of Dust Prevention Are Developed Roads of This Material Will Continue to Be Extensively Used—Don't Let the Expense Exceed Funds Available.

During the meeting of the Ohio Engineering society at Columbus the following paper was read by James C. Winders, state highway commissioner, on "The Proper Type of Roads:"

Road building is largely a local problem, and the proper type of road to build is that which will make the best use of the material at hand to produce a satisfactory road surface and at an expense not exceeding the money available.

In the earliest extensive road improvements in Ohio the problem was solved by using gravel for the wearing surface, and this early work was practically confined to the region where an abundance of gravel could be found. This region was principally in the central and southern part of the west half of the state and embraced about one-third of its area. I have known of some instances where gravel was shipped by rail for road work, but it was too expensive, considering the type of construction, and the practice was never extensive. A large amount of this work was built, probably fifteen or twenty thousand miles.

At the time of their construction these roads were undoubtedly the proper type, as the cost of the work came within the means of the farmers who paid for them. These roads in the best form of their construction, when new and in good repair, provided an admirable surface for public travel, and at present there are many of them which can hardly be excelled by the more modern construction.

The majority of these roads present in their present condition one of the most important problems of today's road work. On account of lack of sufficient repairs a large part of the mileage is practically worn out. Owing to the exhaustion of the gravel supply in a considerable part of this territory the resurfacing of many of these roads has been done with crushed stone, and where properly done, using the old gravel road for the bottom course, very excellent results have been obtained.

In the present condition of the development of road building the best known type of construction in the gravel road country would be the placing of a crushed stone top layer on the road, leaving the old gravel to provide the bottom course. The old road should be graded to conform to the desired cross section for the new road. Mudholes should be cleaned out and filled with gravel. The surface should be rolled and watered to produce a solid foundation. The macadam top course can be water bound or have a bituminous binder if the necessary funds for such construction are available.

Throughout the central and northwestern parts of the state, occupying between one-third and one-half of its area, limestone furnishes the most easily obtained road building material, and in this region the best type of road is the two course water bound macadam. If satisfactory methods of dust prevention are developed this construction will continue to be extensively used. The method of constructing this type of road was described by the writer at the meeting of this society last year, and I presume no further description is needed at this time.

The cross section, like the road covering, becomes, only in a more limited sense, a local problem. In level regions with slight grades it is imperative to raise the grade above the surrounding country, and to do this it is necessary to take the fill from the side ditches, requiring them to be made wide and deep. The bottom of the ditch should be placed from eight to ten feet from the edge of the berms. The ditch should be cut with straight slope from its bottom to the edge of the berms. This will permit a mowing machine to be run down the slope to the bottom of the ditch, an arrangement that materially reduces the cost of keeping the road clear of weeds and brush.

BUILDING A PARACHUTE.

How to Make One and Attach It to a Kite by Simple Methods.

Many boys are interested in parachutes. Perhaps the method of making a parachute as told by a boy will be of interest.

He says to take two pieces of tissue paper about fourteen inches square. Fold each piece separately across the middle each way. Then fold once diagonally from the corner which is the center of the paper. Trim off the short side of the folded paper and open out flat. You should then have a nearly circular piece of paper with four creases extending across and crossing one another at its center.

Cover one side of one piece with thin paste. Cut four pieces of strong thread, each about three times as long as the diameter of the paper, and lay a piece in each of the creases of the pasted sheet. The paste will hold it in place, the surplus string extending equally beyond the sheet on opposite sides.

Cut a cardboard disk an inch in diameter and lay on top of the crossed strings at the center. Over all place the second circle of paper, pressing it down smooth.

At one end of a piece of fine wire four or five inches long twist an eye or loop. Force the other end through the center of the disk, bending it so it will not come out. Gather the ends of the string and tie in a knot, to which fasten a small weight. An iron washer makes a good weight.

The parachute usually is raised into the air at the end of a kite's tail. Two ways of attachment are suggested:

At the end of the tail fasten a wire ending in a square angled hook. Have your helper run out with the kite and slip the hook through the eye in the wire extending through the top of the parachute. By practice you will soon learn how to jerk your kite so as to cause the eye to slip off the hook, when, if the weight is right, the parachute will open and gracefully sail to the ground.

Instead of a hook stick a hairpin through the end of the tail, points extending down. Bend the two legs of the hairpin so they cross each other and slip in the eye of the parachute.

The hairpin thus forms a kind of clip, which will just hold the parachute. A little extra weight caused by jerking the kite string will cause the eye to pull out and the parachute to drop.

How to Put Sleeves Into a Waist.

Trim out the armseye to the required size, then take tape measure and measure one inch back from shoulder seam and double the armseye; then cut notch where it comes opposite and cut the middle seam of sleeve of such and arrange fullness even, and you will never have to change your mind.

HURT TO HOME TRADE.

How Some Churches Bring Injury to Their Members' Own Townsfolk.

Many retail concerns have found it necessary to take united action against the exacting demands made upon them by the churches and other organizations in their city, demands which singly they dare not in many cases refuse. It would be a good thing if concerted action might also result in the discouragement of certain other methods which tend directly to the injury of the local retailer.

Among these, for example, is the assistance which church organizations give to retail mail order houses by actually engaging in the sale of their merchandise. In such cases those interested are frequently induced to distribute advertising which urges the consumer to cut out the retail store and deal direct with the retail mail order concern.—Dry Goods Economist.

City Lighting Competition.

Some time ago it was announced that some Ohio city, Columbus or Cincinnati or some other, was making arrangements to become the best lighted city in the world and was soon to invite inspection and comparison on that basis. But now Chicago jumps into the arena and declares that she is after that prize and proposes to capture it. As Chicago is much larger than any Ohio city the meaning of such an accomplishment for her is considerable, but she starts in with the announcement that she is to have "10,000 more are lights to begin with," and when we consider what that ought to mean it is evident that Chicago will set the pace for herself regardless of cost and only looking for results. Besides this increase in lights those already existing are to be materially improved in efficiency. For a city the size of Chicago to deliberately undertake to become the best lighted city in the world is no small stunt, but Chicago will do it or—fail.

Nemesis.

"Pa," said the senator's little boy, looking up from his book, "what is a 'Nemesis?'"

"A Nemesis, my son," replied the senator wearily, "is a female office seeker that you foolishly promised to assist."—Catholic Standard and Times.

CHARLEVOIX WINS

Defeats Petoskey in Game Last Saturday 8 to 5

Boyne City Will Meet Locals on the Home Grounds Saturday

Once more Coach Wise's husky warriors took their worthy opponents into camp by defeating Petoskey last Saturday by a score of 8 to 5. Never has the writer witnessed a more closely contested game than that fought on the Petoskey gridiron and furthermore never was the Charlevoix eleven seen to fight with more vim and determination than was displayed last Saturday. With about forty rooters at their backs the boys could see only victory and they slipped onto the field with that feeling uppermost.

After considerable battling back and forth Powers' trusty toe met with a goal from field ending the tie by 3 to 0 in Charlevoix's favor. When once they got a taste of victory the boys were eager for more and a touchdown was secured by Mitchell falling on a forward pass behind the goal in which their player failed to recover the ball, so the first period ended in a score of 8 to 0.

At the beginning of the second period Petoskey connected with one of the forward passes and over for a touchdown, the second period ending 8 to 5. In the next two periods neither side succeeding in scoring though they fought with all the energy they possessed. The game was a notable one for Charlevoix it being the first game they won at Petoskey in five years.

Next Saturday Boyne City comes here for the biggest game of the season. They defeated Petoskey the Saturday before by a 5 to 0 score so the game promises to be an interesting one. Come out and see the game.

The line-up Saturday was as follows:

Left Tackle—Gaskin, George Papineau.
Left Guard—Lyngklip.
Center—Durance.
Right Guard—Kirby.
Right Tackle—Gray.
Right End—John Papineau.
Quarter—Wallace.
Left Half—Powers.
Full—Krulik.
Right Half—Captain Hull.

How to Cook Lentils.

Pick over a pint of lentils and soak half an hour in cold water. Cook a small knuckle of ham or smoked shoulder or a piece of smoked bacon and skim it; then add the lentils and a good sized onion cut up. Have about three quarts of water and boil together about an hour and a half. Pare and dice six potatoes; then add them to the lentils and salt and pepper to taste. Add half a teaspoonful of marjoram or poultry dressing. This is very palatable.

Training Employees.

It is unwise in training employees to put too much emphasis upon the fact that they are unrelated individuals. They should also be taught that they are parts of a great whole. The employee must know and feel that he is with the house for the good of the house; that every duty, every difficulty, every exaction, is for its services; that the organization is bigger than the individual units.—John V. Farwell, Jr.

THE ALABAMA'S PIRATE CHICK

How Crocky Dixon Hunted a Ship In a Fog.

By KINGSBURY WELCH.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

There were during the civil war several Confederate privateers fitted out to prey on American commerce. The most important of these were the Alabama and the Florida. The former, commanded by an ex-official of the United States navy, literally swept our merchant marine, which at that time had taken the lead in the world's carrying trade, from the seas.

Raphael H. Semmes was the captain of the vessel, which was often dubbed a pirate, and when she was sent to the bottom in Cherbourg harbor by the Kearsarge she left a successor in a real pirate, one that flouted the skull and crossbones instead of the stars and bars.

The birth of this offshoot, for which Tarantula would have been an appropriate name, was in this wise: There was, among the crew of the Alabama, which was made up of the most desperate men of all nations, one named Dixon. He is said to have been a mild mannered man, slender and delicate looking, but as bloodthirsty as a tiger. He was called Crocodile Dixon, the surname being abbreviated to Crocky. In 1863 the Alabama visited the Indian archipelago. Dixon deserted and set up in the business of piracy on his own account.

He succeeded in getting a small schooner, which he named the Semmes in honor, or, rather, dishonor, of his old commander, armed her, gathered a crew such as could easily be picked up in that region of pirates and proceeded to make himself master of everything that flouted except men-of-war, from which he scudded away as fast as sails would carry him. Piracy has always been in vogue in that part of the world, and Malay pirates have often figured in stories of reckless travelers who have been forced to walk the plank. At any rate, Crocky Dixon concluded to make it his field.

One evening Crocky Dixon sat on the deck of the Semmes puffing a cigar and watching a big ship maneuvering to get out of the strait before the dark should come on and prevent her doing so. The pirate resembled a spider watching some clumsy insect getting itself entangled in a web. Dixon lay perfectly still, confident that the big ship, unwieldly in the narrow strait, would fall into his hands. Perhaps there were other vessels in sight whose attention he did not care to attract; perhaps he preferred the morning for the capture. At any rate, he made no move to get up his anchor and carefully avoided displaying any evidence of the character of the Semmes.

The ship he watched was the Mary Blake of Philadelphia. She had been to Japan with a cargo for that country and was making her way back with Japanese goods for America. Besides her crew were a number of passengers, including women and children. Captain Archer, a young man who had been promoted from mate, was her commander. He had recently been married, and his wife was aboard.

Now, the captain had been in these waters before and knew its dangers. As soon as he espied the low cut schooner lying at anchor so quietly he suspected her. This is why he risked getting his ship aground on the rocks before nightfall in order to make the open sea. He had a pilot, but the air was murky, and he was afraid of fog. If the schooner were really a pirate he might better sink his ship than fall a prey to her. On the other hand, if a fog came on it might conceal the ship from the pirate.

While he was debating the chances a mist settled down which soon concealed the two vessels from each other. Dixon before the Mary Blake was hidden had noted her position so that he would be able to steer for her in case the fog protected her for too long a time to accord with his interests. Captain Archer, who had an honest, seeing the necessity of changing his position, raised the anchor and permitted the tide to carry him half a mile down, when, not daring to risk striking something by going farther, he anchored again.

When darkness fell the Semmes was still in her original position, while the Mary Blake was half a mile away from where Crocky Dixon supposed she was. During the night Captain Archer thought it expedient to inform both his crew and his passengers of the danger. If the schooner he had seen was a pirate, as soon as the fog lifted he would come for them. And if it did not soon lift he might not wait for it to do so. The captain therefore directed that not a light should appear on the ship and there should be no noise aboard to indicate to the pirates that the two vessels were near each other.

Not a person aboard the Mary Blake slept that night except the children who were too young to understand the terrible danger that threatened them. The captain told them that there was little danger of being attacked at night and that they had better get what rest they could, since they might need all their fortitude in the morning.

No change in the weather came with the dawn. The fog remained, and there was no wind. Dixon ordered out a boat's crew to pull the Semmes toward where he had last seen the Mary Blake. But the ship was not where he had last seen her. Knowing that since she could not have moved up she must have moved down, he directed the oarsmen to pull downstream.

It was about 4 o'clock in the morning that officers, crew and passengers of the Mary Blake—the passengers herded together in groups on deck—caught the sound of oars working in rowlocks. Every cheek blanched. The women gathered their children in their arms as if to shield them. But no one uttered even a moan lest the sound should betray them. Captain Archer leaned over the bulwarks, listening intently. What arms there were aboard had been brought up and placed on deck, with the intention that if boarded the men would sell their lives as dearly as possible, but as to making a successful defense, it was not considered. As the sound grew more distinct, indicating that the boat was approaching, the captain turned and, facing the terror stricken people on deck, put his finger on his lips to enjoin silence.

All could hear the sound of oars working slowly, indicating to the experienced ears of Captain Archer that a boat was towing some craft larger than itself. Then there was a sound of an oar slipping from a rowlock. Some greenhorn had "caught a crab." The next instant there came over the water frightful oaths and the crack of a pistol. Crocky had first sworn at and then shot the man who had slipped his oar.

This was quite enough to indicate to those on the Mary Blake the awful fate in store for them in case they were found by the pirate. The men drew long breaths. The women put wraps about the children's heads, fearing that they might cry. Not a sound escaped, and in a few minutes it was evident that the pirates had missed them.

But it was not to be expected that the search was ended. Crocky would continue it as long as the fog lasted, and when it lifted they would be at his mercy. Many were the prayers whispered that Providence might interpose between them and the horrors awaiting them. All now hoped that the fog would continue, that the expected massacre or walking of the plank, whichever it might be, should be deferred as long as possible. Then, too, the longer the fog lasted the more hope that something might occur to change the situation.

There were no further indications of the presence of the pirate for an hour. The fog was getting thinner, and it was plain that it might at any moment be possible to distinguish through it objects at a fair distance. Then came another terror for those aboard the Mary Blake. The sound of oars was again heard, this time more rapid, indicating that they were not towing. Then through the dissipating mist was seen a boat pulled by six oarsmen. As soon as they espied the Mary Blake they set up a blood curdling shout. Resting on their oars, they began to look about them for the Semmes, which they had evidently left in the prosecution of their search.

And now with the suddenness of uplifting fogs this one vanished, giving place to bright sunshine. The rowboat was a cable's length from the Mary Blake, the Semmes was half a mile beyond the rowboat, and two miles above was a ship coming down with the tide, which had just turned. A light breeze filled her sails. But the most gladdening sight of all was the square openings along her sides for guns, indicating that she was a man-of-war, and more cheering than all was the stars and stripes streaming from the peak.

To the men in the boat the sight of this new ship was as terrifying as it was gratifying to those on the Mary Blake. They pulled frantically to the Semmes, whose crew, having seen the sight, were getting up sail. Having taken aboard the boat's crew, they slipped their cable and made off to the southward at an angle with the course of the man-of-war. By the time the latter received the signals that the flying schooner was a pirate it was too late. She had got into waters where the armed vessel could not follow her.

Then those on the Mary Blake fell on their knees and gave thanks for their escape.

Crocky Dixon met his end while pursued by a United States gunboat. When it was evident that he would be taken he fired a shot into his own brain.

"In spite of the fact that auto racing is a great destroyer of life, its death rate per capita is as nothing compared with the loss of life resulting from aviation and the remuneration is very much less. It is not unusual for the auto racer to make five to ten thousand dollars in a single race. The pay of the of the aviator is revealed in a letter from Philip Parmalee, a Marion boy in the employ of the Wright brothers. Parmalee receives $325 a week during aviation meets and the balance of his time $25 per week, and expenses."—Cadillac Globe.

An occasion of interest and importance to Cadillac and Wexford county will be the annual corn contest to be held in that city Friday, November 25. On this occasion the best corn grow by the boys of Wexford county who are members of the Boys' Agricultural Club will be exhibited and prizes will be awarded to the young growers of the corn selected by the judges as superior. Congressman McLaughlin, Prof. Joseph A. Jeffery of the Agricultural College, and Jesse W. Pickett, a corn expert from Kent county, will take part in the exercises connected with the corn exhibition and contest and they will award the prizes. One hundred dollars in cash prizes will be given to the exibitors and in addition Congressman McLaughlin will give $5 for the best corn essay, and the Agricultural College will give two scholarships worth $35 each to the boys who have the best yield per acre. It is expected that some of the best exhibits brought to the coming corn contest will be sent to Chicago as representative of the corn products of western Michigan.

The Ann Arbor railroad having given out the information that it will not commence the erection of the new depot until next season, business men and others in Cadillac are very wroth over the situation. A. H. Webber, whose opinion is shared by other members of the board of trade, said to the News and Express. "When Mr. Kirby and Mr. Holliday of the Ann Arbor told the board of trade that they really meant business when they said the company would start the depot this fall I really believed them, and I reprimanded one of our members who insisted that the company would do nothing of the kind. I see he was right.

"It looks to me as though the Ann Arbor proposes to play horse with us just as long as we will let them. Now this is what I would do. I would have the city council go on with its plans to have the railway commission to force the company to build a depot here. It would be a satisfaction to have the Ann Arbor told by the commission what to do. Then I would have the city proceed to have the fake front, the whole lake front, from Chapin St. to the club house grounds, condemned on the ground that it is more necessary to the welfare of the city than it is to the Ann Arbor railroad. I understand that such a move can be made. Of course Cadillac would have to pay a fair price for the property, if it really is the company's and we could afford to pay the proper price.

"Further I would be willing to take a paper and go up and down the street and into the business offices to get every last business man in the city to agree to use every effort to withhold patronage from the Ann Arbor company until it had actually started the erection of a suitable depot. I guess that would be effective and it can all be done safely, I am told."

Mr. Webber feels deeply on the question and inasmuch as there are many others here of like mind, it is likely there will be "something doing" soon.—Cadillac Globe.

An indication of the rapid disappearance of timber from the lands of this section of the state is observed in the constantly changing trackage of the Michigan Central logging branches. The work train is now stationed at this place and the crew is engaged in removing the steel and the ties which are suitable for use in other branch building from the Vanderbilt, Buell and other branches which have served for several years to get out the timber from sections hereabouts. Now that the timber is cut off there is no further use for these logging branches and the material is being taken up, loaded on cars and the cars shoved in on unused spurs to await the orders from headquarters concerning the matter of construction of new branches for logging use and extension work on present branches. It is expected that several miles of track will be taken up in this locality before the crew completes its work here.—Gaylord Herold-Times.

"Kate," the "First Citizen of Oklahoma."

"When the politicians of the new sovereign state of Oklahoma want something done that is really worth the effort," says the Woman's Home Companion for October, "they always make a trip to Guthrie, the capital city, and present themselves in a little office on the top floor of the senate building. There they shake hands with a graceful little dark-haired young woman, on whose door is the legend 'Commissioner of Charities.' This is Kate Barnard, familiarly known as 'Kate.' She is to Oklahoma what Jane Addams is to Chicago, its first citizen. The politicians see 'Kate' first, and the governor and the state officials afterward. Through her little office there pours a steady stream of people all day long, people whom she has met or people who want to meet her. 'Kate' is, and has been for several one of the controlling spirits of Oklahoma. This Nebraska girl of southern parentage began her interest in Oklahoma by winning against three hundred and fifty competitors the position of manager in charge of the exhibit made by Oklahoma (then a territory) at the St. Louis fair. Then she started a charity organization with the object of finding employment for the stranded people on the newly-opened lands and the newly-built cities of the territory. She soon became almost the patron saint of the human driftwood of the city slums. These moral derelicts all obeyed her majority on election-day. 'Where are you going, boys?' she would ask a group of toughs in tow of a saloon keeper. Then she would remind these human wrecks that she had sent Jack's little daughter to school, had nursed Bill's wife through typhoid fever and had found a suit of clothes for Jim's boy. Further, she would tell these outcasts that they must vote against the saloon candidate and for the decent man who was a friend of hers. Then, while the saloonkeeper looked on helplessly, the boys would follow 'Kate' to the ballot-box. When the State Department of Charities was established, she received a majority of fifty-six thousand votes for the position of commissioner. The is now so runs the rapturous comment of one Oklahoma editor the incarnate spirit of the new state."

A STEADY DRAIN

Sick Kidneys Weaken the Whole Body—Make You Ill, Languid and Depressed.

Sick kidneys weaken the body through the continual drainage of life-giving albumen from the blood into the urine, and the substitution of poisonous uric acid that goes broadcast through the system, sowing the seeds of disease. Loss of albumen causes weakness, langour, depression. Uric poisoning causes rheumatic pain, nervousness, nausea, crinks in the back, gravel and kidney stones. The proper treatment, and the best remedy is Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is good proof in the following testimonial:

R. Klawe, 119 South D St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills far superior to any other kidney medicine I have ever taken. My back was very painful and I had many other symptoms of kidney trouble. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved the backache and other difficulties, in fact helped me in every way. I am always glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills and I willingly give permission to refer to me at any time as one who praises them highly."

Neil was similarly fastened, with his face turned partly toward him. There was no change in his attitude. His head hung weakly upon his chest, as if he had fainted.

What did it mean?

Suddenly every nerve in Nathaniel's body leaped into excited action.

The guards were entering their boat! The last man was shoving it off—they were rowing away! His throbbing muscles seemed ready to burst their bonds. The boat became indistinct in the starry gloom—a mere shadow—and faded in the distance. The sound of oars became fainter and fainter. Then, after a little, there was wafted back to him from far out in the lake a man's voice—the wild snatch of a song. The Mormons were gone! They were not to be shot! They were not—

A voice spoke to him, startling him so that he would have cried out if it had not been for the cloth that gagged him. It was Neil, speaking coolly, laughingly.

"How are you, Nat?"

Nathaniel's staring eyes revealed his astonishment. He could see Neil laughing at him as though it was an unusually humorous joke in which they were playing a part.

"Lord, but this is a funny mess!" he chuckled. "Here am I, able and willing to talk—and there you are, as dumb as a mummy, and looking for all the world as if you'd seen a ghost! What's the matter? Aren't you glad we're not going to be shot?"

Nathaniel nodded.

The other's voice became suddenly sober.

"This is worse than the other, Nat, it's what we call the 'Straight Death.' Unless something turns up between now and tomorrow morning, or a little later, we'll be as dead as though they had filled us with bullets. Our only hope rests in the fact that I can use my lungs. That's why I didn't let them know when my gag became loose. I had the devil's own time keeping it from falling with my chin; pretty near broke my neck doing it. A little later, when we're sure Jee-kum and his men are out of hearing, I'll begin calling for help. Perhaps some fisherman or hunter—"

He stopped, and a chill ran up Nathaniel's back as he listened to a weird howl that came from far behind them. It was a blood-curdling sound and his face turned a more ghastly pallor as he gazed inquiringly at Neil. His companion saw the terrible question in his face.

"Wolves," he said. "They're away back in the forest. They won't come down to us." For a moment he was silent, his eyes turned to the sea. Then he added: "Do you notice anything queer about the way you're bound to that stake, Nat?"

There was a thrilling emphasis in Nathaniel's answer. He nodded his head affirmatively, again and again.

"Your hands are tied to the post very loosely, with a slack of say six inches," continued Neil with an appalling precision. "There is a rawhide thong about your neck, wet, and so tight that it chafes your skin when you move your head. But the very uncomfortable thing just at this moment is the way your feet are fastened. Isn't that so? Your legs are drawn back, so that you are half resting on your toes, and I'm pretty sure your knees are aching right now. Eh? Well, it won't be very long before your legs will give way under you and the slack about your wrists will keep you from helping yourself. Do you know what will happen then?"

He paused and Nathaniel stared at him, partly understanding, yet giving no sign.

"You will hang upon the thong about your neck until you choke to death," finished Neil. "That's the 'Straight Death.' If the end doesn't come by morning the sun will finish the job. It will dry out the wet rawhide until it grips your throat like a hand. Poetically we call it the hand of Strang. Pleasant, isn't it?"

The grim definiteness with which he described the manner of their end added to those sensations which had already become acutely discomforting to Nathaniel. Had he possessed the use of his voice when the Mormons were leaving he would have called upon them to return and lengthen the thongs about his ankles by an inch or two. Now, with almost brutal frankness, Neil had explained to him the meaning of his strange posture. His knees began to ache. An occasional sharp pain shot up from them to his hips, and the thong about his neck, which at first he had used as a support for his chin, began to irritate him. At times he found himself resting upon it so heavily that it shortened his breath, and he was compelled to straighten himself, putting his whole weight on his twisted feet. It seemed an hour before Neil broke the terrible silence again. Perhaps it was ten minutes.

"I'm going to begin," he said. "Listen. If you hear an answer nod your head."

He drew a deep breath, turned his face as far as he could toward the shore, and shouted.

"Help—help—help!"

Again and again the thrilling words burst from his throat, and as their echoes floated back to them from the forest, like a thousand mocking voices, Nathaniel grew hot with the sweat of horror. If he could only have added his own voice to those cries, shrieked out the words with Neil—joined even unavailingly in this last fight for life, it would not have been so bad. But he was helpless. He watched the desperation grow in his companion's face as there came no response save the taunting echoes; even in the light of the stars he saw that face darken with its effort, the eyes fill with a mad light, and the throat strain against its choking thong. Gradually Neil's voice became weaker. When he stopped to rest and listen his panting breath came to Nathaniel like the hissing of steam. Soon the echoes failed to come back from the forest, and Nathaniel fought like a crazed man to free himself, jerking at the thongs that held him until his wrists were bleeding and the rawhide about his neck choked him.

Joy Shone in Her Face.

"No use!" he heard Neil say. "Better take it easy for a while, Nat!"

Marion's brother had turned toward him, his head thrown back against the stake, his face lifted to the sky. Nathaniel raised his own head, and found that he could breathe easier. For a long time his companion did not break the silence. Mentally he began counting off the seconds. It was past midnight—probably one o'clock. Dawn came at half past two, the sun rose an hour later. Three hours to live! Nathaniel lowered his head, and the rawhide tightened perceptibly at the movement. Neil was watching him. His face shone as white as the starlit sand. His mouth was partly open.

"I'm devilish sorry—for you—Nat—" he said.

His words came with painful slowness. There was a grating huskiness in his voice.

"This damned rawhide—is pinching—my Adam's apple—"

He smiled. His white teeth gleamed, his eyes laughed, and with a heart bursting with grief Nathaniel looked away from him. He had seen courage, but never like this, and deep down in his soul he prayed—prayed that death might come to him first, so that he might not have to look upon the agonies of this other, whose end would be ghastly in its fearless resignation. His own suffering had become excruciating. Sharp pains darted like red hot needles through his limbs, his back tortured him, and his head ached as though a knife had cloven the base of his skull. Still—he could breathe. By pressing his head against the post it was not difficult for him to fill his lungs with air. But the strength of his limbs was leaving him. He no longer felt any sensation in his cramped feet. His knees were numb. He measured the paralysis of death creeping up his legs inch by inch, driving the sharp pains before it, until suddenly his weight tottered under him and he hung heavily upon the thong about his throat. For a full half minute he ceased to breathe, and a feeling of ineffable relief swept over him, for during those few seconds his body was at rest. He found that by a backward contortion he could bring himself erect again, and that for a few minutes after each respite it was not so difficult for him to stand.

After a third effort he turned again toward Neil. A groan of horror rose to his imprisoned lips. His companion's face was full upon him, ghastly white; his eyes were wide and staring, like balls of shimmering glass in the starlight, and his throat was straining at the fatal rawhide! Nathaniel heard no sound, saw no stir of life in the inanimate figure.

A moaning, wordless cry broke through the cloth that gagged him.

At the sound of that cry, faint, terrifying, with all the horror that might fill a human soul in its articulate note a shudder of life passed into Neil's body. Weakly he flung himself back stood poised for an instant against the stake, then fell again upon the deadly thong. Twice—three times he made the effort, and failed. And to Nathaniel, staring wild-eyed and silent now, the spectacle was one that seemed to blast the very soul within him and send his blood in rushing torrents of fire to his sickened brain. Neil was dying! A fourth time he struggled back. A fifth—and he held his ground. Even in that passing instant something like a flash of his buoyant smile flickered in his face and there came to Nathaniel's ears like a throttled whisper—his name.

"Nat—"

And no more.

The head fell forward again. And Nathaniel, turning his face away, saw something come up out of the shimmering sea, like a shadow before his blistering eyes, and as his own limbs went out from under him and he felt the strangling death at his throat there came from that shadow a cry that seemed to snap his very heart-strings—a piercing cry and (even in his half consciousness he recognized it) a woman's cry! He flung himself back, and for a moment he saw Neil struggling, the last spark of life in him stirred by that same cry; and then across the white sand two figures flew madly toward them, and even as the hot film in his eyes grew thicker he knew that one of them was Marion and that the other was Winnsome Croche.

His heart seemed to stop beating. He strove to pull himself together, but his head fell forward. Faintly, as on a battlefield, voices came to him, and when with a superhuman effort he straightened himself for an instant he saw that Neil was no longer at the stake but was stretched on the sand, and of the two figures beside him one suddenly sprang to her feet and ran to him. And then Marion's terror-filled face was close to his own, and Marion's lips were moaning his name, and Marion's hands were slashing at the thongs that bound him. When with a great sigh of joy he crumpled down upon the earth he knew that he was slipping off into oblivion with Marion's arms about his neck, and with her lips pressing to his the sweet elixir of her love.

Darkness enshrouded him but a few moments, when a dash of cool water brought him back into light. He felt himself lowered upon the sand and after a breath or two he twisted himself on his elbow and saw that Neil's white face was held on Winnsome's breast and that Marion was running up from the shore with more water. For a space she knelt beside her brother, and then she hurried to him. Joy shone in her face. She fell upon her knees and drew his head in the hollow of her arm, crooning mad senseless words to him, and bathing his face with water, her eyes shining down upon him gloriously. Nathaniel reached up and touched her face, and she bowed her head until her hair smothered him in sweet gloom, and kissed him. He drew her lips to his own, and then she lowered him gently and stood up in the starlight, looking first at Neil and next down at him; and then she turned quickly back to the sea.

From down near the shore she called back some word, and with a shrill cry Winnsome followed her. Nathaniel struggled to his elbow, to his knees—staggered to his feet. He saw the boat drifting out into the night, and Winnsome standing alone at the water-edge, her sobbing cries of entreaty, of terror, following it unanswered. He tottered down toward her, gaining new strength at each step, but when he reached her the boat was no longer to be seen and Winnsome's face was whiter than the sands under her feet.

"She is gone—gone—" she moaned, stretching out her arms to him. "She is going—back to Strang!"

And then, from far out in the white glory of the night, there came back to him the voice of the girl he loved:

"Goodby—Goodby—"

MOCK BEEFSTEAK.

How to Make and Serve the Dish In Attractive Ways.

In these days of high prices a mock beefsteak is an acceptable substitute for the genuine one. The housekeeper should try molding her "Hamburg steak" into less commonplace forms. Often the beef is molded somewhat like an ordinary beefsteak. The platter should be prettily garnished with parsley and lemon, or it may be decorated after the manner of a "planked" steak, with a border of mashed potato and about enough baked tomatoes or stuffed green peppers to serve one to each person at the table.

Another appropriate platter decoration is easily accomplished by heaping little piles of particolored vegetables at intervals around the mock beefsteak. Potato balls, diced carrots and string beans are a favorite combination of color and transform the humble "Hamburg steak" into quite a festive dish.

Another way is to have the chopped beef shaped into the form of lamb chops, each decorated with a frill of tissue paper fastened to a toothpick. These may be made by the children of the household in the evenings, and as they cost nothing and give a decided air of daintiness to the simplest dish they are well worth while. Often these little imitation chops are arranged to stand on a bed of parsley and rest against a pretty bowl filled with stewed tomato. A spoonful of the tomato should be served with each portion. These little chops of beef may rest on a bed of mashed potatoes if preferred, or it is a pretty idea to place a baked potato between each chop just before serving, gently open each potato and place a piece of butter in the opening.

Another attractive way of serving the same dish is to place these little chops in an overlapping row on the platter, each chop decorated as before with its little paper frill. Tomato sauce or slices of broiled fresh tomato may decorate the edge of the platter.—Delineator.

The only beneficial spray mixture is the Rex Lime-sulphur. We have it all ready to dilute and apply.

The coming session of the state grange will be the most important gathering held in Michigan this winter. One of the most important things to come before the body will be the election of the officers, also four members of the executive committee in place of George B. Horton Thomas H. McNaughton, L. W. Oviatt and Morris H. Burton, whose terms expire this winter. As the recognized organization of the state's chief industry—agriculture—the eyes of the whole state will be turned to Traverse City, while the grange is in session and whatever action is taken on legislative matters will undoubtedly be heeded by the next session of the legislature which meets the next month. Between now and the assembling of the state grange every subordinate grange should carefully consider the various measures and inform its delegates so they may know the sentiment of the members in their county.

Charlevoix occupies a position of influence equal to any county and beyond a doubt will send a large delegation of visitors to Traverse City this winter, who will keep our county constantly to the front.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 opened in usual form in fourth degree. Officers nearly all present, committees on exhibits to county fair report receiving first premium on fresh fruit, canned fruit, vegetables and grain. This is the first time any one grange has taken first premium on all exhibits allowed granges. After the usual order of business was transacted one name was balloted on and one application read. Good of order, recitation, Clarence Megginson; recitation, Mary Paquette; reading, Mrs. Ingalls.

Number present, 31; visitors, 1.

Horton Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay Grange No. 833 opened in regular form with Past Master George North in the chair.

Three applications for membership were received.

During the lecturer's hour the Reds gave the following program:

Song—"My Old Kentucky Home," by the grange.

Recitation—Anna Schneider.

Recitation—Blanche Wallace.

Duet—H. H. Starmer and Ray Karcher.

Talk—"Does the County Fair Help the Farmer,"—Mr. Starmer.

Solo—Josie Stolt.

Talk—"The Use of Cement on the Farm,"—J. C. Wallace.

Duet—Ray Karcher and Lester Fox.

Several suggestions were given for the good of the order.

Grange closed in the fourth degree.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met in regular session Tuesday night with an attendance of fifty visitors being present from Marion Center and Wilson Granges.

One application for membership was received and three candidates were instructed in the mysteries of the order, the new degree team doing the work.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with music and recitations. Under good of the order a lively discussion took place on several subjects and remarks were made by Brothers Lewis of Wilson and Coulter of Marion Center.

Next meeting in two weeks.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session, October 8th. Called to order by Worthy Master Olin Smith.

Secretary read communication from Grand Traverse entertainment committee in regard to taxing each grange $2.00 towards their share of entertainment. One of the brothers suggested that the grange have a grange sale sometime in the future. Brother Shepard gave a very interesting report of the convention held at Ironton. The brothers voted to have a supper at the next meeting, October 22.

There will be a fish pond social at Wilson Grange hall Saturday, October 29th.

The Ladies' Auxiliary will meet with Sister Lottie Todd, Wednesday, October 19th.

The Lecturer's hour consisted of reading and music.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

CASE FOR CLIPPINGS.

How to Make a Classified Receptacle For Small Pieces of Paper.

If one has the "clipping habit" and does not have some regular place to keep the little pieces of paper they generally become a nuisance and are constantly in the way. And yet any girl who takes much interest in reading is sure to find something every now and then that she would like to keep.

The best way to manage the matter is to have a classified clipping case and so keep them all ready for immediate reference whenever they are wanted. Such a saving of time and energy there is in not having to hunt for what one wants on the instant. An easy way to make a clipping case is to buy some of the long legal envelopes and mark each one with a word or several words indicating some subject one is interested in and then fasten them all together.

The words should be painted or done in fancy lettering with a pen. Such subjects as "Travel," "Art," "Drama," "Music" and "Useful Suggestions" are used, but the maker can choose her own subjects, and new envelopes can be added at any time.

After the envelopes are marked two covers must be made just the same size as the envelopes. They are made of cardboard, painted or covered with brocade or embroidered linen. They are placed outside of the envelopes, and the whole thing is fastened together by cutting holes through them all near each end of the lower edge of the envelopes, the side away from the flaps, putting a ribbon through the holes and tying a bow at the back. These ribbons can at any time be pulled out and new envelopes put in either to renew torn ones or to add a new subject.

The covers of these cases are sometimes very beautiful. Some are made of handsome brocade and others of leather, with cut designs lined with satin. Any kind of elaborate embroidery may also be used.

TIP ON LETTER WRITING.

How to Get a Letter Answered by Simple Methods.

You may have occasion often to write a letter of inquiry to a stranger who is under no obligation whatever to answer your question unless he shall see fit to do so out of kindness or fellow feeling. How are you to make reasonably certain of a reply?

It is taken for granted that your inquiry is reasonable and in good taste and judgment. You have something to ask as a favor. You should make that request as simple to answer as possible. You should make your question as brief as you can.

To this end leave at the end of your written query enough space blank on which the person addressed can fill in answers fully and without formality and call his attention to the fact. Inclose with your query an envelope addressed to yourself, stamped and ready for the mails.

Here is the philosophy of the plan: Many persons are inclined to put off letter writing of any kind. They must be in the mood for it. They "owe" letters to some of their best friends. Letter writing anyhow is a bore.

But even to the person in this position a query with a blank space for answer at the bottom of the sheet, the envelope addressed and stamped, makes it doubly easy for the writer to scribble at once with lead pencil the answer, refold the sheet, put it in the envelope and post it.

Try it. You'll get results.

How to Overcome Embarrassment.

If you are so shy that it is painful, instead of trying to brazen it out or retiring into your shell go in for cultivating self forgetfulness. It is misery to be conscious of embarrassment. No one knows this better than the victim, yet often she sees no way to conquer her feelings. The only certain cure for embarrassment is self forgetfulness. There is an old saying that the one sure way to make friends is to be a friend. This may be paraphrased to read that the one way not to think too much of yourself is to fill up your thoughts with some one else. The next time you dread going into society try to recall some one of your acquaintances who is older and more awkward than you are. Determine to make her enjoy herself for one time at least. If your efforts are honest you will be surprised to find that you have been so busy in good times giving that you have forgotten to be embarrassed. The next time you are caught by your failing hunt up another buffer for your embarrassment, and before long not only will your shyness be in leash, but you will find you have become popular where before you were pitied or shunned.

HAND WITH A MISSING THUMB

It Was Important Evidence, but Came In Late.

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

William Burch was graduated at the scientific school of the —— university and became an assistant in an institution for original scientific research. Having a rich uncle, unmarried and childless, who was intending to make him his heir, he had laid out a career for himself by which he might devote his time to study and investigation.

This uncle, a Mr. Trevor, was cashier in a bank.

One morning young Burch received a note from his uncle asking him to call that afternoon at 3 o'clock. Burch called. Half an hour later he was seen to leave his uncle's house very red in the face and muttering to himself. The only person living in the house with the uncle was an old woman who took care of it. She heard Mr. Trevor say during Burch's visit:

"That's the best I can do for you."

Burch replied angrily: "You have placed me in a very trying position. Having advised me to follow a career that pays nothing and promised to back me up, you put me off with"—

Here the door was closed, and the housekeeper heard no more.

Mr. Trevor always went out to dinner—usually at his club—at 6 o'clock. Mrs. Morton, his housekeeper, noticed that he did not ride out during the afternoon of his nephew's call, and at 7 o'clock he had not gone to dinner. She went to his room, knocked and received no reply. Entering, she saw his dead body on the bed.

Running to the telephone, she called up William Burch and told him to come at once—something had happened to his uncle. Burch came and with Mrs. Morton went to his uncle's room.

He did not speak for some time, being evidently under strong emotion. Then he said:

"Mrs. Morton, who has been with my uncle this afternoon besides myself?"

"I have seen no one come or go."

On the table stood a decanter of whisky, a glass and a soda bottle in a silver holder. The dead man had been drinking some whisky and soda and had left a part of it in the glass. Burch took up the glass and examined the contents critically. Then, stooping so as to get very near the holder, he examined it closely.

EXAMINED THE CONTENTS CRITICALLY.

"When was it polished?" he asked.

"This morning. I polished all the silver this morning."

A part of the surface was blurred; the rest was bright.

"Did you handle it after polishing it?"

"Only by the bottom."

Burch put his mouth nearer the holder and breathed on it. Then, taking a little hand microscope from his vest pocket, he brought it to bear on the blurred surface.

"Um!" he said.

"Well?" said Mrs. Morton interrogatively.

"Where can I lock up this bottle holder?"

"In any of the closets. There's one on each floor."

"No. Every nook and cranny of the house will be searched."

He threw himself into a chair and thought. Mrs. Morton stood waiting. The dead body lay on the bed. Finally Burch, rising, said:

"I must risk it."

"Risk what?"

"Before reporting my uncle's death I must remove the bottle holder. Promise me that you will say nothing about it."

For the first time Mrs. Morton cast a suspicious glance at Mr. Burch.

"If I'm questioned about it I shall be obliged to tell."

"If you are questioned, yes."

Mrs. Morton gave a reluctant consent.

"Get me a pasteboard box that will hold it."

She went out of the room and presently returned with a box. Burch cut a hole in the edge enough to let through the stand of the bottle holder, by which he grasped it, using the box as a protector, so that nothing could touch the silver surface.

"Call a cab."

Mrs. Morton did as directed, and Burch, carrying the bottle holder by its stand part, left the house, promising to return soon. Within twenty minutes he was back. Then he went to the telephone, called up the police and reported that his uncle had died suddenly under very suspicious circumstances. The coroner was not long in coming and, after carefully inspecting everything in the room, went out, locking the door behind him and putting a policeman on guard.

While this was in progress William Burch was locked in his own room with a detective.

"My uncle has been poisoned," he said, "by some one whose left thumb is missing. I wish you to find that person. If you don't I shall either be executed for murder or imprisoned for life or go forth a man with a blighted reputation. I was the last person known to be with my uncle before his death. In a few days or at most a few weeks I shall be arrested.

"These are my disadvantages. On the other side, I am heir to my uncle's estate and can pay my lawyers and you well. I care nothing for them provided you succeed. Go. Find the man with the missing thumb."

In just two days from that day William Burch was arrested for the murder of his uncle, John Trevor. After the usual delay the case came to trial. Mrs. Morton was the first witness for the prosecution, and one of the first questions asked her was if there had been a holder for the soda bottle found in the deceased's room. She replied that there had been and when questioned further testified that the accused had taken it away.

This without any other evidence was enough to convict Burch. Another feature alone was also sufficient to that end, Burch was his uncle's heir. A third feature admitted by Burch himself clinched the other two. Being put on the stand by his counsel and asked what had passed between him and his uncle at their last interview, Burch said:

"My uncle sent for me to tell me that he was intending to marry. This would turn his property away from me. He proposed to make my interest in it dependent upon the will of the lady he was to marry. To this I objected."

All wondered at this admission, which indicated plainly that in order to save an estate which was to pass to another the prisoner had murdered the owner.

A witness for the defense had been summoned in the person of Edgar Whipple, a bookkeeper at the bank. At this point Burch's counsel called Whipple to the stand. He was a pale, nervous man, who seemed to be dreading the ordeal before him.

The examination of the witness developed that he had been carrying on his books a deficit of some $50,000 which he had lost in speculation. The next move of the defense was an attempt to prove that he had visited Mr. Trevor on the afternoon of the murder, that Mr. Trevor was the only person who knew of his defalcation and that the two held a conversation on that subject. All this the witness denied, and as there was no proof of it the opinion of those in the courtroom was that a mistake had been made in attempting to establish it.

Without dismissing the witness counsel for the defense gave an order to an attendant, who disappeared and returned carrying a pasteboard box, which he placed on a table before the lawyer. The cover was removed, and he lifted by its base from the box a silver bottle holder.

Every person in the courtroom bent forward with eager attention. Naturally it was inferred that this was the missing article that Miss Morton had testified the prisoner had removed. A sensation was expected, and a sensation was realized. Counsel for the defense, still holding the bottle holder by its base, carried it to the jury box, breathed on it, handed a microscope to the juryman nearest him and invited him to examine the surface. This process was repeated with every juryman. Then, carrying the holder back to the table, the lawyer set it down and said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this stand held the bottle used when the murdered man took his last drink. The soda was poured into the glass of whisky by some one who held it in his left hand, the thumb of which was missing. This person then dropped in the glass a dose of prussic acid, which has since been found there by experts. You have examined the silver surface and have found the imprint of a hand with the thumb missing. That imprint came from the moisture of the hand that grasped the silver. It dried out, but I revived it with my moist breath, that you could all see it, that you might all have proof that the person who committed the murder was a man with a missing thumb."

Then, turning to the witness, the lawyer said:

"Hold up your left hand."

Instead of obeying the order the witness fell over in a faint. He was picked up and placed on a chair, and as soon as he came to himself an officer lifted the witness' hand, the thumb of which was missing.

William Burch was acquitted, the jury not leaving their seats. He inherited a fortune from his uncle and settled a handsome annuity on the lady whom Mr. Trevor was to have married.

The man with the missing thumb died before being brought to trial.

Cross Examination.

Cross examination is the art of getting the truth out of a witness even though the truth is not in him.

A King's Pun.

The late King Edward of England was visiting Belford abbey, and one morning, in company with his host, Lord Arthur Savile, he took a walk over the preserves. Suddenly Lord Arthur, a big, burly man, rushed forward and seized a shabby fellow with a dead pheasant protruding from the breast of his coat.

"Sir," said Lord Arthur to the king, "this fellow is a bad egg. This is the second time I've caught him poaching."

But the king's handsome face beamed, and he laughed his gay and tolerant laugh.

"Oh, let him go," he said. "If he really were a bad egg, you know, he wouldn't poach."

General Dissatisfaction.

Tiny Elsbeth was taken by mother to an afternoon tea, fashionable, but where the various ladies present were well acquainted and indulged too freely in gossip. The little girlie sat very straight and still, listening to all that was said. Critical remarks were made about absent friends, and even guests who took their departure were discussed with some freedom.

Elsbeth edged closer to her mother and remarked in a solemn whisper:

Congressman Dodds, Judge Searl, Mr. McNamara and Representative Pearson are Enthusiastically Received.

The republican campaign in Charlevoix county was formally opened Monday when Hon. Francis H. Dodds, our hard working congressman, Judge Kelley S. Searl of Ithaca, and Francis McNamara of Mount Pleasant made a tour of the county. Arriving at Boyne Falls on the forenoon train from the south, they were met by E. B. Ward, R. A. Emrey, A. L. Fitch and Glenn M. DuBois of this city, who had made the trip early to meet them. After a short stop at the Falls, Hon. W. J. Pearson and Frank Pearson joined the party, the first stop being made at Clarion, where a few moments were spent in greeting the citizens, after which they pressed on to Walloon Lake, where a crowd of considerable size had gathered to greet their honored guests. Judge Searl spoke a few moments followed by Mr. Dodds, who told of some of the work of the last congress in carrying out the pledges of the national platform. After a few words by Mr. McNamara, Representative Pearson closed the meeting by reminding the voters present that the republican ticket was their ticket, nominated by them, uninfluenced by any party leader or boss. The next stop was made at Boyne City, for dinner, after which Mr. Dodds, Judge Searl, Mr. McNamara and Mr. Fitch took the boat for this city, the rest of the party coming across country.

Before evening the guests were taken for a drive around our beautiful city by Hon. R. W. Paddock which completed a day of perfect enjoyment, as an opportunity had been given them to see all our points of interests, the scenic beauties and good farming lands of the east, the manufacturing interests of Boyne City, the delightful trip up the lake and the beautiful resorts of Walloon Lake, the shores of Pine Lake and Charlevoix "the beautiful."

In the evening a good sized crowd assembled at Van Pelt hall, where Mayor Hampton introduced the speakers each of whom urged upon the voters the importance of the coming election.

Tuesday afternoon the journey was continued to East Jordan where a meeting was held in the evening. Mr. Dodds, in this trip was given a chance to see the diversified interests of this northernmost point in his large district and several were given their first opportunity to greet the man who has worked so well for them in Washington. Mr. Pearson, too, was warmly greeted as the knowledge is brought home, that both in Washington and Lansing, our interests are, and will for the two years to come be in the hands of men who have earned the reputation of being hard workers, and men of influence.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The examination for October will be held in the High School building in the Village of East Jordan on Thursday and Friday, October 20-21, beginning at 8:30 standard time.

The questions in reading will be taken from "Reading in Public Schools." This is one of the regular Reading Circle books and can be gotten of Row, Peterson & Co., Chicago, or of D. A. Wright of Lansing.

Certificates of second and third grades only will be issued from this examination.

Paper will be furnished for applicants.

Applicants who expect to have their papers forwarded to other commissioners will write with pen. Others may use pen or pencil.

ORDER EASTERN STAR

Hold Annual Meeting at Lansing—Will Meet at Jackson Next Year

The annual election of the grand chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star practically closed the forty-fourth session held at Lansing last week. The officers elected are as follows:

Grand Patron, John Rowson, Grand Rapids; associate grand patron, J. Douglass McKellar, Benton Harbor; grand matron, Mrs. Lizzie L. Harrison, Saginaw; associate grand matron, Mrs. Emma Boyce, Jackson; grand secretary, Mrs. Eva S. Goodrich, Ann Arbor; grand treasurer, Mrs. Jennie Newell, Fenton; grand conductress, Mrs. Minnie Keyes, Olivet.

The one office upon which there was a contest—associate grand conductress—was filled by Mrs. Melinda Maxon, of Portland.

It was decided to hold the next meeting of the grand chapter at Jackson.

At the close of the session last week afternoon, the grand matron announced the following appointments: Grand chaplain, Mrs. Ellen Kingsley, Osseo; Mrs. Minnie Kenyon, Marine City; organist, Mrs. Zella Worden, Petoskey, warden, Mrs. Lucille Doelle, Houghton; Adah, Mrs. Hanna Schmidt, Reed City; Ruth, Mrs. Ida Grandy, Saginaw; Martha, Mrs. Mattie Blackmer, Fowlerville; Esther, Mrs. Isa Smith, Schoolcraft; Electra, Mrs. Emma Hooper, Grand Rapids.

NOTHING TO NOTHING

Score of Game Played With Boyne City Saturday

Next Saturday the Boys Will Meet the Strong Harbor Springs Team.

The football team of the Charlevoix high school once more kept the old pennant from being trampled in the dust by playing the strong, heavy Boyne City eleven to a 0 to 0 score. It was a strongly contested game from start to finish each side putting forth its utmost strength to pull down one more victory for its respective high school. At the blow of the referee's whistle both teams trotted on the field of play and at first sight the chances to win appeared to be slightly in favor of the heavier Boyne City team. But a few minutes of play showed to all observers that if either team won the game it would be a very close score. There is no doubt that Charlevoix had a little better of the game for twice the team had a chance to score while their own goal was never in danger. Had Powers' drop kick gone a foot to the left the final score would stand 3 to 0, or if Hull's forward pass had been declared legal there is little doubt but that the game would have been Charlevoix's. As it was both teams had to leave the field content with a scoreless game.

The evening before a large mass-meeting was held in the high school room for the purpose of arousing enthusiasm for the game and it indeed was the greatest meeting of its character in the history of the school. The manner in which "Bob", Bridge handed the yells would put all the other aspirants for the honor in the shade and the the speeches were full of ginger and greatly appreciated.

Next Saturday the boys play Harbor Springs here. They play a heavier eleven and the game promises to be interesting. Come out and see it.

The line up last Saturday was:

Left tackle—Jaskru J. Papineau.
Left guard—Lyngklip.
Center—Durance.
Right guard—Kirby.
Right tackle—Gray.
Right end—Geo. Papineau.
Guard—Wallace.
Left half—Powers.

"GET TOGETHER" THE MOTTO

Of the Charlevoix County Chamber of Commerce

ORGANIZED AT MEETING TUESDAY

Supervisors and Officers of Different Boards of Commerce Members

Will Work for the Advancement of all Parts of Charlevoix County—Enthusiastic Meeting at Baker's Inn.

Tuesday night the members of boards of trade of Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix and the board of supervisors met at Baker's Inn and around the banquet table, the Charlevoix County Chamber of Commerce was formed. The active membership is composed of the officers of the different boards of commerce and the supervisors and the honorary members, the members of the different boards of commerce and kindred organizations of business men, the county officials, the members of the press, the master and secretary of Pomona and each subordinate grange and the Mayor or president of the cities and villages of the county.

The object of the organization is the promoting of the best interests of Charlevoix county.

The following officers were elected:—President, Harry Nichols, Charlevoix; first vice-president, L. H. White, Boyne City; second vice-president, R. A. Brintnall, East Jordan; secretary, Peter Collier, Boyne City; treasurer, George G. Glenn, East Jordan; vice-presidents, James Waggoner, Hudson; W. J. Gallagher, St. James; Charles H. Camburn, Evangeline; John H. Bughee, Norwood.

The banquet proper was, as in all similar functions at Baker's Inn, a delight, and after this most pleasing feature of the evening was disposed of, President Nichols of the Charlevoix board of commerce, called to order and called on D. S. Payton, director of the West Michigan Development Bureau, to state the object of the meeting. Mr. Payton eloquently told of what the bureau had accomplished for Charlevoix county and the need of organized, follow-up work. Several other speakers followed in praise of the work done by Mr. Payton and associates, and the necessity of a county organization, after which the organization was perfected as outlined above.

This is the final step in the work together movement that has been taking place between the three cities the past three years and now that the whole county is represented in one working body we must, and will, see the advantages of Charlevoix county kept constantly to the front.

THEATRICAL

W. F. Mann's newest offering is "The Fighting Parson" a four act pastoral comedy drama by John A. Preston, whose many successful plays are now touring the United States. In his "Fighting Parson" he has written his most successful, so says the dramatic critics. It's a beautiful well written, well constructed play with a plot. The comedy is bright, a bubbling over with a naturalness brought about by funny situations. The dramatic part is far superior to anything Mr. Preston has before written. This coupled with a strong city cast has made "The Fighting Parson" one big dramatic event to look forward to. Coming to the Opera House on Thursday October 20. Prices 25-35 and 50 cents.

ONE HUNDRED WERE PRESENT

At Meeting of School Officers Held Last Wednesday

WAS CONDUCTED BY DEPUTY KEELER

Several Interesting Questions Were Passed Upon

Commissioner Milford Sends Us Very Interesting Report—Meeting was Busy One all the Time.

About one hundred of the school officers of the county responded to the call of the Department and assembled at the Court house in Charlevoix on last Wednesday.

Superintendent Wright was scheduled for this meeting but was forced to change places with Deputy Keeler, Mr. Wright going to Petoskey in order that he might reach his engagement in the Upper Peninsula on the following day.

The meeting was called to order at 10:00 A. M. and from that time until 3:00 P. M. there was a busy time in the Court House.

The officers were not backward about asking questions and Mr. Keeler showed himself to be well up in the matter of school law.

The officers proved themselves to be well informed so far as the general and older laws of the state are concerned and turned their attention to a better understanding of the workings of some of the later laws.

Their questions were well selected and brought out many interesting points.

The matter of the paying of tuition to high schools was thoroughly discussed.

An eighth grade diploma from the state examination has not been required this year in order that a student may have his tuition paid but it was the intention of the law that he should have one and by another year the diploma will be required.

Mr. Keeler says unless the parents of the pupil have made the required application for tuition the board cannot legally pay the tuition and that if the application is made they cannot refuse to pay it.

The tuition is paid by the district board to the school board of the high school and not to the pupil or his parents.

If the parents of the pupil whose tuition is to be paid are paying a school tax in the district where the high school is located the amount of school tax paid in said district will be deducted from the amount of tuition to be paid by the rural district.

In other words the district is simply taking the place of the parent in the matter of tuition.

If the direction of Mr. Keeler is followed and a technical application of the law is made it will be necessary that a number of districts in the county shall elect new officers. The reason for this is that a member of the town board cannot legally be a member of the school board and Mr. Keeler tells us that the last office accepted vacates the first one accepted.

A legal voter is a person who is 21 years old, a citizen of the district in which he offers to vote and who owns in his own right or by contract some property or is the parent or guardian of children of school age.

A young man who is 21 and native born cannot legally vote at a school meeting unless he can qualify in other respects.

The truancy law came in for its share of the discussion but this law is now pretty generally understood and school officers in general are helping to make it operative.

Mr. Keeler explained to the officers that the Department had authority and in some instances had ordered investigations regarding the sale keeping of school funds and that the one who was doing the investigating had authority to count the money of the district.

In the matter of a school library a district may vote to establish one even if they do not vote money for it and the fact that they have voted to establish one will entitle them to a share in the penal fines of the county.

Surely every district in the county will now vote to establish a library.

Officers were urged to look carefully into the sanitary conditions and to the heating and lighting of buildings.

A matter of ten to twenty dollars judiciously expended in the average school house will make the school life of the pupils very much more enjoyable and beneficial as well.

Many other interesting things were discussed and Mr. Keeler was busy all the time and we are sure that the officers present enjoyed the day and felt that the meeting was a valuable one.

WAR IS DECLARED

Between Anti-Saloon League and Druggists Association

Latter Will Ask Legislature for Several Changes in Liquor Law

War has been declared between the Michigan Retail Druggests' association and the Michigan Anti-Saloon league. The break came at the state convention at Kalamazoo when the association refused to consider a single request of the league in the proposed changes in the state liquor law for druggists.

Immediately following the conference between the anti-saloonists and druggists the latter adopted a resolution asking for the following changes in the state law:

Liquor to be sold to customers only on a sworn statement from a customer that he needs it for medicinal purposes. Making a false statement in the affidavit punishable in the same manner as forgery.

No responsibility on the druggist when a clerk sells liquor illegally.

A list of all posted drunkards must be furnished each druggist.

A requirement that all county clerks must furnish druggists with blanks for recording liquor sales.

The proposed changes in the law were adopted for local option counties only.

The Anti-Saloon league, as represented by Attorney Pliny Marsh and Rev. E. N. Holsaple, desired that practically no changes be asked, these men regarding the Dickinson law as just and fair.

Lee M. Hutchins of Grand Rapids made a striking speech in which he said: "The druggists have been on the defensive long enough. We have been, being like a pack of scared cats. No more of this whining for favors; let us insist on our rights."

The point in the controversy between the druggists and the anti saloon interests was the provision in the law which makes sales possible only on a physician's prescription. This arrangement is said to furnish no protection to the druggist, who can be prosecuted for the sale if it is to a drunkard although he has a prescription from a doctor. The association declared that such an arrangement was unfair and recommended the legislature to abolish the provision. The responsibility should be on the purchaser, think the druggists.

IS MILLION DOLLAR CORPORATION

Standard Cement & Lime Company of Charlevoix Michigan

SUCCESSFUL MEN ARE BEHIND IT

The Most Natural Place for the Manufacture of Cement in Country

Supply of Material Will Last Five Hundred Years, Work Which Has Been Accomplished During Past Summer.

We are able to give our readers something this week in regard to the cement factory which will open their eyes to the fact that big enterprises are constantly being pushed to the front quietly when the right men are behind them and the opportunity exists. The Standard Cement & Lime Company is capitalized at one million dollars and is officered by men who are among the strongest in the state, men who have always been successful in all their undertakings. They are president, Fred H. Aldrich, Detroit; secretary-treasurer, E. L. Buell, Detroit; vice-president, H. E. Hunt, Coldwater; assistant treasurer, Geo. W. Crouter, Charlevoix; consulting engineer, Julius Soper, Detroit.

These are the men back of the enterprise. Now of the opportunity. The company has over five hundred acres on the shores of Lake Michigan which has been proven by all tests, as well as actual use, to be the best lime stone in Michigan and not excelled by any other stone in the entir country. In addition they have an abundance of shale which is an important ingredient in the manufacture of cement. The figures of the engineers show that the company has a supply of both stone and cement to last five hundred years which is easily obtainable as it is not necessary to go down more than fifty-four feet.

The plant of the company is located directly on Lake Michigan and an ideal harbor is provided for and freight rates, the largest item of expense, are reduced to a minimum.

An enterprise of this magnitude requires considerable time, but Engineer Sloan, and assistants have accomplished wonders during the past summer. On previous visits we have kept our readers informed in regard to the progress of the work. The company now has the plant for the manufacture of hydrated lime completed and will be ready to run as soon as the separator arrives which will be shipped next Monday. This plant has a capacity of three hundred twenty barrels per day and will soon double this capacity. Tuesday the work of grading and the distributing was completed and the track will be laid within ten days after starting. Cement mill, with a capacity of twelve hundred and fifty barrels per day will be in operation within a few months. A large stone crushing plant of over seventeen hundred tons capacity, every ten hours is being erected, which will supply the highest grade of sugar stone as well as crushed stone for highway purposes. The big crusher which will require four cars to handle, will be shipped Saturday and the Pere Marquette officials have guaranteed to have the track in in time to handle it on its arrival. Everything connected with the plant is on a plan which will keep the cost of production to the lowest possible point, everything being done by machinery that can be, and the most modern methods will be utilized.

The bonds of the company are fast being taken by shrewd investors as seldom is a more profitable investment offered.

The Mystery

"Taint me," says the farmer,
"Who's getting the stuff."
"Taint me," says the packer,
"I get just enough
To pay a small profit,
As far as can be."
And all of them chorus
Together, "Tain't me,"
"Tain't me," says the tanner,
"Who gets the high prices
For high shoes and low ones,
For slippers and ties."
"Tain't me," says the rancher
"I live and that's all."
"Tain't me," says the dealer,
"My profits are small."
"Tain't me," says the huckster,
"Who's bracing the game."
"Taint me," says the gardner,
"I'm poor all the time."
"Tain't me," says the grocer,
"I ain't seen a dime"
It's surely a puzzle
To know where it goes;
No maker or seller
Or any of those
Partake in the high prices,
So they all agree;
And I'm a consumer,
I'm certain 'tain't me."

What Will Become of Our Children?

Wrung from the lips of the mother of men,
Charged with the anguish no other may ken,
Rises the heart cry of Rachel again,
What will become of the children?

Drink-shadowed firesides of village and farm
Summon the guards of the hearth-stone to arm,
Lifting to heaven the cry of alarm,
What will become of our children?

Down in the hell of the city retreat
Voiced in the jargons of alley and street,
Rum-ridden millions the question repeat,
What will become of our children?

Born in the wedlock of passion and drink,
Sin-set and sick ere they learn how to think,
Damned to defeat from the cradle's white brink,
What will become of our children?

Slaving for sustenance others should earn,
Buying with blood what the dram-shop will burn,
Robbed of their birthright to play and to learn,
What will become of our children?

Trembled, the far-visioned prophets of state,
Ask themselves, How can the nation grow great?
Ask, as they scan the red records of fate,
What will become of the children?

Herod still slays—and in hovel and hall
Poor little brothers of Bethlehem fall;
While from His manger Christ challenges all,
What will become of our children?

Answer, O land on which heaven has smiled!
Answer, O church of the Bethlehem Child!
Speak! if the Rum-Beast is left to run wild
What will become of our children?

Gird thee, O church! and arouse thee O state!
Else be the woe of the millstone thy fate!
Banish the Beast! Let the glad years relate
What will become of our children?

Neighborhood Notes

The program of the fifty-eight annual meeting of the Michigan State Teachers' Association, which is to be held at Bay City, October 27 and 28, 1910 has for its general theme the moral and physical well-being of the child. We note that the list of speakers contains the names of some of the most prominent educators and speakers of the day. Dr. Luther H. Gulick, of New York City, is to discuss "The New Attitude Toward Health" and "Fresh Air." The annual president's address will be delivered by Supt. E. C. Warriner, of Saginaw. Other names and topics are: Rev. Newell Dwight Hills, pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, N. Y., "The America of Today and Tomorrow"; President John W. Cook, of the Northern Illinois State Normal School, "Recent Tendencies in Education"; Professor Charles Hughes Johnson, Dean of the School of Education, University of Kansas, "The Moral Mission of Public Schools"; Commander Robert E. Peary, "The Discovery of the North Pole" Illustrated with stereopticon views"; Professor P. P. Claxton, Head of the Department of Education, University of Tennessee, "Education, and Peace." The various sections are: college, commissioners, education of the deaf, drawing, grammar shool, kindergarten, library, manual training, music, primary school, rural school and ward school principles. The program of these sections, in the main, is devoted to the special problems of the various departments of the public schools. Altogether it would seem that the educational field is covered in such a comprehensive way that it will be of decided advantage to any teacher to attend.

Backache is only a simple thing at first;
But when you know 'tis from the kidneys;
That serious kidney trouble follow;
That diabetes, Bright's disease may be the fatal end.
You will gladly profit by the following experience.
'Tis the honest statement of a sufferer who was cured.

Mrs. M. A. Graves, 618 Waukazoo avenue, Petoskey, Mich., says: "Kidney complaint bothered me constantly for years and nothing brought relief until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. This preparation disposed of the pains in my side and loins and also removed other symptoms of kidney complaint that had annoyed me. I am a firm believer in the merits of Doan's Kidney Pills."

Mrs. Graves gave the above testimonial in August 1907 and when interviewed in July 29, 1910, she added: "I can still recommend Doans Kidney Pills in the highest terms. The testimonial I gave for publication in 1907 is some years ago still holds good."

CHAPTER XII.

Marion Freed From Bondage.

"Gone!" moaned Winnsome again. "She has gone back—to—Strang!"

Neil was crawling to them like a wounded animal across the sand.

She started toward him but Nathaniel stopped her.

"She is the king's—wife—"

His throat was swollen so that he could hardly speak.

"No. They are to be married tonight. Oh, I thought she was going to stay!" She tore herself away from him to go to Neil, who had fallen upon his face exhausted, a dozen yards away.

In the wet sand, where the incoming waves lapped his hands and feet, Nathaniel sank down, his eyes staring out into the shimmering distance where Marion had gone. His brain was in a daze, and he wondered if he had been stricken by some strange madness—if this all was but some passing phantasm that would soon leave him again to his misery and his despair. But the dash of the cold water against him cleared away his doubt. Marion had come to him. She had saved him from death. And now she was gone.

And she was not the king's wife!

He staggered to his feet again and plunged into the lake until the water reached to his waist, calling her name, entreating her in weak, half choked cries to come back to him. The water soaked through to his hot, numb body, restoring his reason and strength, and he buried his face in it and drank like one who had been near to dying of thirst. Then he returned to Neil. Winnsome was holding his head in her arms.

He dropped upon his knees beside them and saw that life was returning full and strong in Neil's face.

"You will be able to walk in a few minutes," he said. "You and Winnsome must leave here. We are on the mainland and if you follow the shore northward you will come to the settlements. I am going back for Marion."

Neil made an effort to follow him as he rose to his feet.

"Nat—Nat—wait—"

Winnsome held him back, frightened, tightening her arms about him.

"You must go with Winnsome," urged Nathaniel, seizing the hand that Neil stretched up to him. "You must take her to the first settlement up the coast, I will come back to you with Marion."

He spoke confidently, as a man who sees his way open clearly before him and yet as he turned, half running, to the low black shadow of the distant forest he knew that he was beginning a blind fight against fate. If he could find a hunter's cabin, a fisherman's shanty—a boat.

Barely had he disappeared when a voice called to him. It was Winnsome. The girl ran up to him holding something in her hand. It was a pistol. "You may need it!" she exclaimed. "We brought two!"

Nathaniel reached out hesitatingly but not to take the weapon. Gently as though his touch was about to fall upon some fragile flower, he drew the girl to him, took her beautiful face between his two strong hands and gazed steadily and silently for a moment into her eyes.

"God bless you, little Winnsome!" he whispered. "I hope that some day you will—forgive me."

The girl understood him.

"If I have anything to forgive—you are forgiven."

The pistol dropped upon the sand her hands stole to his shoulders.

"I want you to take something to Marion for me," she whispered softly. "This!"

And she kissed him.

Her eyes shone upon him like a benediction.

"You have given me a new life, you have given me—Neil! My prayers are with you."

And kissing him again, she slipped away from under his hands before he could speak.

And Nathaniel, following her with his eyes until he could no longer see her, picked up the pistol and set off again toward the forest, the touch of her lips and the prayers of this girl whose father he had slain filling him with something that was more than strength, more than hope. Life had been given to him again, strong, fighting fire, and with it and Winnsome's words there returned his old confidence, his old daring. There was everything for him to win now. His doubts and his fears had been swept away. Marion was not dead, she was not the king's wife—and it was not of another that he had accepted proof of her love for him, for he had felt the pressure of her arms about his neck and the warmth of her lips upon his face. He had until night and the dawn was just beginning to break. Ten or fifteen miles to the north there were settlements, and between there were scores of settlers' shacks and fishermen's shanties. Surely within an hour or two he would find a boat.

He turned where the edge of the forest met the sand and set off at a slow steady trot into the north. If he could reach a boat soon he might overtake Marion in safety. He thought she had him, and urged him to greater speed. As the stars faded away in the dawn he saw the dark barrier of the forest drifting away, and later, when the light broke more clearly, there stretched out ahead of him mile upon mile of desert dunes. As far as he could see there was no hope of life. He slowed his steps now, for he would need to preserve his strength. Yet he experienced no fear, no loss of confidence. Each moment added to his faith in himself. Before noon he would be on his way to the Mormon kingdom, by nightfall he would be upon its shores. After that—

He examined the pistol that Winnsome had given him. There were five shots in it and he smiled joyously as he saw that it had been loaded by an experienced hand. It would be easy enough for him to find Strang. He would not consider the woman—his wife. The king's wife! Like a flash there occurred to him the incident of the battlefield. Was it this woman—the woman who had begged him to spare the life of the prophet who had knelt beside him, and whispered in his ear and kissed him? Had that been her reward for the sacrifice she believed he had made for her in the castle chamber? The thought of this woman, whose beauty and love breathed the sweet purity of a flower and whose faith in her king and master was still unbroken even in her hour of repudiation fell upon him heavily. For there was no choice, no shadow of alternative. There was but one way for him to break the bondage of the girl he loved.

For hours he trod steadily through the sand. The sun rose above him, hot and blistering, and the dunes still stretched out ahead of him, like windows and hills and mountains of glittering glass. Gradually the desert became narrower. Far ahead he could see where the forest came down to the shore and his heart grew lighter. Half an hour later he entered the margin of trees. Almost immediately he found signs of life. A tree had been felled and cut into wood. A short distance beyond he came suddenly upon a narrow path, beaten hard by the passing of feet, and leading toward the lake. He had meant to rest under the shade of these trees, but now he forgot his fatigue. For a moment he hesitated. Far back, in the forest he heard the barking of a dog—but he turned in the opposite direction. If there was a boat the path would take him to it. Through a break in the trees he caught the green sweep of marsh rice and his heart beat excitedly with hope. Where there was rice there were wild fowl, and surely where there were wild fowl there would be a punt or a canoe! In his eagerness he ran, and where the path ended, the flags and rice beaten into the mud and water, he stopped with an exultant cry. At his feet was a canoe. It was wet, as though just drawn out of the water, and a freshly used paddle was lying across the bow. Pausing but to take a quick and cautious glance about him, he shoved the frail craft into the lake and with a few quiet strokes buried himself in the rice grass. When he emerged from it he was half a mile from the shore.

For a long time he sat motionless, looking out over the slumbering sea. Far to the south and west he could make out the dim outline of Beaver Island, while over the trail he had come, mile upon mile, lay the glistening dunes. Somewhere between the white desert sand and that distant coast of the Mormon kingdom Marion was making her way back to bondage. Nathaniel had given up all hope of overtaking her now. Long before he could intercept her she would have reached the island. When he started again he paddled slowly, and laid out for himself the plan that he was to follow. There must be no mistake this time, no error in judgment, no rashness in his daring. He would lie in hiding until dusk, and then under cover of darkness he would hunt down Strang and kill him. After that he would fly to his canoe and escape. A little later, perhaps that very night if fate played the game well for him, he would return for Marion. And yet, as he went over and over his scheme, whipping himself into coolness into cool deliberation—there burned in his blood a fire that once or twice made him set his teeth hard, a fire that defied extinction, that smoldered only to await the breath that would fan it into fierce blaze—it was the fire that had urged him into the presence of the whole Mormon host, that had sent him single handed to invade the king's castle, that had hurled him into the hopeless battle upon the shore. He swore at himself softly, laughingly, as he paddled steadily toward Beaver Island.

The sun rose high straight and hot over his head, to pitch more slowly and tested more to the west, as it descended upon the west, but still lacked two hours of sinking behind the island forest when the wilderness of the story came within his vision. He had meant to hold out to sea until the approach of evening, but chance and his mind and tireless arms decided the matter for him. ONE thing the voters of Charlevoix County should keep in mind is the importance of returning Hon. William J. Pearson to the state house of representatives. The editor of this paper is acquainted with several members of the legislature and every one of them has expressed their opinion that Mr. Pearson made a record in the last house which has never been excelled by a first termer, a record as a man who was always found at his post of duty and whose opinions, when expressed, were the result of careful study which made him familiar with his subject and carried weight with his committees. Having earned that reputation, as sure as the sun will set, just as sure is it that when the next house of representatives is organized the the name of Pearson will be found on the most important committees where the real work of legislation is accomplished. The various problems which will come before the next legislature are important ones. We know where Pearson stands, his record is before us. With which political party would Mr. McCuistion affiliate if elected? For whom would he cast his vote for U. S. Senator, Townsend, Wainship, Taylor or the candidate of the Charlevoix County Labor party? Has he given the great question of mining taxation a careful study and how does he hold any opinion on the subject? Does he believe in direct nominations and will he vote for a simplification of the present law? These are the things we want to know. These are the things we are entitled to know when a candidate goes before the people, without either a record of past service or the record of the party whose candidate he may be. We can't send men to Lansing simply because somebody says they are good fellows and good citizens as we believe Mr. McCuistion is.

IN THE court house are three officials who are asking for re-election, County Clerk Payton, Treasurer Lewis and Register of Deeds Emrey. Does anybody know of some reason why they should not be returned? We have failed to hear a single reason. Even the leaders of the Labor party, themselves, admit that here in this city where everybody is familiar with the faithful, efficient service which they are giving the people, they fail to find anybody who can say aught against the manner in which the county's business is transacted. County Clerk Payton is recognized all over Michigan as one of the most efficient clerks in the state, Treasurer Lewis needs no recommendation to the people of Charlevoix county. The record of the vote which he has received at every election where he has asked the suffrages of his fellow citizens tells how he is regarded. Do you want a new man in the office of register of deeds? Mr. Emrey is perfectly familiar with the work of the office and the description of lands. The officers in the court house have been faithful servants. No man can say otherwise. Economy, justice and business horse sense says they should be returned as they will if you go to the polls and influence your neighbor to do the same.

ARE STILL GRINDING

Proceedings of Board of Supervisors Since Last Issue

Officers are Elected—Improvements on the County House—Appropriations for Fair and Grange

The supervisors are still busy at work as we go to press this week with a good prospect of remaining the rest of the week. Since our last issue the board has allowed claims amounting to $8,631.69.

The Soldier and Sailor commission reported expenditures of $158.07.

The committee on Equalization reported the assessed valuation of the county to be $6,470,981.

The sum of $547 was appropriated for the benefit of the Agricultural society and $100 for the Pomona grange exhibit committee.

Election of officers resulted as follows:

Superintendent of the Poor, Fred Smith of Hayes.

Member Board of School Examiners, I. M. DeVoe Charlevoix.

Board of County Canvassers, A. B. Nicholas Jr., East Jordan; G. Ellsworth Dutton, Charlevoix; C. C. Barnett, Boyne City.

The Superintendents of the Poor were instructed to wire the county house for electric lights, make water connections and finish up the rest of the rooms.

LETTER FROM JOHN NORDRUM

Tells of the Progress of Charlevoix Fisherman in Gloucester

The following is a copy of a letter received from John Nordrum, Gloucester, dated October 12:

"We reived your letter a few days ago. We are all well. In regard to fishing, it dosen't look very good yet, there are too many dog fish. We set the first on Monday the third and lifted on the fourth, had 375 pounds of good fish, the rest we had were all dog fish; the boat was loaded with them, out of five boxes of nets. Set again Monday and lifted Tuesday and had 250 pounds of good fish, had lots of dog fish, not quite as many as the first time, out of three boxes of nets. The Weasel (Darling boat) lifted today and had 300 pound good fish, twenty-six dog fish out of three boxes of nets, but had lots nets on the shoal, he took his nets home as he could not set on side for the dog fish. In about eight days I think it will look better. The rest of the boats had about the same. Our furniture is here, just arrived this morning so we are not moved it yet. Let us know how the fishing is up there.

Why Your Rubbers Wear Out So Quickly.

In the northern latitudes for six months of each year, the health of the population is dependent to a very great degree on proper protection against dampness, snow, slush or mud.

No other article of wearing apparel is subjected to such constant wearing use nor is so much abused or given so little attention as are the rubbers worn by the average man or woman.

Sometimes the rubbers are filled over a shoe, the heel of which is worn down on one side; this will invariably break the heel of the rubber, a shoe that has a flat-iron shaped sole with sharp corners will punch a hole in the side of a ladies' light rubber in short order; again they are often placed near a hot stove, steam radiator or furnace register to dry out or warm up; this not only disintegrates the rubber, but it softens the rubber cement that holds the parts together, separates the lining from the rubber, hastening the end of the rubber's usefulness. Rubber footwear should be kept away from the heat, and should be stored when not in use in a cool, dry place.

There are a hundred different ways for shortening the service of a pair of rubbers, and the average boy or healthy girl manages to utilize ninety-nine of them to the dismay of their parents and very often to the discomfiture of the dealer, who is frequently held responsible for what is really the result of a boy's strenuous and thoughtless activity.

"The Fighting Parson" will be at the Opera House, October 29. 41tf

AUTOMOBILE LICENSES

It is Proposed to Put Money Received for, in Good Roads' Fund.

Approximately $63,000 has been received by the state this year from the sale of licenses and tags, and on these sales the state nets a profit of better than $55,000. This work is handled in Secretary of State F. C. Martindale's department.

About 43,000 licenses of which about 3,000 are plates, which are sold to manufacturers of automobiles in the state, to be used on cars used for demonstrating purposes, have been received.

The state sells these licenses at $10 per pair which gives the state a nice profit. Under the old law the state simply furnished the license and the owner could purchase a number plate wherever he pleased but this method proved very unsatisfactory on account of the uniformity in color and size of the plates used. Now the plates are furnished at the same time the license is issued.

The money divided from the sale of the tags is put into the general fund and distributed to the various departments afterwards, but is seriously being talked of drafting a bill to present to the next legislature whereby this additional money received from the sale of automobile licenses and number plates be placed in the highway fund of the state and use to better the condition of the roads.

The number plates for the year 1910 were black letters on a white background but the plates for 1911 will be just the reverse, a black background with white letters. This change is brought about by the department to further assist the police officer of the state in running down offenders who do not purchase a license every year.

old councilor drew a pistol and fired point blank in the sheriff's back. In another instant the two men behind had fired and Obadiah fell forward upon his face.

With a yell of rage Nathaniel leaped from the door. He heard Marion cry out his name, but his fighting blood was stirred and he did not stop. Obadiah had given up his life for him, for Marion, and he was mad with a desire to wreak vengeance upon the murderers. The first man lay where he had fallen, with Obadiah's bullet through his back. The other two fired again as Nathaniel rushed down upon them. He heard the zip of one of the balls, which came so close that it stung his cheek.

"Take that!" he cried.

He fired, still running—once, twice three times and one of the two men crumpled down as though a powerful blow had broken his legs under him.

The other two turned into the path and ran. Nathaniel caught a glimpse of a frightened, boyish face, and something of mercy prompted him to hold the shot he was about to send through his lungs.

"Stop!" he shouted. "Stop!"

He aimed at the fugitive's legs and fired.

"Stop!"

The boyish sheriff was lengthening the distance between them and Nathaniel halted to make sure of his last bull. He was about to shoot when there came a sharp command from down the path and a file of men burst into view, running at double quick. He saw the flash of a saber, the gleam of brass buttons, the blue glare of the setting sun on leveled carbines, and he stopped, shoulder to shoulder with the man he had been pursuing. For a moment he stared as the man with the naked saber approached. Then he sprang toward him with a joyful cry of recognition.

"My God, Sherly—Sherly—"

He stood with his arms stretched out, his naked chest heaving.

"Sherly—Lieutenant Sherly don't you know me?"

The officer had dropped the point of his saber. He advanced a step, his face filled with astonishment.

"Land!" he cried incredulously. "Is it you?"

For the moment Nathaniel could only wring the officer's hand. He tried to speak but his words choked him.

"I told you in Chicago that I was going to blow up this damned island—if you wouldn't do it for me—" he gasped at last. "I've had—a hell of a time—"

"You look it!" laughed the lieutenant. "We got our orders the second day after you left to 'Arrest Strang and break up the Mormon kingdom! We've got Strang aboard the Michigan—but he's dead."

"Dead!"

"He was shot in the back by one of his own men as we were bringing it up the gangway. The fellow who killed him has given himself up, and says that he did it because Strang had him publicly whipped day before yesterday. I'm up here hunting for a man named Obadiah Price. Do you know—"

"What do you want with Obadiah Price?"

"The president of the United States wants him. That's all I know. Where is he?"

"Back there—dead or very badly wounded! We've just had a fight with the king's men—"

The lieutenant broke in with a sharp command to his men.

"Quick, lead us to him, Captain Plum! If he's not dead—"

He started off at a half run beside Nathaniel.

"Lord, it's a pretty mess if he is!" he added breathlessly. Without pausing he called back over his shoulder: "Regan, fall out and return to the ship. Tell the captain that Obadiah Price is badly wounded and that we want the surgeon on the run."

A turn in the path brought them to the opening where the fight had occurred. Marion was on her knees beside the old councilor.

Nathaniel hurried ahead of the lieutenant and his men. The girl glanced up at him and his heart filled with dread at the terror in her eyes.

"Is he dead?"

"No—but—" Her voice trembled with tears.

Nathaniel did not let her finish. Gently he raised her to her feet as the lieutenant came up.

"You must go to the cabin, sweetheart," he whispered.

Even in this moment of excitement and exultation his great love drove all else from his eyes and the blood surged into Marion's pale cheeks as she felt his arm about her. He led her to the door and left her for a moment in his stead.

Strang is dead, he told her in a few words. He had suspected and he went back to the door leaving her unconscious.

"If he is dying—you will tell me—" she called after him.

"Yes, yes, I will tell you."

He ran back into the opening.

The lieutenant had doubled his coat under Obadiah's head and his face was pale as he looked up at Nathaniel. The latter saw in his eyes what his lips kept silent. The officer held something in his hand. It was the mysterious package which Captain Plum had taken his oath to deliver to the president of the United States.

"I don't dare move until the surgeon comes," said the lieutenant. "He wants to speak to you. I believe, if he has anything to say you had better hear it now."

His last words were in a whisper so low that Nathaniel scarcely heard them. As the lieutenant rose to his feet, he whispered again:

"He is dying!"

Obadiah's eyes opened as Nathaniel knelt beside him and from between his thin lips there came faintly the old, gurgling chuckle.

"Nat!" he breathed. His thin hand sought his companion's and clung to it tightly. "We have won. The vengeance of God—has come!"

In these last moments all madness had left the eyes of Obadiah Price.

"I want to tell you—" he whispered, and Nathaniel bent low. "I have given him the package. It is evidence I have gathered—all these years—to destroy the Mormon kingdom."

He tried to turn his head.

"Marion—" he whispered wistfully.

"She will come," said Nathaniel. "I will call her."

"No—not yet."

Obadiah's fingers tightened about Captain Plum's.

"I want to tell—you."

For a few moments he seemed struggling to command all his strength.

"A good many years ago," he said, as if speaking to himself, "I loved a girl—like Marion, and she loved me—as Marion loves you. Her people were Mormons, and they went to Kirtland—and I followed them. We planned to escape and go east, for my Jean was good and beautiful, and hated the Mormons as I hated them. But they caught us and — thought — they — killed—"

The old man's lips twitched and a convulsive shudder shook his body.

"When everything came back to me I was older—much older," he went on. "My hair was white. I was like an old man. My people had found me and they told me that I had been mad for three years. Nat—mad—mad—mad! and that a great surgeon had operated on my head, where they struck me—and brought me back to reason. Nat—Nat—" He strained to raise himself, gasping excitedly: "God! I was like you then, Nat! I went back to fight for my Jean. She was gone. Nobody knew me, for I was an old man. I hunted from settlement to settlement. In my madness I became a Mormon, for vengeance—in hope of finding her. I was rich, and I became powerful. I was made an elder because of my gold. Then I found—"

A moan trembled on the old man's lips.

"—they had forced her to marry—the son of a Mormon—"

He stopped, and for a moment his eyes seemed filling with the glazed shadows of death. He roused himself almost fiercely.

"But he loved my Jean, Nat—he loved her as I loved her—and he was a good man!" he whispered shrilly. "Quick—quick—I must tell you—they had tried to escape from Missouri and the Danites killed him—and Joseph Smith wanted Jean and at the last moment she killed herself to save her honor—as—Marion was going to do—and she left—"

He coughed and blood flecked his lips.

"She left—Marion and Neil?"

He sank back, ashen white and still and with a cry Nathaniel turned to the lieutenant. The officer ran forward with a flask in his hand.

"Give him this!"

The touch of liquor to Obadiah's lips revived him. He whispered weakly:

"The children, Nat—I tried to find them—and years after—I did—in Nauvoo. The man and woman who had killed the father in their own house had taken them and were raising them as their own. I went mad! Vengeance—vengeance—I lived for it year after year. I wanted the children—but if I took them all would be lost. I followed them, watched them, loved them—and they loved me. I would wait—wait—until my vengeance would fall like the hand of God, and then I would free them, and tell them how beautiful their mother was. When Joseph Smith was killed and the split came the old folks followed Strang—and I—I, too—"

He rested a moment, breathing heavily.

"I brought my Jean with me and buried her up there on the hill—the middle grave, Nat, the middle grave—Marion's mother."

Nathaniel pressed the liquor to the old man's lips again.

"My vengeance was at hand—I was almost ready—when Strang learned a part of the secret," he continued with an effort. "He found the old people were murderers. When Marion would not become his wife he told her what they had done. He showed her the evidence. He threatened them with death unless Marion became his wife. His sheriff watched them night and day. He manned the deck of the steamer—unless Marion yielded to him. And to save them Jean disclosed the facts—to keep the terrible knowledge of their crime from Neil. Marion who loves—as Jean loved—"

He stopped. His breath was coming in short gasps.

Obadiah's dimming eyes gazed at him steadily.

"I thought my vengeance would come—in time—to save her, Nat. But it failed. I knew of one other way and when all seemed lost—I took it. I killed the old people—the murderers of her father—of my Jean! I knew that would destroy Strang's power—"

In a sudden spasm of strength he lifted his head. His voice came in a hoarse, excited whisper.

"You won't tell Marion—you won't tell Marion that I killed them—"

"No—never."

Obadiah fell back with a relieved sigh. After a moment he added.

"In a chest in the cabin there is a letter for Marion. It tells her about her mother—and the gold there—is for her—and Neil—"

His eyes closed. A shudder passed through his form.

"Marion—" he breathed. "Marion!"

Nathaniel rose to his feet and ran to the cabin door.

"Marion!" he called.

Blinding tears shut out the vision of the girl from his eyes. He pointed, looking from her, and she, knowing what he meant, sped past him to the old councilor.

In the great low room in which Obadiah Price had spent so many years planning his vengeance Captain Plum waited.

After a time, the girl came back.

There was great pain in her voice as she stretched out her arms to him blindly, sobbing his name.

"Gone—gone—they're all gone now—but Neil!"

Nathaniel held out his arms.

"Only Neil,"—he cried, "only Neil—Marion—?"

"And you—you—you—"

Her arms were around his neck, he held her, throbbing against his breast.

"And you—"

She raised her face, glorious in its love.

"If you want me—still."

And he whispered:

"For ever and for ever!"

THE END.

Work of Ingenious Ants.

The spinning ant is found in India, in Ceylon, in the islands of Malacca and in Australia. This ant weaves its nest between two leaves of a tree, preferably the mango. It begins to build, or to weave, by drawing two leaves together. To do this it runs a line of its working material—material similar to the spider's thread—the length of the leaf and around it. While at work it clings to the leaf with its nails and, at the same time, draws on the leaf nearest to it with its mandibles. Sometimes the two leaves suitable for nest building are too far apart. Then the builder calls in its fellow-ants and they help it to form a chain. Each ant clings to the waist of its neighbor by its mandibles. Thus enchained, they work to build the nest of their comrade.—Harper's Weekly.

Pleasant Old-Time Custom.

Leopold van Wedels a Pomeranian noble, who made a journey through England and Scotland in the years 1584 and 1585, enjoyed the old kissing custom of that time. He related that one Alexander Hum, at North Berwick, treated him "splendidly" and that "Hume's wife and young damosel shook hands and kissed us, as is the way there." Nor was the salutation perfunctory in character, for Nicander Nucius, who was in England in 1545, wrote in reference to the custom: "Not only do those who are of the same family kiss the ladies on the mouth with embraces, but even those who have never seen them."

Harvard College.

This celebrated institution is pleasantly situated in the harbroom of Parker's in School street and has poopil from all over the country. I had a letter yesterday, by the way, from our nocturnal son, Artemus, Jr., who is at Bowdoin College, in Maine. He writes me that he is a Powdoin Arab, & is it cum to this? Is this boy as I nurtured with a parent's care into his childhood's hour—is he goin' to be a grate American humorist? Alars, I fear it is too troo. Why didn't I bind him out to the Patent Travelin Vegetable Pil Man, as was struck with his appearance at our last county fair, & wanted him to go with him and be a Pillist? Ar, these boys—they little know how the old folks worrit about 'em.—From Life's Reprint from Artemus Ward.

Real Lover of Birds.

Miss Irene Osgood, an American woman living at Northampton, Eng., has what is said to be the only bird hotel in the world. When she first went to live in England she set aside four acres of her grounds and planted the land with every kind of hardy tree and shrub that bears fruits and berries eaten by birds. Nearer the house she built a pavilion with a tight roof as a protection against rain and snow, and here every morning she spreads a meal of suet, oats, cracked corn, meal and seeds. There are water troughs which are filled twice a day and kept fresh and sweet by frequent washings.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange, No. 1451, met at the home of Worthy Master J. A. Newvine on Tuesday evening last. Some time was spent in getting familiar with the visitory ceremony. Six candidates were elected to membership, ladies and one gentleman. W. C. Bardus led a very interesting discussion on the subject, "If every bad or corn in my field were as good as my best hill how much could I afford to expend to better cultivation and fertilize?" It was shown that there was a wide margin between the actual production and the possible enough to be well worth striving for, not only by using more fertilizer and better cultivation but by selecting better seed. It was suggested that grange try to formulate some plan for making the neighborhood famous for some specialty one or more and both ahead means were invited to make suggestions at the next regular meeting. Worthy Lecturer C. O. De Wilson suggested that we have a men's mass meeting and invite the ladies to attend and have a basket dinner. Motion made and carried

SOIL SURVEY OF MICHIGAN

Plans for Complete one Will he Laid Before Legislature

UNITED STATES WILL CO-OPERATE

Would be of Untold Advantage to Northern Michigan

In Proving to Settlers the Real Value to Our Land—Would Also be Help to Improved Farming

Plans for a complete soil survey of all the region of light soil in Michigan will be placed before the state legislature next winter. It is proposed to expend $30,000 in determining the proper limits of the various kinds of soil and to afford such assistance as precise information will give in hastening the settlement of the northern part of the state. It is proposed that the state legislature appropriate $20,000 and that an equal amount be expended by the federal bureau of soils.

The ambitious projects has been laid before Michigan officials by a representative of the bureau of soils. The Michigan departments most directly interested are those of the atate geologist and the commission of public domain.

It is said that such a survey would be in direct and immediate help to the public domain commission. It would permit the early classification of the soil and would make it possible for the commission to speedily open up land found to be suitable for agriculture while the balance can he retained for state forests.

The plan contemplates covering the entire upper peninsula and all of the northern part of the lower peninsula. The southerly limit in the lower peninsula would probably be a line drawn across the state approximately from the northern part of Kent county to Bay City. The light soils lie almost entirely north of this line and the experts know that the chief problems of Michigan's development lie to the north.

It is proposed that ten parties of two men each be put into the field and that they be kept there until the work is completed. It is estimated that the ground can be covered in two seasons with this force, but the estimate may be erroneous, for the federal soil survey has never heretofore surveyed areas so extensively timbered as some parts of the country which this survey will cover.

Heretofore soil surveys in Michigan have been few and have been confined to detail surveys, like the recent one covering Wexford county and described in the press. It would take a long time to cover Michigan county by county and the federal experts are inclined to the opinion that great help can be given the state through a hurried recognizance survey. It is proposed that the soil map be on a scale of about one inch to six miles. This would permit a record of the more important soil variations. It is said that the survey would be sufficiently detailed and thorough so that the public domain commission could readily tell what lands have agricultural value.

The value to the state and to the public would be that a would be settler could by reference to the map and report quickly will tell where to go for the sort of soil that he wanted. He would not be able to locate it precisely by referring to the map, but he could go into the proper locality.

Aside from giving a better soil classificatioo of the northern part of the state the survey will help in improving farming. The soil experts always have their eyes open for opportunity—for improved methods of handling the land.

It is quite evident that the Michigan legislature will be obliged to make an appropriation if it wants the help of the federal soil survey. This government bureau has acquired a great liking for what it calls co-operative works. That phrase means that the state puts up about half the money and furnishes the help aside from experts. The federal bureau furnishes the experts, provides the inspection service and turns out the report. This method enables the bureau of soil to make greater progress. It also automatically gives a greater proportion of federal money to states working co-operatively than to those which depend upon the federal appropriation alone. No work is being done in Michigan this year.

No field work was done in Michigan last year. The last piece of work done for Michigan was the Wexford survey, the field work for which was done in the summer of 1908, and the report of which published Oct. 20, 1909. Michigan has a member of the agricultural committee of the house in the person of Congressman James C. McLaughlin of Muskegon.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

Plans are Approved for One in Every State and Territory

Houghton Selected as City Where Test Will be Made in Michigan

The board of trustees of the postal savings bank system have approved a list of 48 second class postoffices at which the plan will be given its first trial. The list includes one office for each state and territory. Houghton is named for Michigan.

The trustees are Postmaster-General Hitchcock, Secretary of the Treasurer MacVeagh and Attorney General Wickersham. They met in the office of the postmaster-general late this afternoon. The list they formally approved was selected after careful investigation by the postal officials with a view to making the first test of the service as soon as possible under the appropriation of $100,000 provided by congress.

Communities were chosen in which the conditions were exceptionally favorable for the development of a postal savings business, mostly industrial centers where wage earners are especially benefited by the kind of banking facilities afforded.

A large patronage of the service is expected by the officials from foreign born Americans in these cities who are now remitting considerable sums to their native countries in the form of money orders. Many of the places selected, particularly those in the west, are not adequately provided with other saving institutions.

It is probable that the plans devised will be given at least a month's trial in the original forty right offices before others are added to the list, although it is expected that the number of offices will be largely increased before the end of the current fiscal year.

THEATRICAL

Charlevoix theater-goers will have an opportunity of witnessing the great drama "A Misspent Life" at the Charlevoix theater Thursday evening, November 17, 1910.

A strong cast has been selected and it is guaranteed that the play will be one of the best local talents ever seen in the city.

The dramatization shows the decisive points in the life of a man who has a brilliant future before him, until he took to the use of drugs, intermingled with a thrilling detective story and a true love story.

The play has not been before a Charlevoix audience and will be an attraction that will never be forgotten. It may be the only chance you will have of seeing it produced.

At the Majestic.

Miss Florence Fox, who appeared at the Majestic the first half of the week is one of the best boy impersonators in vaudeville work today. She has made a decided hit in all the large cities of the country and made such a good impression that she is to play a return engagement there next week. Her impersonation of the boy today is well-nigh perfect.

Rost, the juggler, does some juggling with nearly everything and in a very creditable manner.

Bramsy & Co. will appear for the last three days in a comedy sketch said to be above the common.

There will be a stock company at the Majestic all next week.

CHARLEVOIX WINS

Another Victory Added to Charlevoix's List by Saturday's Game

Twenty-Five to Nothing the Score—East Jordan will be Victims November 5.

The high school foot-ball team added another victory to its list Saturday by defeating the Harbor Springs ineligibles by a score of 25 to 0. We do not claim much praise or credit for the victory as the visiting team was composed mostly of town players and were rather inexperienced at the game. When the game was arranged it was understood by the manager that the team was composed mostly of high school students but on the contrary they were boys who were not trained according to the new rules and knew only the old style game. So it was necessarily a much rougher game than it would otherwise have been. The Charlevoix high school does not make a practice of playing only eligible high school teams so we offer an apology for last Saturday's game.

Contrary to reports Harrison Wallace and Capt. Hully are not injured as seriously as expected, neither has his collar bone broken and both will be able to get into the game in a couple of weeks.

As yet no games have been arranged for next Saturday but November 5, or a week hence, East Jordan invades our camp with blood in their eyes.

Strict enforcement of the law is the platform upon which Ford P. Robbins won at the primary and is his platform for the election. 43tf

WHAT'S THE MATTER

With the Ticket Named by the Republicans

Be Sure and Get Out and Vote at the Election in November.

Probably there never was a campaign in the history of Michigan upon which so much depended as this year's campaign. Not withstanding this fact the general complaint is heard that voters are not awake to the importance of casting their vote on November eight. Legislation of supreme importance must be enacted next winter, and in the light of history, who do you want to enact that legislation? The great problem of taxation must be worked out in such a manner that every portion of our great state shall bear their just share. The state must be apportioned into congressional, senatorial and legisative districts. Who will be the most able to look after the interests of Charlevoix County, Representative Pearson, who has served one term with credit to himself and county, who enjoys the esteem and confidence of the leaders of the next legislature, and will be there as a member of a party organization, or his opponent who would be a new man, representing a party of his own? Which party has shown their willingness to abide by the demands of the people for a law giving them the right to make nominations by direct vote? Has it been the Republican party, whose candidates were named at a primary, after a free contest between opponents or the opposition, which met in conferences and conventions, and as far as they were able, defeated the purpose of the people? Who would you sooner trust to make the necessary changes which experience has shown are necessary in the law?

What is the matter with the county ticket which you the people, named? Are they not all well qualified men for the positions which they seek? Be honest, are they not better qualified to work for you than their opponents? Wouldn't you rather employ a man who had given you first class service than one who had to be trained before he could do as well? Their opponents might in time give as good service. We think probably they might, but we do know that you are getting mighty good service now. Wouldn't you just as soon, or a little rather, entrust the administration of the criminal affairs of the county to Ford P. Robbins, who has had experience on the board of supervisors, and Dwight H. Fitch, who has practised several years successfully at the bar of Charlevoix County, than their opponents? We believe that if you vote as you will answer these questions you will vote the Republican ticket. If your answer is otherwise, and the other fellow gets the majority, your answer will still be right, for the people are the one to judge and their verdict is right, when all exercise their privilege and vote. Be sure and go to the polls and take your neighbor with you.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH

Michigan's Senior Senator Addressed Large Crowd at Boyne City

At Grand Republican Rally Held Tuesday Night in That City.

As was the case two years ago Boyne City again demonstrated that when it comes to holding big Republican rallies she can deliver the goods. Tuesday night's meeting was a grand success, large delegations being present from East Jordan, Charlevoix and Boyne Falls. Senator William Alden Smith, the speaker of the evening, well sustained his reputation as one of Michigan's foremost orators and statesmen. Before entering upon the political part of the address the senator spoke of the influence of the waters of Lake Michigan, on the climatic conditions of western Michigan and our fruit industry, and the danger of the lakes to the gulf waterways project to our growth and industries, proving that Senator Smith is always active in safeguarding the interests of his state.

In discussing the political issues Mr. Smith demonstrated from official reports that republican legislation had made this the ideal country for the laboring man as well as everybody else and closed with a splendid tribute to his native land.

COUNTY WILL REMAIN DRY

Supervisors Defeat the Plans of the Wet Element

BY ADJOURNING WITHOUT A DATE

Special Session is Called to Meet Again in January

Important Proceedings of Board Since Last Issue—Officer's Salaries are Re-adjusted—Amount of Tax Apportioned.

The supervisors completed their work Saturday forenoon, after a two weeks session, adjourning without date to the disapointment of the "wets" who claimed that if an adjournment was taken until the January session they would be able to file a petition with the required number of names to submit the question of local option.

The most important matters transacted since our last issue was the apportionment of county tax as follows:

Boyne City	$12253.50
Bay	1012.15
Boyne Valley	2482.00
Chandler	2309.68
Charlevoix	1054.04
Evelin	1714.32
Evangeline	446.04
Hayes	1884.21
Hudson	1714.32
Marion	1758.12
Melrose	2330.18
Norwood	1279.24
Prairie	703.56
St. James	1198.50
South Arm	8000.44
Wilson	1042.08
City of Charlevoix	9782.84

Officers salaries were fixed as follows: Sheriff, fees of office; Register of Deeds, fees of office; Clerk, $350 and sum equal to fees of office; Treasurer, $350 and sum equal to fees of office; Prosecuting Attorney $1000 and investigating expenses; County Commissioner of Schools, $1200. These salaries to be complete and cover all expense of office.

The board passed a resolution by a vote of nineteen to four appropriating six hundred dollars, Charlevoix's County's share to the work of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, but on account of legal objections raised by some of the members the resolution was reconsidered and laid on the table.

The printing of proceedings was let to the Charlevoix Sentinel for the flat sum of $550.

CHARLEVOIX-DETROIT

Charlevoix People in Detroit are Urged to Get Together.

Editor:

The Charlevoix-Detroit people desire to start a news column in the home town paper and it is suggested that all who are living in Detroit and wish to join and make this column an interesting item, that they send their name and address to Wm. A. Carey, 805 Kercheval avenue, Detroit so that he may connect with the different parties now in the city. This ultimately will bring each one in closer touch as a club will be formed at the earliest date. There are fifteen or twenty people living in the city from Charlevoix and we want everyone to take notice.

THIS IS CERTAIN

The Proof That Charlevoix Readers Cannot Deny.

What could furnish stronger evidence of the efficiency of any remedy than the test of time. Thousands testify that Doan's Kidney Pills cure permanently.

Grateful endorsements should prove undoubtedly the merits of this remedy. Years ago people right in this locality testified to the relief they have derived from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. They now confirm their testimonials. They say that time has completed the test.

W. E. VanCamp, 118 E. St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "I was subject to severe pains in the back and if I caught cold, I suffered more intensely. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my attention, I obtained a supply and it didn't take them long to cure me. I am pleased to give this remedy the praise it deserves." (Statement given August 21, 1908.)

Good reason for re-indorsement.

On August 3, 1908 Mr. VanCamp said: "The public statement I gave in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills some years ago still holds good." My cure has been permanent."

THE SILVER HORDE

BY REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

The breath of the wild northwest is in this great story of love and life and hate and death. Rex Beach and Jack London have revealed the hidden mysteries and romances of the Alaskan wastes as have no other authors, and in this stirring, gripping narrative is shown the best work of Mr. Beach's career. Boyd Emerson and his superhuman efforts to win a fortune for the woman he loved; Cherry Malotte, the captivating, energetic young woman who combated desperate men on the battleground of their own choosing; Mildred Wayland, the imperious beauty and society favorite, whose hand was sought by bitter rivals who did not stop at murder; George Bait, the sturdy fisher hero, whose voice was like the roar of giant waves on a lee shore; "Fingerless" Fraser, whose quaint humor alone prevented him from going to jail, where he really belonged, and Willis Marsh, unprincipled intriguer and a betrayer of men and women—these are some of the characters and elements that make this story one of the greatest tales of adventure ever written.

CHAPTER I.

THE trail to Kalvik leads down from the northward mountains over the tundra which flanks the tide flats, then creeps out upon the salt ice of the river and across to the village.

A Greek church, a Russian school with a cassocked priest presiding and about a hundred houses beside the cannery buildings make up the village.

Early one December afternoon there entered upon this trail from the timberless hills far away to the northward a weary team of six dogs, driven by two men.

The travelers had been plodding sullenly hour after hour, dispirited by the weight of the storm.

"Fingerless" Fraser broke trail, and Boyd Emerson drove.

"Another day like this and we'd both be snow blind," observed Emerson grimly as he bent to his task. "But it can't be far to the river now."

An hour later they dropped from the plain down through a gutterlike gully to the river, where they found a trail, glass hard beneath its downy covering. A cold breath sucked up from the sea. Ahead they saw the ragged ice upended by the tide. One branch led to the village, which they knew lay somewhere on the farther side, hidden by a mile or more of sifting snow.

The going here was so rough that both men leaped from their seats and ran beside the sled. They mounted a swelling ridge and rushed down to the level river ice beyond, but as they did so they heard a shivering creak on every side and saw water rising about the sled runners. Emerson shouted, the dogs leaped, but with a crash the ice gave way, and for a moment the water closed over him. "Fingerless" Fraser broke through in turn, gasping as the icy water rose to his armpits.

Each man aimed to secure an independent footing, but the efforts of all only enlarged the pool. Emerson shouted:

"Cut the team loose, quick!" But the other spat out a mouthful of salt water and spluttered:

"I—I can't swim!"

Whereupon the first speaker half swam himself through the slush to the forward end of the sled and, seeking out the sheath knife from beneath his parka, cut the harness of the two animals. Once free they scrambled to safety and rolled in the dry snow.

Emerson next attempted to lift the nose of the sled up on the ice, shouting at the remainder of the team to pull, but they only wagged their tails and whined. Each time he tried to lift the sled he crashed through fresh ice, finally hearing the next pair of dogs with him and then the two animals in the lead. All of them became hopelessly entangled.

Suddenly rang out a sharp command uttered in a new voice. Out of the snow fog from the direction in which they were headed broke a team, running full and free. Emerson marveled at the outfit, having never seen the like in all his travels through the north, for each animal of the twelve stood hip high to a tall man, and they were like wolves of one pack, gray and gaunt and wicked. A tall Indian runner left the team and headed swiftly for the scene of the accident. The man ran forward till he neared the edge of the opening where the tide had caused the floes to separate; then, flattening his body on the ice, he crawled out cautiously and seized the lead dog. Carefully he wormed his way backward to security.

It had been a ticklish operation, requiring nice skill and dexterity, but now that its footing was sure the runner exerted his whole strength, and as the dogs scrambled and tore for a firm foothold the sled came crunching closer and closer through the half inch skin of ice. Then he reached down and dragged Emerson out, dripping and nerveless from his immersion. Together they rescued the outfit.

The person in the sledge had watched them silently, but now spoke in a strange patois, and the breed gave voice to her words, for it was a woman.

"One mile you go—white man house. Go quick—you freeze."

"Ain't you got no dry clothes? Our stuff is soaked."

Again the Indian transmitted some words from the girl.

"No. You hurry and no stop here. We go quick over yonder. No can stop at all."

He hurried back to his mistress, cried once to the pack of gray dogs, "Oomah!" and they were off as if in chase.

As they dashed past both white men had one fleeting glimpse of a woman's face beneath a furred hood, and then it was gone.

"Did you see?" Fraser ejaculated. "Good Lord! It's a woman—a blood woman!"

"Nonsense! She must be a breed," said Emerson.

"Breeds don't have yellow hair!" declared the other.

Swiftly they bent in the free dogs and lashed the team to a run. They felt the chill of death in their bones, and instead of riding they ran with the sled, till their blood beat painfully. Their outer coverings were like shells, their underclothes were soaked, and, although their going was difficult and clumsy, they dared not stop, for this is the extremest peril of the north.

They swung over the river bank and into the midst of great rambling frame buildings. Their trail led them to a high banked cabin. Another mile would have meant disaster.

"Rout out the owner and tell him we're wet," said Emerson. "I'll free the dogs."

Before he could reach the cabin the door opened and Fraser appeared, a strange, dazed look on his face. He was followed by a large man of sullen countenance.

"It's no use," Fraser said. "We can't go in."

"What's wrong? Somebody sick?"

"I don't know what's the matter. This man just says 'nix,' that's all."

The fellow growled, "Yaas; Ay got no room."

"But you don't understand," said Emerson. "We're wet. We broke through the ice. Never mind the room. We'll get along somehow."

"You can't come in har. You find anoder house t'ree mile further."

The traveler pushed forward. Involuntarily the watchman drew back, whereupon the unwelcome visitor crowded past, jostling his inhospitable host roughly. Emerson's quick action gained him entrance, and Fraser followed behind into the living room, where a flat nosed squaw withdrew before them. The young man addressed her peremptorily:

"Punch up that fire and get us something to eat, quick!"

Sour obedience followed.

Fraser had been watching the fellow and now remarked to his companion:

"Say, what ails that ginney?"

The assumption of good nature fell away from Boyd Emerson as he replied:

"I never knew anybody to refuse shelter to freezing men before."

The watchman reappeared.

"You can't stop thar!" he said. "Ay got orders. By Yingo, Ay trow you out!"

He stooped and gathered up the garments nearest him, then stepped toward the outer door, but before he could make good his threat Emerson whirled like a cat, his deep set eyes dark with sudden fury, and seized his host by the nape of the neck. He jerked him back so roughly that the wet clothes flapped to the floor in four directions, whereat the Scandinavian let forth a bellow, but Emerson struck him heavily on the jaw with his open hand, then hurled him backward into the room so violently that he reeled, and, his legs colliding with a bench, he fell against the wall. His assailant stepped in and throttled him, beating his head violently against the logs. Emerson, stepping back, spoke in a quivering voice which Fraser had never heard before:

"I'm just playing with you now. I don't want to hurt you."

"Get out of my house! Ay got orders!" cried the watchman and made for him again.

Emerson dragged him to his own doorsill, jerked the door open and kicked him out into the snow, then barred the entrance and returned to the warmth of the logs, his face convulsed and his lips working.

When the slatternly woman had slunk forth and was busied at the stove Emerson observed musingly:

"I wonder what possessed that fellow to act as he did."

"He said he had orders," Fraser offered. "If I had a warm cabin, a lot of grub and a squaw, I'd like to see somebody give me orders."

Their clothing was dry now, and they proceeded to dress leisurely. When they had finished their coffee Emerson laid two silver dollars on the table, and they left the house to search out the river trail again.

The darkness was upon them when they crept up the opposite bank an hour later toward a group of shadowy buildings. Approaching the solitary gleam of light shining from the window of the watchman's house, they applied to him for shelter.

"You can't stop here," gruffly.

"Is there a roadhouse near by?"

"Try the next place below," said the watchman hurriedly, slamming the door in their faces and bolting it.

At the next stop they encountered the same gruff show of inhospitality.

"I'll make one more try," said Emerson between his teeth grathigly. "If that doesn't succeed then I'll take possession again."

EMERSON SEIZED HIS HOST BY THE NAPE OF THE NECK.

A mile farther on they drew up before a white pile surmounted by a dimly discerned Greek cross, but their signals awakened no response.

"Gone!"

They wasted no words when, for the fourth time their eyes caught the welcome sight of a shining radiance in the gloom.

"Unhitch!" ordered Emerson doggedly as he began to untie the ropes of the sled. He shouldered the sleeping bags and made toward the light that filtered through the crusted windows, followed by Fraser similarly burdened. But as they approached they saw at once that this was no cannery; it looked more like a roadhouse or trading post. Behind and connected with it by a covered hall or passageway crouched another squat building of the same character, its roof piled thick with a mass of snow, its windows glowing.

They mounted the steps of the nigh building and without knocking flung the door open, entering. With a sharp exclamation an Indian woman regarded them round eyed.

"We're all right this time," observed Emerson. "It's a store." Then to the woman he said briefly, "We want a bed and something to eat."

On every side the walls were shelved with merchandise, while the counter carried a supply of clothing and skins.

"What you want?" demanded the squaw.

Boyd and Fraser, divesting themselves of their furs, noticed that she was little more than a girl—a native undoubtedly.

"Food! Sleep!" Boyd replied.

"You can't stop here," the girl asserted firmly.

"Oh, yes, we can," said Emerson.

The squaw called, "Constantine!"

The tall figure of a man emerged, advancing swiftly.

It was the copper hued native who had rescued them from the river earlier in the day. The Indian girl broke into a torrent of excited volubility.

"You no stop here," said Constantine. Making toward the outer door, he flung it open.

"We've come a long way and we're tired," Emerson argued. He faced the Indian with his back to the stove, his voice taking on a determined note. "We won't leave here until we are ready. Now tell your 'klootch' to get us some supper. Quick!"

A soft voice from the rear of the room halted the advancing Indian.

"Constantine," it said.

The travelers whirled to see, standing out in relief against the darkness of the passage whence the Indian had just come a few seconds before, the golden haired girl of the storm to whom they had been indebted for their rescue. She advanced, smiling pleasantly.

"These men no stop here!" cried Constantine violently.

"I—I—beg pardon," began Emerson. "We didn't intend to take forcible possession, but we're played out—we've been denied shelter everywhere—we felt desperate"—

She addressed the Indian girl in Aleut and signaled to Constantine, at which the two natives retired.

"We're glad of an opportunity to thank you for your timely service this afternoon," said Emerson.

"Oh, that was nothing. I've been expecting you hourly. You see, Constantine's little brother has the measles, and I had to get in him before the natives could give the poor little fellow a Russian bath and then stand him out in the snow. They have only one treatment for all diseases."

"If your—er—father"— The girl shook her head.

"Then your husband—I should like to arrange with him to hire lodgings for a few days. The matter of money"—

Again she came to his rescue.

"I am the man of the house. I'm boss here. You are quite welcome to stay as long as you wish. Constantine objects to my hospitality and treats all strangers alike, fearing they may be company men."

"We threw a Swede out on his neck," declared Fraser, swelling with conscious importance, "and I guess he's crabbed us with the other squareheads."

"Oh, no! They have instructions not to harbor any travelers. It's as much as his job is worth for any of them to entertain you. Now, won't you make yourselves at home while Constantine attends to your dogs? Dinner will soon be ready."

He murmured "Gladly" and then lost himself in wonder at this well rounded girl living amid such surroundings.

THE VETERINARY.

For Swelling In Horses.

When a swelling appears in a horse dissolve half a dram of quinine in two drams of tincture of iron and give this dose twice daily in a pint of warm water containing two or three ounces of whisky as a stimulant. Feed whole oats, bran and hay. Work the horse lightly in the cool of the day.

Cure For Bog Spavin.

Such distensions of the synovial bursa of the joint as bog spavin do not respond satisfactorily to treatment. Patient hand rubbing, together with applications of iodine ointment every other day, does about as much good as any line of treatment we can suggest. Give the massage and rubbing two or three times a day.

When the Mare Goes Lame.

When the mare is troubled with stiff neck, which causes her to go lame, rub the neck well once a day with a little soap liniment and continue until the stiffness is removed; also give half an ounce of bromide of potassium at a dose twice a day in a small bran mash and continue for one week.

Remedy For Eczema.

It is natural for some horses to have eczema during hot weather, and it is impossible to prevent it. When it starts mix one ounce each acetate of lead and sulphate of zinc with one quart of water. Shake up and apply a little once a day. This will help to relieve the itching.

The only beneficial spray mixture is the Rex Lime-sulphur. We have it all ready to dilute and apply.

f-15-1-f Ward & Ward.

KEEP THE TROUGH CLEAN.

Profitable to See It Is Not Contaminated With Filth.

There are millions of little pigs throughout the country making their own way in the world. Even before weaning time the average pig ought to be handled so that he will become a good eater.

He should be encouraged to take his place at the trough just as soon as possible, and it is not too early to expect little pigs to like up for a ration of slop at the age of three or four weeks.

This, by the way, is a critical time in the life of a pig, because, as a rule, during the spring months there is abundance of mud around the quarters with which to contaminate his grain ration, and this leads us to say that it will pay every swine raiser to take special precaution to keep the swine troughs from being contaminated with filth.

Where a good, dry feeding floor is not available, then a trough should be designed so that the older hogs will be compelled to eat without putting their feet in the trough.

Any ordinary hog trough with a plank placed on edge of the trough and held in place by end pieces will answer the purpose reasonably well, though those who are ingeniously inclined may carry the matter further and make partitions in the trough eight or ten inches apart so that the mature hogs will have to stand right in their place at mealtime.

We believe that many cases of thumps could be traced to digestive troubles which originated by little pigs consuming large quantities of filth, and every man knows that a thumpy pig is just about as profitable a piece of furniture if he is knocked on the head there and then as if he tried to save him.

It is almost an even break whether he is worth botherling with or not.

GOOD ROUND BARN.

One Owned by Kansas Breeder That Is Indeed Unique.

One of the finest cattle barns in the state of Kansas, if not in the whole country, is on the farm of a prominent breeder, who owns a fine herd of 200 head of thoroughbred Hereford cattle, in Marshall county.

It stands in a class by itself so far as unique construction is concerned. The barn proper is 100 feet in diameter, and the height is eighty feet to the square of the cupola.

The luminosity of the structure can be realized when it is said that eighteen times around the inside make a mile. The first or basement story is ten feet in the clear. The next story, or mow, is twenty feet to the plate and sixty feet to the bottom of the cupola.

The roof has no other support than the ventilating shaft running from the ground in the basement to the top of the cupola in the center of the building. The walls of the basement are three feet thick at the bottom and twenty inches at the top and contain 400 perch of rock.

The building proper contains 90,000 feet of lumber, or four carloads, and is covered on the outside with 20,000 square feet of galvanized sheet iron nailed on with galvanized nails, covering side and roof completely.

The capacious structure will hold 300 cattle and all the farm horses used on the 800 acre ranch. On the mow floor there is storage for 10,000 bushels of grain, 500 tons of hay, etc., besides all the agricultural tools use on the farm.

How to Renovate Last Year's Panama.

Last year's panama hat may be made to look like a 1910 one with the aid of an old toothbrush and some cornmeal. Lay the hat on a flat surface and sprinkle with dry cornmeal. Rub hard with the brush. As the meal looks soiled brush off and apply clean meal. Do this until the hat is thoroughly clean. SALT NECESSARY FOR THE FLOCK.

Sheep on pasture are often neglected as far as salting is concerned. They are either salted irregularly or not at all. When salt is not supplied to them in sufficient quantities they crave it intensely and, as has been demonstrated by experiments, will not make the gains nor grow the wool they will if properly salted. Salt is often considered a seasoning for the food of animals and not an essential.

It is the only mineral which ordinarily needs to be supplied to live stock. It furnishes chlorine for the digestive juices of the stomach. It aids in transporting from the digestive tract into the blood vessels the albuminoids of the foods. It helps to regulate the density of the blood and governs to a degree the activity of the cells of the body. No sheep can do its best without enough salt.

Salting every few days is sufficient for the needs of the sheep, but it is not as good a method as keeping salt before the sheep all the time, for when a rush of work comes or a visiting time comes salting the sheep is one of the things neglected. When salt is given after a period of neglect the sheep are so eager for it that they take too much, and large quantities of water are needed to wash it out of the system, some of this being drawn from the tissues of the body to the detriment of the sheep.

Rock salt is preferred by some to the coarse stock salt. Many use medicated salt, which serves a double purpose in supplying the sheep's need for salt and in preventing worms. When it is desired to clean out a patch of bad weeds, as Canada thistles, the sheep may be salted on them and will keep them gnawed down to the ground and eventually kill them out.

However, the man who loves his sheep and who therefore has the first requisite of a good shepherd need not to be reminded to salt them, for it will be done without fail, just as a hundred other things are done, for the good of the sheep. Watchfulness is that man's great and valuable asset, and he sees many things that need doing where the more careless man sees none.

Worms In the Pigs.

When the young pigs get worms there is not much use attempting to fatten them until relieved of the malady. A simple effective remedy is turpentine fed in milk to pigs in a solution of one teaspoonful once every day to every 100 pounds of weight. The treatment may be continued for three days and may be more beneficial if the pigs are not given other feed for a period of twelve to twenty-four hours before the treatment is begun. The quarters should be kept clean and sanitary, and the pastures should be changed frequently.

Caring For Sheep In Hot Weather.

With the high price of both wool and lambs it is important that we should give the sheep and lamb extra attention during the most trying seasons of the year. One of these trying seasons is during the latter part of the hot months, when the weather is extremely warm and pasture short.

DAIRY NOTES.

Dairyman Should Be Prepared.

The dairyman should always be ready for any emergency that arises. With her first calf the young cow often has trouble. Caked udder or whatever the trouble may be should be carefully looked after.

The Holland Dairymen.

The cows of Holland live in their owner's house. But don't imagine the stalls are filthy like ours. They are as neat as your sitting room. It is hard to believe that part of the floor is covered with matting and the windows have lace curtains.

The Cow Without Horns.

A dairy cow is better without horns. But when you take them off make a neat job of it—in other words, use an approved instrument and do the work right.

Handling Cream Important.

It is not the way cream is separated from milk, but the way it is handled after being separated, which determines the quality of butter it will make. If kept until it ferments it will make poor butter.

Test and Weigh the Milk.

When you admit that you haven't time to test and weigh the milk so as to keep a record of each cow you haven't time to dairy right.

FIRE AT PETOSKEY

Early Sunday Morning Blaze Caused a Loss of Twenty-Thousand Dollars.

Fire broke out on Park avenue early Sunday morning and burned six frame buildings, including a bowling alley, an empty store and a restaurant, making the total loss nearly $20,000. None of the buildings were insured, but the stock of the Boyajian Bros.' candy and ice cream parlor carried $2,500 which was about half of the valuation.

Armon and Lewis Boyajian were sleeping above the store when the fire started and the blaze gained such headway that they were forced to leap from the window to save their lives. Five of the buildings were owned by Bockes & Grover, while Garet Fochtman was the owner of the other.

SCHOOL GARDENS POPULAR.

Have Become a Most Interesting Educational Feature.

Foremost among the wholesome departures introduced in this country is the culture of the school garden, which in many large cities has become the most popular feature of the curriculum of the schools.

This school garden education partakes of the nature of manual training. Like that, it is designed to cultivate tastes and powers which lie dormant in the ordinary classroom training. It goes further, fostering an interest in the wonders of nature which will abide with the man and woman, enriching all after life.

There are some who regard this schooling as of national importance, for it is believed that in it lies the hope of turning back the drift of population from country to city, a sociological evil whose correction is engaging the study of the best minds of the day. Apart from all philosophic considerations it cannot but be beneficial from a purely physical standpoint, relieving the nervous strain of study, inducing healthful exercise and restful thoughts.

Mrs. W. H. Lamb of 330 North street reports the birth of two children in her family, not twins, with the same birthday. An unusual case of the kind occurred in a well known family recently and comment was made on it by this paper. Mrs. Lamb reports that Raymond Lamb was born March 19, 1908 and Alma Blanch Lamb on March 19, 1910. There was only about six hours difference in the arriving time of the youngsters. The circumstance was so unusual that considerable comment was caused It is a very rare that two children in one family can celebrate the same birthday and still not be twins.—Boyne Citizen.

COUNTY NORMAL

Jessie Durance, of the class of '08, visited the normal class and gave a short talk on her experience as a teacher.

Tuesday evening the class was entertained at a beach party given by Misses Himes and Whiting. After a generous feast of grapes a bon-fire was built and marshmallows roasted. The moon was at its height, adding to the fun, and a splendid time was enjoyed by all.

Last Wednesday morning the normal class attended the meeting of the county supervisors at the courthouse. After listening to the reports of the committees and a short discussion as to the correct appropriation of money, the supervisors served grapes and Swiss chocolates.

The class, accompanied by Miss Himes, Miss Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. DeVoe and Col. D. C. Wickham were taken out in the surf boat for an inspection of the government steam dredge. The experience was novel and valuable. The class especially appreciated the courtesy of Capt. McDonold, Capt. Pugh and Col. Wickham.

Hazel Price substituted Tuesday and Wednesday, Jennie Hunderman Thursday and Florence McKee Friday, in Miss Wilson's room.

Eva Cram was absent last week on account of illness.

OSBORN WILL MAKE GOOD GOV.

If Elected, Soo Man Will Give Michigan Grand Administration.

WAS GOOD R. R. COMMISSIONER

He Accomplished Things, and Made the Office a Substantial Benefit to the Public—It Cost Money to Do Business His Way, but He Got Results, Says C. S. Brown.

"I see that Lawton T. Hemans, the Democratic nominee for governor, is making campaign remarks to the effect that Chase S. Osborn, the Republican nominee, conducted the most expensive administration the state ever had, during his term as state railroad commissioner," said Charles S. Brown, of Grand Rapids, to a Detroit Free Press representative.

"I want to say, and say it with all the emphasis I can, that since the office of state railroad commissioner was created, Michigan has never had a man in the position before or since who accomplished so much good for the traveling public as Chase S. Osborn. Every commercial traveler in the state who knows anything about it will bear witness to that fact. He did things, and the office under him was not a sinecure, but a real and substantial benefit to the public. I take it for granted that it cost more to do business in that way, but we got results for the money."

Brown has been a commercial traveler for upwards of 30 years and is one of the best known to the state and throughout the middle west.

He is the man who was selected by President Roosevelt in 1906 to be inspector of the government printing office at Washington, an office which the president created for the purpose of cleaning out the graft which had infested the big establishment for so many years that it required the keenest kind of an expert to ferret it out and get rid of it. Brown stayed there one year and made a house cleaning that made him famous all over the country. He was offered all kinds of luducements to remain, but after the cleansing was done he preferred to return to private life and business.

"I have known Chase Osborn," said he, "for more than a quarter of a century, and he is not only a big man mentally, but one of the squarest and most efficient men I ever met. Michigan will have one of its old time fine administrations if he is elected governor. He will do in that office just what he did as railroad commissioner, accomplish results for the good of the state and its people. I shall make it a point to be in Michigan on election day so as to vote for him."

"RICHMOND" Suds-Maker Makes Good

Tested and Approved by the Good Housekeeping Institute

Good Housekeeping Institute (Conducted by Good Housekeeping Magazine, Springfield, Mass.) says: "We take pleasure in informing you that we have given this device a most thorough trial in accordance with your printed directions and find it an article which we can approve."

The "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker puts an end to the drudgery of dishwashing and enables you to keep the kitchen, laundry, etc., absolutely free from the slop and slime of soap. It saves half your soap bill and more than half the labor—does the work quicker and better than it can be done in any other way. Attaches to any faucet, one turn of which brings you thick, creamy suds that cleans as no soap used by hand possibly could. No special soap required—just use any kind you prefer, either whole pieces or scraps.

To wash dishes, silverware, glassware or iron cooking utensils, simply place under the rich suds for an instant, then rinse and wipe.

Get a "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker for free trial from the Plumber whose name appears below. Try it for ten days then if you're willing to give it up, simply return it as the trial does not in any way obligate you. Call to-day.

Neighborhood Notes

After an inspection of the poor-house, which has been condemned as unsanitary by the state board of corrections and charities, the board of supervisors of Grand Traverse county passed a resolution authorizing the sale of the present poor-house and the acquisition of a more suitable building by rental until such time as the county authorizes a sufficient appropriation for a permanent county house. The county already owns a good twenty-acre farm, but the voters have repeatedly turned down the bonding proposition for a building.

"Gee, fellows, but I'm hungry," were the last words spoken by Frank McConnell, 20 years old, of Jennings, as he jumped from a wagon containing a load of young people returning from a dance and entered a cabbage patch to get a head.

As McConnell pulled up the cabbage, a rifle shot sounded and the young man dropped, dying almost instantly.

Charles Metro, 45 years old, the owner of the patch, his mother-in-law and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. James Horton, aged both 60 years, are jailed at Lake City, the former charged with slaying young McConnell and the last named as accomplices. The ball penetrated McConnell's heart, entering from the back.

Talk about Chicago market place, they're not in it compared with G. C. Adams' Acorn Market on Spring street last Saturday morning. About 6:30 the children began coming in from every direction, each in a hurry to get there first, bringing their acorns to market. Some had them in bags on their backs, others in wheelbarrows, express wagons, one wagon being drawn by a large dog, and some coming from as far out as Indian Village with ponies, and still they came until the streets was jammed full of boys, carts, wheelbarrows, dogs and acorns, from the corner of Main and Spring street to G. C. Adams store, and the store was so full of "market men" that it appeared like a yellow jacket's nest. The result was that Mr. Adams purchased 400 bushels of acorns at 50c per bushel, and the youngsters went away rejoicing.

Acorn gathering is getting to be quite an industry around Harbor Springs, and the children are earning lots of "pin money" some children have earned their clothes and school books by picking acorns during their spare time. Harbor Springs Graphic.

Early in the summer the Home Benevolent Society with the assistance of some of the generous citizens placed a child's bed in the G. R. & I. station and also placed a small bank on the ticket office shelf for contributions which were to keep the bed clean and in sanitary condition as well as to buy bedding when necessary. Some time ago the bank was opened and found to contain over six dollars all in small amounts, which gifts would not be felt as a burden by any and yet which was a blessing to many a wee babe. Last week this little bank was taken from the shelf by some unknown person. We wonder if the man or woman who did this has a baby of their own, and if they have thought that they may have deprived some other child of the care and comfort they might have from the money in the little bank? Many tired mothers and babies have been grateful for the little bed while waiting for trains.—Petoskey Record.

Twenty members of the Calhoun county board of supervisors who "chaw" or "hit the pipe," voted to pay a bill of $109.30 presented by Sheriff Graham for tobacco furnished the prisoners at the jail in the last three years. The other fifteen members are abstainers and voted against allowance of the bill.

This action was taken after an animated discussion. In the two previous years the sheriff's tobacco account has been disallowed. Attorney Louis E. Stewart of Battle Creek advised the solons that if the tobacco furnished to the prisoners was a necessity they could legally and should allow the bill.

Supervisor L. C. Miller asked the sheriff if the tobacco had been furnished the prisoners on a doctor's prescription. The sheriff recalled that Maud Lem of Battle Creek was taken sick in jail and that the doctor instructed him to get a package of cigarettes, after smoking which the woman rapidly recovered. Ald. Howes of Marshall, an inveterate smoker, declared that if he was deprived of tobacco two days he would die. Then the vote was taken and King Nicotine made good.

BILLBOARD EVIL GROWS.

Even Sacred Historic Places Disfigured by Advertisers.

It is said that the war department is unable to discover any legal grounds to warrant the department's official interference with the proposal to place colossal advertisements in the sea over against the board walk at Atlantic City, where the thousands who visit the shore for rest and recreation cannot fail to be immediately made aware of the looming defacement of the marine landscape.

The war department intimates that if preventive measures are to be taken it is for the city and not for the federal government to say what these measures shall be. The municipal administration of Atlantic City cannot act too promptly to prevent for the present and for the future any such desecration of the seaward vista as these overenterprising advertisers have proposed.

It is said that in Ephesus, near the temple of Diana, upon a roadway hallowed by the missionary journey of the apostle Paul, an advertisement of rugs, in enormous letters, is displayed upon the ancient walls of the sanctuary of St. Stephen's. The North cape now wears the similar disfigurement of advertising legends. The billboard nuisance that contributed to drive Ruskin into morbid seclusion is prevalent everywhere.

The story is told of a traveler near Lyons, France, who rejoiced that the aesthetic sense of one nation at least forbade flamboyant announcements that spoiled the view, and just then a huge billboard came in sight advertising in English for the benefit of American wayfarers the virtues of certain American food products.

Advertising, like competition, is the life of trade, but not every point of vantage by land or sea is the place for an advertisement, and those who try for the beautification of their towns and cities should strive to check the billboard nuisance.

ROOSEVELT UNSELFISH

Osborn Says Ex-President Is Not Aiming at Personal Political Gain.

PROGRESS G. O. P. WATCHWORD

Republican Candidate For Governor, In Speech Before State Convention, Says Pingree Was One of First Progressive Leaders—People Are Now In Power, He Says.

Chase S. Osborn, in his speech before the Republican state convention, said, in part:

"Michigan Republicans are concerned first for the state and secondly for the party, but always for both, which is as it should be. They are determined that their state shall be the best governed in the nation, and they are equally insistent that the Republican party shall be the instrument of that accomplishment.

G. O. P. Reflects People's Character.

"It is profoundly satisfying to see the internal activity of the grand old party in its successful effort to prune and purge itself, accomplish a poised development in harmony with the times and take a position of new usefulness to nation, state and all the people. There can be no organic or fundamental weakness in the Republican party that does not exist in or of the people, because it has been for ages the party of majority and must have taken on the character of the majority of the people. The Democratic party has lost its best men to the Republican party because they could find within the Republican party opportunity to serve their state. They found that in failure the Democratic party led only to a dismal nowhere, and it waned to a point where it even lost the powers of adequate criticism, all so necessary to a government by a free people. To compensate for this loss the Republican party instinctively took itself over to careful introspection, asked itself a number of most pertinent questions and out of it all has come a new band of progressive Republicans led by the most fearless and able public man in the world today, Theodore Roosevelt.

"Thus, out of the old party chrysalis will come a newer and better Republican party, more alert than ever to guard the interests of all the people and guide the nation to the highest achievement of human destiny.

M. C. Dominated State Politics.

"Under the old regime the Chicago Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St Paul railroad companies owned Wisconsin politically; the Michigan Central dominated Michigan politics; the New York Central, United States Express company and allied interests ruled in New York. There came a LaFollette in Wisconsin, a Pingree in Michigan, a Roosevelt in New York. Similar conditions existed in almost all the states, and nearly all have developed progressive leaders to wrest them from the powers of privilege. Philetus Sawyer and John C. Spooner tried to run over LaFollette with the car of political juggernaut. This embittered the young fighting man and made of him an extremist. The Michigan Central machine fought Pingree, but the people saw in him a sturdy champion of their rights and supported him. Platt and Depew fought Roosevelt to their discomfiture and defeat.

"So the people find themselves in power. But in power they must be right and just. Individual injustice is bad enough, but in its destructiveness it cannot be compared with the power for evil of public injustice. The future will show the public viewpoint to be fair.

Roosevelt Marvelous Leader.

"I may be pardoned for calling attention to the rather unusual fact that all, or nearly all, of the progressive leaders are great political lawyers who have never had business experience and for whom it may be difficult to see the commercial viewpoint. They will undoubtedly appreciate this fact and seek counsel of honest and patriotic business men of wide accomplishments. Selfishness may be trusted, usually, to care for the commercial side of the nation's interest, leaving another and, in the past, rarer instinct to develop and guard the ethical interest. Personally, I believe that Theodore Roosevelt is not only a marvelous leader, but is unselfish and is not aiming at personal political gain; that he is a teacher and preacher whose power for usefulness is greater as a private citizen than as president.

"Our race will not be one for martial supremacy of the world, but for love and mercy and justice. The impudence and unhappiness of wealth will disappear before the better attribute of heart. There will be no servant and no master, but a friendship and brotherhood where the strong will help the weak. Until these things come to pass the thin veneer of civilization will illy conceal the barbarian beneath.

"So let us work together for our mutual refinement and improvement, nor fearing Pope's lines:

"Truths would you teach or save a sinking land?
All fear, none aid you, and few understand."

lings. Undeniably pretty, graceful in her movements, bearing herself with certainty and poise, who was she? Where did she come from? And what in the world was she doing here?

He became aware that "Fingerless" Fraser was making the introductions. "This is Mr. Emerson. My name is French. I'm one of the Virginia Frenches, you know. Perhaps you have heard of them. No? Well, they're the real thing."

Emerson forestalled her acknowledgement by breaking in roughly:

"His name isn't French at all, madam; it's Fraser—'Fingerless' Fraser. He's an utterly worthless rogue and absolutely unreliable, so far as I can learn. I picked him up on the ice in Norton sound with a marshal at his heels."

"That marshal wasn't after me," stoutly denied Fraser, quite unabashed. "Why, he's a friend of mine—we're regular chums. Everybody knows that. He wanted to give me some papers to take outside, that's all."

Boyd shrugged his shoulders indifferently:

"Warrants!"

Their hostess, greatly amused, prevented any further argument by saying:

"I suppose you are bound for the States?"

"Yes. We intend to catch the mail boat at Katmai. I am taking Fraser along for company. It's hard traveling alone in a strange country. He's a nuisance, but he's rather amusing at times."

"I certainly am," agreed that cheerful person, now fully at his ease.

By and by the girl rose, and after showing them to a room she excused herself on the score of having to see to the dinner. When she had withdrawn "Fingerless" Fraser pursed his thin lips into a noiseless whistle, then observed:

"Well, I'll—be—gussed!"

CHAPTER II.

"WHO is she?" asked Emerson.

"You heard, didn't you? She's Miss Malotte, and she's certainly some considerable lady," answered the crook.

"Yes, but who is she? What does this mean?" Emerson pointed to the provisions and fittings about them. "What is she doing here alone?"

"Maybe you'd better ask her yourself," said Fraser.

For the first time in their brief acquaintance Emerson detected a strange note in the rogue's voice.

The Indian girl summoned them, and they followed her through the long passageway into the other house, where, to their utter astonishment, they seemed to step out of the frontier and into the heart of civilization. They found a tiny dining room perfectly appointed, in the center of which, wonder of wonders, was a round table gleaming like a deep mahogany pool, upon the surface of which floated gauzy hand worked drapery, glinting silver and sparkling crystal, the dark polish of the wood reflecting the light from shaded candles. It held a delicately figured service of blue and gold, while the selection of thin stemmed glasses all in rows indicated the character of the entertainment that awaited them. The men's eyes were too busy with the unaccustomed sight to note details carefully, but they felt soft carpet beneath their feet and observed that the walls were smooth and harmoniously papered.

"This is m-marvelous," murmured Emerson. "I'm afraid we're not in keeping."

"Indeed you are," said the girl, "and I am delighted to have somebody to talk to. It's very lonesome here."

"This is certainly a swell tepee," Fraser remarked. "How did you do it?"

"I brought my things with me from Nome."

"Nome!" ejaculated Emerson quickly.

"Yes."

"Why, I've been in Nome ever since the camp was discovered. It's strange we never met."

"I didn't stay there very long; I went back to Dawson."

Again he fancied the girl's eyes held a vague challenge, but he could not be sure, for she seated him and then gave some instructions to the Aleut girl. Boyd, becoming absorbed in his own thoughts, grew more silent as the signs of refinement and civilization about him revived memories long stifled. This was not the effect for which the girl had striven. Her younger guest's taciturnity, which grew as the dinner progressed, piqued her, so at the first opportunity she bent her efforts toward rallying him. He answered politely, but she was powerless to shake off his mood.

At last he spoke:

"You said those watchmen have instructions not to harbor travelers. Why is that?"

"It is the policy of the companies. They are afraid somebody will discover gold around here. You see, this is the greatest salmon river in the world. The 'run' is tremendous and seems to be unfailing; hence the cannery people wish to keep it all to themselves."

"I don't quite understand"—

"It is simple enough. Kuivik is so isolated and the fishing season is so short that the companies have to send their crews in from the States and take them out again every summer. Now, if gold were discovered here adults the fishermen would all quit and follow the 'strike,' which would mean the ruin of the year's catch and the loss of many hundreds of thousands of dollars. Why, this village would become a city in no time if such a thing were to happen. The whole region would fill up with miners, and not only would labor conditions be entirely upset for years, but the eyes of the world, being turned this way, other people might go into the fishing business and create a competition which would both influence prices and deplete the supply of fish in the Kuivik river. So, you see, there are many reasons why this region is forbidden to miners. You couldn't buy a pound of food nor get a night's lodging here for a king's ransom. The watchmen's jobs depend upon their unbroken bond of inhospitality, and the Indians dare not sell you anything, not even a dogfish, under penalty of starvation, for they are dependent upon the companies' stores."

"So that is why you have established a trading post of your own?"

"Oh, dear, no. This isn't a store. This food is for my men."

"Your men?"

"Yes. I have a crew out in the hills on a grub stake. This is our cache. While they prospect for gold I stand guard over the provisions."

Fraser chuckled softly. "Then you are bucking the salmon trust?"

"After a fashion, yes. I knew this country had never been gone over, so I staked six men, chartered a schooner and came down here from Nome in the early spring. We stood off the watchman, and when the supply ships arrived we had these houses completed, and my men were out in the hills where it was hard to follow them. I stayed behind and stood the brunt of things."

"But surely they didn't undertake to injure you?" said Emerson, now thoroughly interested in this extraordinary young woman.

"Oh, didn't they!" she answered, with a peculiar laugh. "You don't appreciate the character of these people. There is no real code of financial morality, and the battle for dollars is the bitterest of all contests. Of course, being a woman, they couldn't very well attack me personally, but they tried everything except physical violence, and I don't know how long they will refrain from that. These plants are owned separately, but they operate under an agreement with one man at the head. His name is Marsh—Willis Marsh—and of course he's not my friend."

"Sort of 'united we stand, divided we fall,'"

"Exactly. That spreads the responsibility and seems to leave nobody guilty for his evil deeds. The first thing they did was to sink my schooner. In the morning you will see her spars sticking up through the ice out in front there. One of their rugs 'accidentally' ran her down, although she was at anchor fully 300 feet inside the channel line. Then Marsh actually had the effrontery to come here personally and demand damages for the injury to his towboat, falsely claiming there were no lights on the schooner. When I still remained obdurate he—he"— She paused. "You may have heard of it. He killed one of my men."

WITH A QUICK STROKE HE CUT A SINGLE LEAF

"Impossible!" ejaculated Boyd.

"Oh, but it isn't impossible. Anything is possible with unscrupulous men where there is no law. They balk at nothing when in chase of money. They are different from women in that. I never heard of a woman doing murder for money."

"Was it really murder?"

"Judge for yourself. My man came down for supplies, and they got him drunk—he was a drinking man—then they stabbed him. They said a China man did it in a brawl, but Willis Marsh was to blame. They brought the poor fellow here and laid him on my steps, as if I had been the cause of it. Oh, it was horrible, horrible!"

"And you still stuck in your post?" said Emerson curiously.

"Certainly! This adventure means a great deal to me, and, besides, I will not be beaten"—the stem of the glass with which she had been toying snapped suddenly—"at anything."

The unsuspected luxury of the dining room and the excellence of the dinner itself had in a measure prepared Emerson for what he found in the living room. One thing staggered him—a piano. The bearskins on the floor, the big sleepy chairs, the reading table littered with magazines, the shelves of books, even the basket of fancy work—all these he could accept without further parleying, but a piano—in Kuivik!

Again Boyd withdrew into that silent mood from which no effort on the part of his hostess could arouse him, and it soon became apparent from the listless hang of his hands and the distant light in his eyes that he had even become unconscious of her presence in the room.

After an hour, during which Emerson barely spoke, she tired of Fraser's anecdotes, which had long ceased to be amusing, and, going to piano, stuffed the sheet music idly, inquiring:

"Do you care for music?" Her remark was aimed at Emerson, but the other answered: "My favorite hymn is the 'Maple Leaf Rag.' Let her go, professor."

Cherry settled herself obligingly and played ragtime. She was in the midst of some syncopated measure when Boyd spoke abruptly, "Please play something."

She understood what he meant and began really to play, realizing very soon that at least one of her guests knew and loved music. Under her deft fingers the instrument became a medium for musical speech. Gay roundelays, swift, passionate Hungarian dances, bold Wagnerian strains followed in quick succession, and the more her utter abandon the more certainly she felt the younger man respond. Then her dream filled eyes widened as she listened to his voice breathing life into the words. He sang with the ease and flexibility of an artist, his powerful baritone blending perfectly with her contralto.

For the first time she felt the man's personality, his magnetism, as if he had dropped his cloak and stood at her side in his true semblance.

"Oh, thank you," she breathed.

"Thank you," he said. "I—I—that's the first time in ages that I've had the heart to sing. I was hungry for music; I was starving for it. I've sat in my cabin at night longing for it until my soul fairly ached with the silence."

He took a seat near the girl and continued to talk feverishly, unable to give voice to his thoughts rapidly enough.

Fraser ambled clumsily into the conversation. Emerson listened tolerantly, idly running through the magazines at his hand, his hostess watching him covertly. Suddenly the smile of amusement that lurked about his lip corners and gave him a pleasing look hardened in a queer fashion. He started, then stared at one of the pages, while the color died out of his brown cheeks. Cherry saw the hand that held the magazine tremble. He looked up at her and, disregarding Fraser, broke in harshly:

"Have you read this magazine?"

"Not entirely."

"I'd like to take one page of it."

"Why, certainly," she replied.

He produced a knife and with one quick stroke cut a single leaf out of the magazine, which he folded and thrust into the breast of his coat.

"Thank you," he muttered, then fell to staring ahead of him, again heedless of his surroundings. This abrupt relapse into his former state of sullen and defiant silence tantalized the girl. He offered no explanation and took no further part in the conversation until, noting the lateness of the hour, he rose and thanked her for her hospitality in the same deadly, indifferent manner.

"The music was a great treat," he said, looking beyond her and holding aloof, "a very great treat. I enjoyed it immensely. Good night."

Cherry Malotte had experienced a new sensation, and she didn't like it. She vowed angrily that she disliked men who looked past her. Indeed, she could not recall any other who had ever done so. Her chief concern had always been to check their ardor. She resolved viciously that before she was through with this young man he would make her a less listless adieu. She assured herself that he was a selfish, sullen boor, who needed to be taught a lesson in manners for his own good if for nothing else. She darted to the table, snatched up the magazine and skimmed through it feverishly. Ah, here was the place!

A woman's face with some meaningless name beneath filled each page. Along the top ran the heading, "Famous American Beauties." So it was a woman! She skipped backward and forward among the pages for further possible enlightenment, but there was no article accompanying the pictures. It was merely an illustrated section devoted to the photographs of prominent actresses and society women, most of whom she had never heard of, though here and there she saw a name that was familiar. In the center was that tantalizingly clean cut edge which had subtracted a face from the gallery—a face which she wanted very much to see.

She shrugged her shoulders carelessly. Then, in a sudden access of fury, she flung the mutilated magazine viciously into a far corner of the room.

The travelers slept late on the following morning, for the weariness of weeks was upon them, and the little bunk room they occupied adjoined the main building and was dark. When they came forth they found Chakawana in the store and a few moments later were called to breakfast.

"Where is your mistress?" inquired Boyd.

"She go see my sick breder," said the Indian girl, recalling Cherry's mention of the child ill with measles. "She all the time give medicine to Aleut babies," Chakawana continued, "all tha time give, give, give something. Indian people love her."

They were still talking when they heard the jingle of many bells, and the door burst open to admit Cherry, who came with a rush of youth and health as fresh as the bracing air that followed her. The cold had reddened her cheeks and quickened her eyes.

To be continued next week.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, October 22, with an attendance of twenty-one members and five visitors from Deer Lake and South Arm Granges.

The meeting was called to order by Worthy Master Olin Smith, and during the business hour, the president of the Ladies' Auxiliary announced that the next meeting would be held with Sister Cecil Nowland, Wednesday, November 9, 1910.

The lecturer's program consisted of music, songs, readings and quotations.

Grange closed in form to meet again in three weeks.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange met in regular session, Tuesday evening, October 18 and was called to order by Worthy Master E. E. Strond. Two applications for membership were received.

A motion was made and carried that the grange have an oyster supper and an open meeting to be held at the next meeting, November 1. Brother VanHonsen was appointed lecturer for the meeting. Lecturer's hour consisted of instrumental music and reading.

Grange closed in form with twenty-eight members present.

A GOOD POSITION.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or Railway Telegraphy. Since the eight-hour law became effective and since the Wireless Companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $50 to $80 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R. R. and Wireless Officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write them for full details at Cincinnati, O., or Philadelphia, Pa. 38tf

SILO BRINGS SUCCESS.

Saves Stock During Dry Season and Lowers Grain Bill.

On a trip up through the heart of New York state recently a dairy expert's attention was called to the fact that wherever he found the silo there was a general air of thrift about everything. The farm buildings would almost universally be in good condition, well painted and kept up in good shape, the fields would appear trim and in fine state of cultivation and the cattle sleek and prosperous in appearance. On the other hand, when he struck a locality where the silo was not in evidence he could not help noticing that there was a marked contrast both in the appearance of the buildings and in that of the farms themselves.

Now, was this the result of the work of the silo, or was the silo itself the result of the generally prosperous conditions? This is a question to which there can be but one answer. The silo is a splendid aid to farm success. It comes before prosperity, not after it. The man who has a silo can keep almost as many cattle again as the one who has none, and he can make those cows pay him better.

Take it along in the summer, and grass in the pasture gets dry and hard. There is not nearly as much substance to it as there was earlier in the season. Unless something is done the cows will drop off in their milk yield and away will go the chances for success for the season. Now, if the farmer has a good silo to fall back on he can keep up his flow of milk and keep more cows and keep them better than if he were dependent on the pasture alone.

Then, too, grain is costly in these days, whether we grow it on our own farms or buy it. The silo cuts the grain bill down splendidly and thus adds to the farmer's bank account. The first cost of a silo is most always what stands between the farmer and building one of them. But if he puts up a good one it will last for many years without any expense for repairs. There is always a temptation to build a cheap silo.

That is the poorest kind of economy. Anything cheap is always expensive. It wears or gives out soon, and we are compelled to go all over it again.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

A Popular Department

The National department of Scientific Temperance Instruction is rejoicing over the fact that the Gulick text-books are to be used in the Chicago school, 100,000 copies having been ordered. The department has also been instrumental in their adoption by the schools of Boston, Rockford Ill., is also on the Gulick list. At the teachers' institute, recently held at Oregon, Ill., Mrs. Edith Smith Davis met many of the Illinois superintendents who expressed a desire to cooperate in every way in her plans. Mrs. Davis attended a series of teachers' institutes this summer where her lectures were highly esteemed often being characterized as "the finest thing on the program." She is supplying helpful material to superintendents of schools, teachers and all other interested parties. Local W. C. T. U. superintendents of this department will do well to study the plans and literature Mrs. Davis has to offer. As an experienced teacher she has kept up with all advances in educational lines and is well calculated to be a teacher of teachers.

The National W. C. T. U. rejoices in the growth and popularity of this department, and in the cordial feeling established between it and many of the leading teachers of the United States.

A New Kansas Raid

The Kansas "drys" have adopted a new slogan. "The next best thing to having Kansas a prohibition state is to make Missouri a prohibition state." This is turning the tables on the whiskyites who have long considered all dry territory legitimate prey for their business. Members of the Mercantile Club of Kansas City, Kansas, and the Commercial Club of Topeka have agreed to pay all the expenses of the "raid on the Missouri 'wets.'" Already the following notables have been engaged as speakers between October 1 and 7: Tom McNeal, state printer; Dave Leahy, secretary to Governor Stubbs; John Marshall, the assistant attorney general, and J. K. Codding, warden of the State Penitentiary at Lansing. Chancellor Strong of the Kansas State University, William Allen White, Victor Murdock, and Henry J. Allen are engaged for the night meetings. Two great meetings are to be held—one in The Coliseum, St. Louis, Sunday afternoon, October 16, and the other in Convention Hall, Kansas City, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, October 23. Governor Stubbs, Attorney General Jackson and other Kansans will be the speakers.

It has long been conceded that one of the greatest difficulties confronting prohibition states is the business of the "wets," just across the state lines. Kansas is finding a new application of the law of self-preservation which it would be well for other prohibition states to follow. The whiskyites have no imaginary lines dividing their business interests. They stand as a unit against prohibition; but the prohibitionists have never before enlarged their field of action to include more than the territory of one State. It is to be hoped that the example of Kansas in helping Missouri in its prohibition campaign may make a new and important era in the struggle for national prohibition.

Summary of the New Fashion Features

"For the fall and winter wardrobe Lady Fashion has put her seal of approval upon the short coat and the scant, plain skirt," says Grace Margaret Gould in Woman's Home Companion for October. "She also favors the one-piece coat dress for autumn wear, and whatever the color of the fabric, she recommends a touch of black in the way of satin cordings or braid.

"She likes the deep sailor collar and she suggests trimming it with either fur or moire bands.

"She says, 'Let the high waistline be the vogue and use shirrings wherever you care to as a trimming.'

"She nodded her head in favor of the collarless neck, but she kindly says, 'Don't wear it if it is unbecoming.'

"Sleeves are long or short, according to the type of gown, but always they are small.

"The peasant waist with the sleeve cut in one with bodice continues to fashionable.

"Flat, deep lingerie collars, decidedly quaint looking, will be worn with many of the smartest autumn dresses.

"The most modish evening wraps are of black chiffon over a brilliant color. Royal blue and black in combination are much liked. All the wraps are cut on slender lines.

"Though velvet, brocades and matlasses are in favor for evening costumes, yet the transparent fabrics are just as much in style. The veiled effect knows no abating.

"The matching blouse of chiffon or marquisette continues to be the proper waist to wear with the coat-and-skirt suit."

TICKET NAMED BY PEOPLE

At the Primary Election Last September.

WHO THE VARIOUS CANDIDATES ARE

Ford P. Robbins and Dwight H. Fitch are New Men.

While the Rest Have Had Valuable Experience in the Offices Which They Seek.

The Republican party faces the contest next Tuesday confident of success with the standard bearers who were named at the primary to uphold its banner.

Charles E. Townsend its candidate for United States senator, has been at the fore-front in the battle in the national congress for progessive legislation, and enjoys the confidence of Taft, Roosevelt and the progressive leaders.

Chase S. Osborn, for governor, "Michigan's Roosevelt," has constantly grown in public favor and the people realize that a man of his vigorous personality is needed in the executive chair.

John Q. Ross, our candidate for lieutenant-governor, is a prominent citizen of Muskegon, who was the first president of the Western Michigan Development bureau.

All the rest of the candidates for state offices have served one term and have made good officials.

Francis H. Dodds has made a record as a hard worker in congress hardly ever equalled by a first termer.

Frank D. Scott, for state senator, is a worker and hustler from the the word go, who would always be alive to the interests of this district.

William J. Pearson, for state representative, made a record during the last session as a worker and his experience would be of immense valne to Charlevoix county now. Like Mr. Scott he is pledged to cast his vote for Townsend for United States senator.

Ford P. Robbins, for sheriff, is a young hustler from Boyne Falls, who won out in a fair fight at the primary and is entitled to the support of every republican. His service on the board of supervisors

FRANCIS H. DODDS
Republican Candidate for Congressman.

JOHN Q. ROSS
Republican Candidate for Lieut.-Governor

would be of value to you and himself as sheriff. He promises a strict and impartial enforcement of the law if elected.

Daniel S. Payton, for clerk, has the reputation, all over the state, of being one of the best clerks in Michigan. As director of the West Michigan Development bureau he has done immense amount of work for Charlevoix county and the same energy which he put into development work has marked his administration of the clerk's office—always on the lookout for improvement.

Richard Lewis, our county treasurer, is a faithful hardworking public official in whom the people have the fullest confidence. In every position of trust, to which he has been called, faithfulness has been his motto.

Romeo A. Emrey, register of deeds, has made a first-class official and his four years experience in this important office has placed him in a position where he can give you, if possible, better service in the future than in the past.

Dwight H. Fitch, for prosecuting attorney, is a lawyer of several year's experience who has never before asked for public office. As prosecutor he would bring to the office the services of an attorney whose year's of practice would enable him to conduct the legal affairs of the county in an economical manner.

E. A. Ruesegger for circuit court commissioner, is the only representative of Boyne City on the ticket.

Earnest A. Robinson, for county surveyor, has served you before and is a competent engineer.

William R. Cowan would fill the office of drain commissioner to the satisfaction of everybody.

Drs. A. M. Wilkinson and R. B. Armstrong are prominent physicians of Charlevoix who are well fitted for the important office of coroners.

Townsend Not Elected.

Remember Townsend is not elected yet, only an advisory vote was taken in September. The legislature will elect senators next winter. If you are in favor of the election of Mr. Townsend you must cast your vote for Scott and Pearson, both of whom are pledged to cast their vote for Mr. Townsend.

LARGER THAN EVER

International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago

November 26 to December 3—Will be Great Educator.

The eleventh anniversary of the International Live Stock Exposition will be held at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, on the dates of November 26 to December 3 and will be wider in scope, larger in entries and greater in importance than any of its predecessors.

Seventy-five thousand dollars will be given away in prizes, which will be awarded by the most expert and distinguished judges in this country and from abroad.

The importance of the show from a breeding as well as an educational point of view cannot be measured, realized or understood except from a personal visit and a systematic study of its extraordinary proceedings.

Most excellent newspaper accounts are published, and the breeders' and farmers' journals deal with it in a most comprehensive and masterly manner; it must be studied to be understood.

It is the greatest school of instruction of its kind that has ever been presented to breeders, farmers, stockmen and others who are interested in the live stock industry and an institution of practical information that teaches in a fortnight more than can be learned in double, treble and quadruple the time anywhere else.

The International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago is a stockman's store of knowledge, an encyclopedia of breeding and feeding information that is presented in such practical, simple and easily understood methods, that the interested intelligent visitor must of a necessity carry away with him a fund of useful and practical information that he could not buy for dollars anywhere else in so short a time.

The lessons learned from watching the judging by these masters of live stock breeding cannot be gained from books.

The comparison of the various champions and other prize winners with their less fortunate brethern shows the breeder and students the weak points and shortcomings of those which do not reach the required standard; and so these men go home, carrying with them an object lesson that can be acquired nowhere else, and a fund of breeding knowledge that will stand by them and be their very best friend.

Every one whose calling, whose work, and whose interests are centered in the breeding and feeding industry should religiously attend this exposition, for it will pay him over and over again, no matter what the apparent cost may be.

STATE GRANGE MEETING

Big Preparations are Being Made for the Next Session

Displays of Agricultural Products from all Sections of Western Michigan.

Big preparations are being made for the thirty-eighth session of the Michigan State Grrage, which session will be held in Traverse City, December 13 to 16. This is probably the last meeting of the state organization in this section for some years. Traverse City people are planning to outdo themselves in the matter of getting their advantages before the people of the state. They are going to give the grangers a "rip snorter" of a time.

One feature that is schednled for the state meeting is a big agricultural fair with premiums for fruits, grains, vegetables and fancy work. This fair will be in the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. building just across the street from where the state grange meeting will be held. Among the premiums is one of $25 for the best show of fruit, grains and vegetables from a single farm. There will be no admission charge to this fair.

The Traverse City board of trades fine exhibit of fruits in glass will be on display grange week. This is worth going a long way to see.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau is to be asked to make a showing of the farm products of its territory grange week.

Nat Burns of Charlevoix has been appointed chairman of a committee to make a Charlevoix county display for the edification of the farmers who will attend state grange. He has been assured that the people of Traverse City will aid bu furnishing a suitable place for the display of the products.

The matter of a Leelanau county farm products display will be taken up at a grange meeting to be held at Empire Wednesday of this week.

The latter part of November a Benzie county grange fair will be held at Honor and the best exhibits will be saved to show the state grangers.

IN FOURTEEN COUNTIES

Was Appropriations Made for Work of Development Bureau.

The board of supervisors of fourteen of the twenty counties comprising western Michigan, made appropriations at their meetings held last month for the carrying on of development work. A year ago the boards in five counties made such appropriations. The increase in interest among the supervisors is an effective testimonial of the work being done by the Western Michigan Development Bureau. In the six counties where the boards failed to make provisions for the support of the bureau, funds will be raised by public subscription. Without a doubt a year from now every county falling in the territory known as western Michigan will meet the expenses of the work of progress by suitable appropriations.

The Western Michigan Development bureau is not two years old yet it has made the region that it is advertising, fairly well known in all parts of the United States. It has caused thousands of people looking for new places to locate to direct their eyes toward the opportunities along the western shores of Lake Michigan. Judging the future by the past, the next few years will bring a prosperity to the region undreampt of by the promoters of the bureau.

WON FROM BELLAIRE

Charlevoix Wins Saturday's Game by Forty-Five to Nothing.

Next Saturday Will Meet East Jordan on Home Grounds in Fast Game.

The high school football team won its fourth victory Saturday by defeating Bellaire by the overwhelming score of 45 to 0. The boys could easily have won by a much larger score but they found it was not necessary to exert themselves to the utmost. The Bellaire boys would make a strong team if properly trained but as it was they did not understand the game. Once, by a fumble after they had punted they had the ball within five yards of the goal and chances were good for a touch down. But the local team stood like a stone wall and the ball went into their possession.

The local team have as enviable record as any team in northern Michigan and as good a claim to the championship as Traverse City. Their record thus far is: East Jordan 0 Charlevoix 10; Petoskey 5 Charlevoix 8; Boyne City 0 Charlevoix 6; Harbor Springs 0 Charlevoix 25; Bellaire 0 Charlevoix 15. Thus far they have won 88 points and lost 5.

Saturday they meet the strong East Jordan eleven on the home gounds and it promises to be an interesting game. Be sure and come out and root the boys to victory.

The lineup Saturday was as follows:

Left end—Mitchell 2.
Left tackle—J. Papineau.
Left guard—McGeagh.
Center—Durance.
Right guard—Gray, Allard.
Right end—George Papineau.
Quarter—Wallace.
Left half—Powers.
Full back—Kruhk.
Right half—Capt. Hull.
Touchdowns—Hull 2, Kruhk 2, Powers 3.
Goal kicks—Powers 3, Mitchell 1.

A BUSY LIFE IS ENDED

Professor Henry M. Enos is Called by Death.

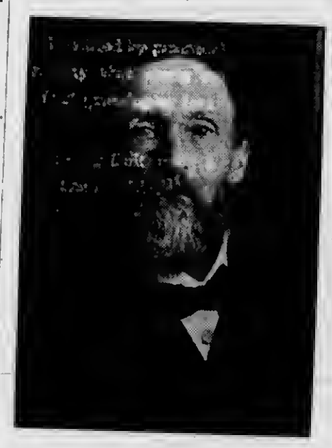
WAS CHARLEVOIX'S FOREMOST CITIZEN

Founder of Our Present Unequalled School System.

Leader in all that Went to Make a Better City—Had Held Many Official Positions of Trust.

Sunday morning the citizens of Charlevoix were shocked to learn that Professor H. M. Enos was no more, although it was not unexpected as he had been confined to his home for several months.

Henry M. Enos might well be called Charlevoix's leading citizen, as in all things which went to make a better Charlevoix, educationally, socially, politically and in a business way he was always found in the front ranks and no man enjoyed the love and esteem of his fellow citizens more.



Henry M. Enos was born in Wayne county, New York, October 30, 1840, his parents being E. B. and Z. I. Enos. When four years of age he came to Michigan with his parents locating in Lenawee county later moving to Jackson county, where he was raised on a farm. Mr. Enos received his education in the public schools of Jackson county and Union college at Leoni, and Adrian college, of which he was a graduate. He began his career as a school teacher at the age of eighteen while continuing his college work. After graduation he followed the occupation of farming afterward resuming teaching, which he followed for a full score years. He was superintendent of the public school of Ovid and Mapleton, Clinton county for six years, afterward serving in the same position in Cadillac. He came to Charlevoix as superintendent in 1881 serving eight years when he became identified with the business he followed until his death.

When Prof. Enos took charge of the Charlevoix schools the entire teaching force consisted of five teachers including himself. When he retired the corps consisted of twelve teachers, and the enrollment of pupils had increased from one hundred and eighty to over four hundred and fifty.

To Professor Enos is the high standing of Charlevoix's school system indebted. He completed the grading and established the high school, the first class graduating in 1888 with six members.

Professor Enos was a stanuch re-

How to Make a Buttonhole.

Always mark the buttonhole and be careful to accurately measure the distances they are to be apart; then cut the first one and pass the button through. Mark the size of the rest with thread or chalk and cut them with regular buttonhole scissors; then overcast the edges with twist and bar each hole. Begin at the back end of the buttonhole and work the usual stitch, drawing the twist evenly and firmly, but not too tightly, all along to the front end. Work this round almost as if it were an eyelet very closely; then continue up the other side till you come to the back. This should be fastened squarely by several neat stitches laid loosely one on top of the other; then take all these up with buttonhole stitch, forming a strong loop that will hold the buttonhole firmly as long as the garment is wearable.

How to Candy Violets.

Select large blooms with long stems for candied violets. Wash thoroughly and shake them free from moisture. Make a syrup that snaps, flavor it with any desired flavor and partially chill the syrup. Hold the violet by the stem and dip into the syrup and lay each singly upon a plate of powdered sugar. When cold and firm cut off the stems. The candied flowers are pretty in boxes of candy and are often used as ornamental garnishes on fruit salads and ices. The flowers can be eaten.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointments when they thought relief in their grasp but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lectures to student classes, way back in '71. Since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

Will Never Ask, let me help you regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yours once more.

If you are suffering from failing vitality, lame back or weakened manhood or some of the difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A REMEDY in a plain sealed package that you can use in your own home. I am confident you will thank me every day in your life and have relief for yourself.

Neighborhood Notes

Mrs. Blanche Fancett, of Cadillac eighteen years old, died late Thursday afternoon from overexertion. The girl had married six months ago against the wish of her parents. The couple immediately started housekeeping. Employed in a factory the young husband found that his earnings barely covered expenses. Thursday morning a load of wood came. As the couple lived over a store considerable work was necessary to carry it upstairs. Thinking how tired her husband would be when he returned from work evenings the girl wife herself carried the wood upstairs. Dinner time yesterday found her prostrated. A few hours later she died her head resting in her husband's arms her last words being, "Forgive me, Harry. I thought you would be so glad to have me help you."

We print the following dispatch from South Bend, Ind., to the Cadillac Evening News, under date of October 26:

"Miss Grace Gilbert of Kalkaska, Mich., the famous bearded lady, who has traveled for years with the Wallace Bros.' circus, was married here today to Giles F. Calvio, a Kalkaska county farmer, whose farm joins that of Miss Gilbert's in the same county. Miss Gilbert's whiskers are her fortune. A rather scraggy beard covers her face, the hair being a reddish hue. She has amassed a fortune in the circus business and is an extensive land owner in Kalkaska county, Mich., where she spends her winters."

Figures which have been compiled by the city clerk show that Cadillac has paid the bounty on 5,835 rats during the last year. Dr. Copier was presented with a set of figures and was rather surprised in spite of the fact that he has paid for every single one of the rats. The largest rat purchased by the city measured about twenty inches in length, while the largest family numbered sixteen.

After an all-day fight the board of supervisors decided, by a vote of 13 to 8, to submit the local option question to the electors of Genesee next spring. The motion obtained exactly the required number to carry.

The vets exploded a conger mine after their original affidavits had been declared void, by obtaining new affidavits from the men who posted the petitions. An all-night chase over the county enabled them to get affidavits and when the board met these were presented. A warm contest ensued, three ballots being taken, in which the board split so evenly that the question did not receive a sufficient number of votes to carry.

Prosecuting Attorney Harker, after viewing the new affidavits, advised the submission of the question.

Quite often we hear the expression, "He has bees in his bonnet." W. H. Gray of Liberty, however, has them in his attic. He has recently discovered them going in and out of a knot-hole in the upper part of his house, and investigation showed that a swarm were lying up a stock of their toothsome product in the attic. Gray says he will not molest them until the house is full of honey, when he will harvest the crop of the busy workers and live on sweetness the rest of his life.—Manton Record.

Finding that the summer cottages of Detroiters and other in Leelanau township, Leelanau county, on Grand Traverse bay, are being markedly underassessed for state taxation purposes, the state tax board has raised the taxable valuation in that county from $321,000 to $1,021,000. This the biggest boost yet.

What It Means to Farmers.

It is essential that farmers know how and what crops to produce most profitably, but what is the use of knowing that unless the farmer has a road over which he can haul his harvest? Why save money by practicing farming methods and lose money in hauling produce to market?

To Make Roads For Autos.

Plans for the laying out of county roads near Jacksonville, Fla., so that the center could be used for teams and each side for automobiles have been submitted to the board. The purpose of the plans is to reduce the possibility of collisions between autos and wagons.

Use the Split Log Drag.

Where people cannot build a permanent road they can at least grade and crown the dirt road, using a split log drag, and, while the immediate cost is more, it will pay them to build concrete bridges on such roads rather than wooden bridges.

The Silver Horde

By REX BEACH

Author of "The Spoilers" and "The Barrier"

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

"Good morning, gentlemen!" she cried, removing the white fur hood which gave a setting to her sparkling eyes and teeth. "Oh, but it's a glorious morning! We did the five miles from the village in seventeen minutes."

"And how is your measly patient?" asked Fraser.

"He's doing well, thank you." She stepped to the door to admit Chakawana, who had evidently hurried around from the other house and now came in, bareheaded and heedless of the cold, bearing a bundle clasped to her breast. "I brought the little fellow home with me. See!"

"I dare say Kalvik is rather lively during the summer season," Emerson remarked to Cherry later in the day.

"Yes; the ships arrive in May, and the fish begin to run in July. After that nobody sleeps."

"It must be rather interesting."

"It is more than that; it is inspiring. Why, the story of the salmon is an epic in itself. You know they live a cycle of four years, no more, always returning to the waters of their nativity to die. And I have heard it said that during one of those four years they disappear, no one knows where, reappearing out of the mysterious depths of the sea as if at a signal. They come by the legion, in countless scores of thousands, and when once they have tasted the waters of their birth they never touch food again, never cease their onward rush until they become bruised and battered wrecks, drifting down from the spawning beds. When the call of nature is answered and the spawn is laid they die. They never seek the salt sea again, but carpet the rivers with their bones. When they feel the homing impulse they come from the remotest depths, heading unerringly for the particular parent stream whence they originated. If sand bars should block their course in dry seasons or obstacles intercept them they will hurl themselves out of the water in an endeavor to get across. They may disregard a thousand rivers one by one, but when they finally taste the sweet currents which flow from their birthplaces their whole nature changes, and even their physical features alter. They grow thin, and the head takes on the sinister curve of the preying bird.

"Why, you just ought to witness the 'run.' These empty waters become suddenly crowded, and the fish come in a great silver horde, which races up, up, up toward death and obliteration. They come with the violence of a summer storm; like a prodigious, gleaming army they swarm and bend forward, eager, undeviating, one purposed. It's quite impossible to describe it, this great silver horde. They are entirely defenseless, of course, and almost every living thing preys upon them. The birds congregate in millions, the four footed beasts come down from the hills, the Apaches of the sea harry them in dense droves, and even man appears from distant coasts to take his toll, but still they press bravely on. The clank of machinery makes the hills rumble; the hiss of steam and the sighs of the soldering furnaces are like the complaint of some giant overgorging himself."

"How long does it all last?"

"Only about six weeks; then the furnace fires die out, the ships are loaded, the men go to sleep, after which Kalvik sags back into its ten months' coma, becoming, as you see it now, a dead, deserted village, shunned by man."

"But I don't see how those huge plants can pay for their upkeep with such a short run."

"Well, they do, and, what's more, they pay tremendously, sometimes 100 per cent a year or more.

"Two years ago a ship sailed into port in early May loaded with an army of men with machinery, lumber, coal, and so forth. They landed, built the plant and had it ready to operate by the time the run started. They made their catch and sailed away again in August with enough salmon in the hold to pay twice over for the whole thing. Willis Marsh did even better than that the year before, but of course the price of fish was high then. Next season will be another big year."

"How is that?"

"Every fourth season the run is large; nobody knows why. Every time there is a presidential election the fish are shy and very scarce; that lifts prices. Every year in which a president of the United States is inaugurated they are plentiful."

Emerson rose.

"I had no idea there were such profits in the fisheries up here."

"Nobody knows it outside of those interested. The Kalvik river is the most wonderful salmon river in the world, for it has never failed once. That's why the companies guard it so jealously."

It was evident that the young man was vitally interested now.

"What does it cost to install and operate a cannery for the first season?"

"About $200,000, I am told. But I believe one can mortgage his catch or borrow money on it from the banks, and so not have to carry the full burden."

"What's to prevent me from going into the business?"

"Several things. Have you the money?"

"Possibly. What else?"

"A site."

"That ought to be easy."

Cherry laughed. "On the contrary, a suitable cannery site is very hard to get, because there are natural conditions necessary, fresh flowing water for one, and, furthermore, because the companies have taken them all up."

"Ah! I see." The light died out of Emerson's eyes; the eagerness left his voice. He flung himself dejectedly into a chair by the fire, moodily watching the flames licking the burning logs. All at once he gripped the arms of his chair and muttered through set jaws, "God, I'd like to take one more chance."

CHAPTER III.

THE girl darted a swift look at Boyd, but he fell to brooding again, evidently insensible to her presence. At length he stirred himself to ask:

"Can I hire a guide hereabout? We'll have to be going on in a day or so."

"Constantine will get you one. I suppose, of course, you will avoid the Katmai pass?"

"Avoid it? Why?"

"It's dangerous, and nobody travels it except in the direst emergency. It's much the shortest route to the coast, but it has a record of some thirty deaths. I should advise you to cross the range farther east, where the divide is lower. The mail boat touches at both places."

On the following morning Cherry told Constantine to hitch up her team and have it waiting when breakfast was finished. Then she turned to Emerson, who came into the room and said quietly:

"I have something to show you if you will take a short ride with me."

The young man, impressed by the gravity of her manner, readily consented. Constantine freed the leader, and they went off at a mad run. They skimmed over the snow with the flight of a bird.

The young man gave himself up to the unique and rather delightful experience of being transported through an unknown country to an unknown destination by a charming girl of whom he also knew nothing.

"Yesterday you seemed to be taken by the fishing business," she finally said.

"I certainly was until you told me there were no cannery sites left."

"There is one. When I came here a year ago the whole river was open, so on an outside chance I located a site, the best one available. When Willis Marsh learned of it he took up all of the remaining places, and, although at the time I had no idea what I was going to do with my property, I hung on to it."

"I can't buy your site."

"Nobody asked you to," she smiled "I wouldn't sell it to you if you had

TOGETHER THEY ASCENDED THE BANK AND SURVEYED THE SURROUNDINGS.

the money, but if you will build a cannery on it I'll turn in the ground for an interest."

Emerson meditated a moment then replied, "I can't say yes or no. It's a pretty big proposition—$200,000, you said?"

"Yes. It's a big opportunity. You can clean up 100 per cent in a year. Do you think you could raise the money to build a plant?"

"I might," he said cautiously.

"At least you can try?"

"But I don't know anything about the business."

"I've thought of all that, and there's a way to make success certain. I believe you have executive ability and can handle these men."

"Oh, yes, I've done that sort of thing." His broad shoulders went up as he drew a long breath. "What's your plan?"

"There's a man down the coast, George Bait, who knows more about the business than any four people in Kalvik. He discovered the Kalvik river, built the first cannery here and was its foreman until he quarreled with Marsh. Bait isn't the kind of man to be disciplined, so, not having enough money to build a cannery, he took his scanty capital and started a saltery on his own account. Marsh broke George in a year, ruined him, utterly wiped him out, just as he intends to wipe out insignificant me. Thinking to recoup his fortunes, George came back into camp, but he owns a valuable trap site which Marsh and his colleagues want, and before they would give him work they tried to make him assign it to them and contract never to go in business on his own account. Naturally George refused. He's been starving now for two years.

"No man dares to furnish food to George Bait; no man dares to give him a bed; no cannery will let him work. He has to take a dory to Dutch Harbor to get food. He doesn't dare leave the country and abandon the meager thousands he has invested in buildings, and every summer when the run starts he comes across the marshes and ailuka about the Kalvik thickets like a wraith, watching from afar just in order to be near it all. He stands alone and forsaken, harking to the clank of machinery, every bolt of which he placed, watching his enemies enrich themselves from that gleaming silver army, which he considers his very own. He is shunned like a leper. Some time I believe he will kill Marsh."

"Hm-m! One seems to be forever crossing the trail of this Marsh," said Boyd, who had listened intently.

"The man who beats Marsh will have done something." She paused, then said deliberately, "And I believe you are the one to do it."

They had reached their destination—the mouth of a deep creek, up which Cherry turned her dogs. Emerson leaped from the sled and, running forward, seized the leader, guiding it into a clump of spruce, among the holes of which he tangled the harness, for this team was like a pack of wolves, ravenous for travel and intolerant of the leash.

Together they ascended the bank and surveyed the surroundings. Cherry expatiated upon every feature with the fervor of a land agent bent on weaving his spell about a prospective buyer. And in truth she had chosen well, for the conditions seemed ideal.

"I've watched you, and I know you are down on your luck for some reason," the girl said. "You've been miscast somehow, and you've had the heart taken out of you, but I'm sure it's in you to succeed, for you're young and intelligent, cool and determined. I am giving you this chance to play the biggest game of your life and erase in eight short months every trace of failure. I'm not doing it altogether unselfishly, for I believe you've been sent to Kalvik to work out your own salvation and mine and that of poor George Bait, whom you've never seen. You're going to do this thing, and you're going to make it win."

Emerson reached out impulsively and caught her tiny, mittened hand. His eyes were shining; his face had lost the settled look of dejection and was all aglow with a new dawn of hope. Even his shoulders were lifted and thrown back as if from some sudden access of vigor that lightened his burden.

"You're right!" he said firmly. "We'll send for Bait tonight."

In the days that followed Cherry was at Boyd's elbow constantly, aiding him at every turn in his zeal to acquire a knowledge of the cannery system. The odd conviction grew upon her that he was working against time, that there was a limit to his period of action, for he seemed obsessed by an ever growing passion to accomplish some end within a given time and had no thought for anything beyond the engrossing issue into which he had plunged. She was dumfounded by his sudden transformation and delighted at first, but later, when she saw that he regarded her only as a means to an end, his cool assumption of leadership piqued her and she felt hurt.

Constantine had been sent for Bait with instructions to keep on until he found the fisherman even if the quest carried him over the range. During the days of impatient waiting they occupied their time largely in reconnoitering the nearest cannery, permission to go over which Cherry had secured from the watchman, who was indebted to her. The man was timid at first, but Emerson won him over, then proceeded to pump him dry of information, as he had done with his hostess.

Fraser looked on in bewilderment at the change in Emerson.

"What have you done to 'Frozen Annie?'" he asked Cherry on one occasion. "You must have fed him a speed ball, for I never saw a guy gear up so fast. Why, he was the darndest crape hanger I ever met till you got him glugered up. He didn't have no more spirit than a sick kitten."

Fraser then eyed the girl keenly.

"This is a lonely place for a woman like you," he said, "and our mutual friend ain't altogether unattractive, eh?"

Cherry's cheeks flamed, but her tone was icy. "This is entirely a business matter."

"Hm-m: I ain't never heard you touted none as a business woman," said the adventurer.

"Have you ever heard me"—the color faded from the girl's face, and it was a trifle drawn—"discussed in any way?"

"You know, Emerson makes me uncomfortable sometimes, he is so d——d moral," Fraser replied indirectly. "He won't stand for anything off color. He's a real square guy, he is, the kind you read about."

"You didn't answer my question," insisted Cherry.

Again Fraser evaded the issue. "Now, if this Marsh is going after you in earnest this summer why don't you let me stick around until spring and look out your game? I'll drop a monkey wrench in his gear case or put a spoker in his dumpling, and it's more than an even shot that if him and I got to know each other right well I'd own his cannery before fall."

"Thank you; I can take care of myself," said the girl.

Late one stormy night—Constantine had been gone a week—the two men whom they were expecting blew in through the blinding smother. Bait refused rest or nourishment until he had learned why Cherry had sent for him. As briefly as possible she outlined the situation. Boyd Emerson saw a huge, barrel chested creature whose tremendous muscles bulged beneath his nondescript garments, whose red, upstanding bristle of hair topped a leather countenance from which gleamed a pair of the most violent eyes Emerson had ever beheld, the dominant expression of which was rage. His voice was hoarse with the echo of drumming rattles. He might have lived forty, sixty years, but every year had been given to the sea; its foaming violence was in his blood.

As the significance of Cherry's words sank into his mind the signs of an un-

NEXT Tuesday's election is far more important than the electors seem to realize. For years the people have asked for the right to nominate their candidates, for public office, by direct vote. During all these years they have been able to secure but little along that line in each successive legislative session, so longingly did the old time bosses hate to give up the old system. Each year has seen a little more conceded to the people, until this year, for the first time, in Charlevoix County, the people nominated their ticket by direct vote. Does any body know of a few Republicans of this County meeting in convention and fixing a slate to be voted upon at the primary. It is a fact however, that their opponents did fix up their slate in that way, showing that they were opposed to the spirit of the primary law and believed that the few were more competent to name public officials than the many. As a consistent advocate of direct nominations we believe that as you vote this fall so will the struggle for a simplified primary law be prolonged. If you, by your votes, say that you are in favor of the methods of the opposition, in so far as they were able nullifying the principle of direct nominations, you encourage the old time bosses in their attempts to put off longer giving the people what they demand, a primary law so simple all can understand it, at the least possible expense. If, on the other hand, you stand by the Republican ticket, nominated by as fair a primary election as was ever held in Michigan, you serve notice upon the machine politicians that you are in favor of direct nominations, and after the primary you stand by the ticket which the people say is their choice. The issue in Charlevoix County is: Shall we elect the ticket of the people, named by the people—the Republican ticket,—or shall we elect the ticket of the bosses—named by the bosses—the Labor Ticket, or the Socialist Ticket. Shall we record our votes in favor of direct nominations, represented by the Republican ticket, or shall we record it in favor of the Convention system as represented by the labor party.

THE Labor party leaders claim that the Republican candidates have held office too long, let us see. Has Mr. Robbins, against whom they are making their hardest fight ever held a county office? Mr Payton has held one term in the clerk's office and two in the treasurer's office. Does his opponent refuse to serve the people of Bay, as supervisor, because he has held the office several terms? Mr. Lewis was clerk about three years and has served one term as treasurer. Didn't his opponent serve Peninsula supervisor several years? Has Mr. Fitch ever held a county office? Mr. Emrey has served the people four years as Register, can you expect a man to give up his private business and enter the public service if his term of office is to be limited to one term? Isn't the experience which Mr. Pearson has gained in the public offices, which he has held, of value to you and the people of Michigan, as representative? What we want of public servants is service and when we get that does not good sense tell us to keep them as long as we can.

LAST September the voters of Michigan and Charlevoix county expressed by an overwhelming majority their choice of Hon. Charles E. Townsend for United States senator. Do you wish to ratify that choice? If you do you must vote for Frank D. Scott for state senator and W. J. Pearson for representative, both of whom are pledged to vote for Mr. Townsend at the real election of senator, which will take place next winter in the legislature, the vote last fall being only advisory. Make no mistake. If you want Townsend for senator you must vote for Scott and Pearson.

STATE EXPENSES VS. STATE EARNINGS

Comparisons That Are Complimentary to Republican State Legislation.

Mr. Hemans, the Democratic candidate for governor, says it cost the state of Michigan $40,441,000 to meet its expenses for a period of sixty years. He then recites the further fact that an equal amount, $40,454,000, had been required to meet the state expenses during the past ten years.

Mr. Bemans makes this statement the leading feature of his campaign speech and he throws about it quite a bit of oratorical garnishment.

But here is another fact directly related to these sixty year and ten year periods which Mr. Hemans has failed to take note of.

The total earnings of the state of Michigan applicable to the primary school fund for the sixty years to which Mr. Hemans refers were only $21,697,000, while the earnings from corporation fees and railroad taxes alone applicable to primary school fund during the past ten years have been $40,000,000.

In other words, the earnings of the state of Michigan during the past ten years included in Mr. Hemans' comparison have been almost 100 per cent greater than the income of the state for the entire period of sixty years included in Mr. Hemans' statement.

And there is yet another fact which Mr. Hemans should include in his comparisons.

Two years of Democratic state administration, the only two years of that sort of administration in Michigan within the memory of the present generation, cost the people of the state of Michigan $400,000 more than twenty-four years of a previous period had cost.

At that rate ten full years of Democratic administration would have cost the people of Michigan as much as 120 years under other management.

These comparisons are interesting and valuable, perhaps but they are not valuable to Mr. Hemans for Democratic party purposes if they are given as the records of the state present them.

IT WOULD BRING DISASTER..

Business Stagnation Would Follow Democratic Victory at Polls.

An appeal that should receive earnest consideration from every every Michigan voter comes from the State Republican of Lansing. Referring to the importance of result s involved in the coming election, the State Republican says:

A Republican defeat in November would in all probability precipitate a more serious setback for all the great industries than came in the latter months of 1907. A Democratic house of representatives, if elected this year, would destroy all chances for getting the progressive legislation the Republicans promised in their platform of 1908, and would nullify everything that the Republican president and senate should attempt to do in the last half of the Taft administration.

Do the voters remember the panic of 1893, which the Republican defeat of 1892 caused? The panic came shortly after the Democratic president entered office and before the Democratic congress had a chance to assemble. Everybody who was old enough to recall the disaster of eighteen years ago will pray that no such calamity will visit the country again. The country at this moment is exceedingly prosperous. It will be still more prosperous by next fall and winter if the Republicans carry the country this year. A Democratic victory, however, would, because of the uncertainty it would bring, unquestionably call a halt on enterprise, would close many mills, would reduce wages in the mills which would continue to run, and would bring back some of the dark days which the country saw a decade and a half ago.

Eighteen years ago, the Democrats preached tariff for revenue and denounced the Republican doctrine of protection to American labor. Some Republicans—a number sufficient to make a majority—were convinced and the Democratic tariff for revenue was tried.

Business was demoralized.

Millions of men were thrown out of employment.

The farmers' market was destroyed.

Women and children went hungry because the husbands and fathers could not find work.

Men slept by night on the floors in the corridors of city halls, or in hay stacks or barns, and by day they walked the city streets or the country highways pleading for the privilege of working at any wage, or no wage except for something to eat.

That was not very long ago.

The present tariff bill may not be perfect, but it is far from a destructive measure. It's revision should be completed by a Republican congress and not by a Democratic congress.

Your vote will count for disaster and industrial stagnation, or for continued advancement and satisfactory progress.

Which shall it be?

THEATRICAL

"A Mis-spent Life"

At the Charlevoix theater on Thursday evening, November 17, will be a treat to the theater-going public of this city. Never before has a more capable local talent cast been organized. Everyone has taken part in previous plays and will prove that they can play heavy drama as well as light farcical comedy.

Special light effects will be used as in the large productions and a special drop has been secured.

The play deals with London as its environment and develops a deep mystery which the Scotland Yard detective, Newcomen, with Utterson's help unravels. Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde is a dual personage, and his use of drugs is brought out so strongly that the play is a strong moral lesson and will never be forgotten.

The cast of characters will be announced next week. Mr. Brower states that the Charlevoix City Band will give a concert before the show and that specialties will be introduced. Considerable expense and time has been put to use in making "A Mis-spent Life," a good amateur production. Remember the date is November 17, one night only.

NOTICE

There will be a ten days meeting held by the Church of God at the camp grounds, two and one-half miles south of Charlevoix, beginning November 3. Everybody is invited to attend this meeting.

SEIZED BY STATE

Immense Number of Skins From Fur Bearing Animals.

The offices of the state game and fish warden presented a unique apperance Saturday and resembled a fur store rather than an office. This fact was due to the shipments from various parts of the state of confiscated skins of fur-bearing animals which had been shipped to State Game Warden Pierce from his force of deputies.

Included in the list were 900 muskrat skins, seized at Manistee, 100 seized at Kalamazoo Friday and small lots from other sections of the state. Mink skins were also much in evidence as well as various other skins, including raccoon, skunk and otter.

These animals according to Mr. Pierce, were captured by trappers and hunters who would not await the opening of the season, which occurs November 1, and on account of their being captured out of season, the price that he will obtain for them is much lower than it would be had the animals been caught at a later date, when the fur would have been much more valuable. The consignment however will net the state several hundred dollars.

TWELVE THOUSAND DOLLARS VERDICT

Given by Gaylord Jury in Boyne City Damage Case.

A little better than a year ago two Boyne City men, J. E. Mohegan and William Spratt, were killed while in company with a man by the name of Scott, all employes of the chemical company of that city. The men were riding on a chemical company motor car, and when near the cooperage plant, were struck in the fog by a B. C., G & A. yard engine, and the two men killed. The motor car was allowed on those tracks by the railway company, by the other company signing a release for death or injury.

Mrs. Mohegan brought suit for the recovery of damages, asking for fifty thousand dollars, based on her husband's earning capacity for the ordinary expectation of life, but would compromise at nineteen thousand, and the jury at Gaylord gave her a verdict for twelve thousand dollars, but the case will probably be appealed by the White company on the grounds of the signed agreement.

Forgetful.

He was a prisoner brought up before his commanding officer for being two hours absent the night before.

"What excuse have you for being absent?" thundered the captain.

"Sure, sir," replied the offender, "I was visiting some of my friends in the country yesterday, and I left in plenty of time to return to the barracks, and when I was about halfway to the barracks I stopped to light my pipe, but the wind was so strong that I had to turn round to light it, and after many tries I succeeded and walked on only to find after an hour's walk that I was at the same place as I had started from, because I had forgot to turn round again after lighting my pipe."—London Mail.

Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway Company

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 18, 1910.

To the Stockholders of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway Company:

It is customary for your Board to meet at this time of the year, to consider the subject of a dividend, and while the Gross Earnings of the Company to September 30th, inclusive, show a fair increase, compared with last year, yet, for reasons hereafter clearly stated, the operating expenses, taxes and other payments have so increased as to leave the Company without any Net Income applicable to the payment of dividends. Your Directors, therefore, deem it their duty to lay the facts before the Stockholders.

In the year 1900, nearly thirty years after its completion, this Company declared a dividend of one per cent (the first in its history), in 1901, two per cent, and since then three per cent annually, but legislative enactments reducing passenger rates and imposing undue and oppressive taxation and legislative measures involving increased expenditures in maintenance and operation, have now, in logical sequence, compelled the passing of a dividend by your Company.

Following foreclosure proceedings in 1899, and the payment of a five per cent cash assessment, and the acceptance of stock by the holders of its five per cent bonds, your Company was reorganized on such a basis that at the beginning of 1910, after fourteen years' operation, the capital stock and bonds outstanding aggregated less than $43,000.00 per mile of main track (excluding branches), and the interest rate on its bonded debt less than 4.2 per cent. On such a reasonable capitalization and moderate interest charge it was hoped that, with the growth of business and careful husbanding of its resources, the property could be maintained in an efficient condition, and yet made to yield a small return upon the actual cash investment of its stockholders, and for a number of years the operations gave promise of such a realization.

However, in 1902, by a change from the gross earnings to an advalorem basis of taxation in Michigan, the taxes were increased from $74,845.07, in the previous year, to $173,809.55, and although the valuation placed upon the property in 1909 was somewhat lower than that of 1902 by successive increases in the rate, the taxes assessed against the Company in the State of Michigan have increased, year by year, until they now amount to $213,989.69, an increase of $139,124.62, or 186 per cent since 1902. As the additions in betterments paid for out of income ($547,394.07 or by sale of bonds ($538,000.00), since the year 1902, when the changed basis of taxation went into effect, show an increase of only 7.1 per cent on the total cost of the property as shown by the General Balance Sheet at that date, the increase in taxes is certainly not warranted from this standpoint.

Again in April, 1904, the enforcement of the provisions of an old law reduced maximum passenger rate from three cents to two and one-half cents per mile, and by enactment of a new law, effective September 28, 1907, the rate was fixed at two cents per mile. Had we received the same average rate per passenger per mile in 1909, as was in effect in 1903, the earnings from transportation of passengers would have been greater by $182,311.10. There has also been a marked reduction in freight rates, due largely to competition, which of course, will have to be met in the future as in the past. The average earnings per ton per mile in 1899 were 8.2 mills, while in 1909 they had fallen to 6.3 mills, or a decrease of about 23 per cent.

In addition to this, both State and National legislation regulating hours of service of trainmen, operators and other employes engaged in train operations and requiring block signalling and safety appliances, have largely increased the cost of handling traffic.

Your Board have looked to the future with appreiteasion, in view of the radical character of the legislation affecting railroads, and as a result of the conditions recited above, the resources of the company have at length been so depleted that after paying ordinary opetating expenses and fixed charges, but a small margin is left with which to meet emergencies that arise from year to year in the operation of a railroad.

During the current years extremely unfavorable weather conditions were responsible for an increase of approximately $600,000.00 in the cost of operations, and an increase in the cost of fuel for over $30,000.00 more; while on April 1st an adjustment of pay of employes, because of advances made on other roads all over the country, added to the expenses approximately $9,000.00 per month. The taxes this year have increased over last year about $30,000.00, and now absorb six per cent of the gross earnings, and about thirty-five per cent of the net earnings.

As a consequence of all this, the Company is short of meeting its fixed charges during the first eight months of this year, by about $100,000.00, and although it is expected that the net earnings for the balance of the year will be sufficient to make up the shortage, it is quite certain that the surplus at December 31st will show a considerable reduction, as compared with the previous year, and, as the accumulated surplus since the reorganization amounts to less than three per cent of the capital invested, your Board do not feel that it should be further entrenched upon, and have, therefore, decided not to declare the usual semi-annual dividend.

By order of the Board
JOSEPH WOOD,
President.

Who's Next?
The Whole World Looney?

"Every body will be crazy in a few centuries," says a well known "alienist"—that is, one whose business is to study disordered minds, and put them in ship-shape ff within his power. This particular mind-repairer endeavors to prove the statement, by certain statistics that he has compiled.

The figures may be all right, and the statement true, if the rate of mental degeneracy keeps up to the present schedule; but the people of this world have a habit of turning around and changing their moods, and there may at any time happen a human lurch toward sanity.

No one can doubt at present, that there are more sane people growing insane, than there are insane people growing sane.

A Christian Present that Means Something.

There is one especially good thing about a Christmas present of The Youth's Companion. It shows that the giver thought enough of you to give you something worth while.

It is easy to choose something costing a great deal more which is absolutely useless, but to choose a present costing only $1.75 that will provide a long year's entertainment and the uplifting companionship of the wise and great, is another matter. There is one present however, which does just that—The Youth's Companion.

If you want to know whether it is appropriate or welcome, just visit the home of some Companion subscriber on Companion day.

Do not choose any Christmas present until you have examined The Companion. We will send you free sample copies and the beautiful Prospectus for 1911, telling something of how The Companion has recently been enlarged and improved.

The one to whom you give the subscription will receive free all the numbers of 1910 issued after the money is received; also The Companion's Art Calendar for 1911, lithographed in thirteen colors and gold. These will be sent to reach the subscriber Christmas morning, if desired.

You too, as giver of the subscription, will received a copy of the Calendar.

DURABLE HITCHING POST.

Article Made of Concrete Combines Attractiveness With Convenience.

Attractiveness as well as convenience is embodied in the concrete hitching post shown in the illustration.

The mold shown at left of drawing is made of boards by cutting six uprights to conform to the outside of the post, of which a good size is to have the base or square bottom six inches high and eighteen inches square. The sloping sides are twenty-four inches high and slant, so that the top is but six inches or eight inches square. This is done by cutting boards of the correct shape and size for base and slanting sides and then nailing them to the uprights so as to make the mold in two sections, each section alike. Just one-half of mold or one section is shown in the illustration. The opposite section is placed beside this, and the two are held together with hooks and eyelets while molding the work.

The ring is easily made by any blacksmith and has a rod to extend into the body of post about eight inches and with the end bent so it will not pull out easily. This is placed in the mold before filling in the concrete and thus is firmly imbedded in same. The mold is removed by turning the work upright or upon its base, as it is to stand, and then simply unhooking the hooks, when the two sections can be easily removed. The top is molded by placing the mold on a plank into which a hole has been cut, so that the ring and rod to project from top of post will set into same, thus molding the top neatly and bringing the trowel finish upon the bottom of post.—Farm and Ranch.

SCIENCE ON THE FARM.

Enables the Farmer to Trade $2 For $9, Says a Scientist.

"Carrying Scientific Agriculture to the Farmer" was recently discussed by Dean H. L. Russell, University of Wisconsin: Scientific agriculture is permanent agriculture. The Chinese have a more fertile soil than ours because they have applied scientific agriculture. Holland produces thirty-three bushels of wheat per acre. We produce thirteen bushels.

Great interest could be aroused by convincing our people that there is an undiscovered continent whose soil is as productive as ours. We will find that continent when we discover the methods by which our soils can be made to double their production. Our experiment stations have discovered the secret, but that will do no good until the tillers of the soil understand it. The publications of our stations must reach our people and be read by them. Information must be put in concrete form: It must be visualized. Three things are necessary in farming—first, improved seed; second, improved production; third, reduction of loss.

We are appointing county demonstrators who go into each county and employ the "show me" method of farming. Corn, wheat and other grains and crops are planted and the cultivation done before the farmer and his help.

The farmer may be prejudiced against new methods, but this opposition yields when he is shown the better way. Wisconsin was driven from raising wheat by the chinch bug, but this bug was a godsend to agriculture because the farmers went into the dairy business.

By growing wheat we increased our bank account and depleted our soils; by dairying we both increase our bank account and the fertility of our farms. The purchase of $2 worth of phosphorus on a stock farm increased our crops $9 worth. We are always willing to trade $2 for $9. There is a limited amount of phosphorus in our soils, and to keep up the phosphorus content we buy for $10 as much phosphorus in the raw rock as we formerly got for $25 in the treated goods. The tax which comes from apathy, indifference and ignorance is the highest tax farmers pay.

Some Don'ts of Rubber Etiquette.

Don't blame the dealer if your rubbers wear out before you think they should.

Don't hastily jump at the conclusion that you were swindled when you bought that last pair. Just think for a moment whether you have worn them over a larger pair of shoes than they were originally fitted over, have you broken down the heel by wearing them over a pair of shoes that the heels were worn down on one side or at the back, or have you placed them on top of a steam register to dry them out or to warm them before going out after leaving them in the entry way to freeze?

Johnny uses his for skates or to steer his hob. Elizabeth will not soil her hands and kicks her rubbers off, tearing them in doing so, or she pulls her rubbers on by the back of the rubber, never drawing them on over the toe of the shoe with both hands before slipping over the heel of the shoe.

American rubbers like American shoes are an evolution of American environment. Light weight rubbers are made to meet an actual demand from the wearer—American men and women do not take kindly to clumsy footwear such as their English cousins wear.

The writer who after a deal of persuasion induced an English friend to wear a pair of American shoes he had made him a gift of, was told after the shoes were in service a few weeks, "I can see that these shoes will not wear as long as our bench made English shoes, but there is a blooming lot of comfort in them that I never knew before, and, on the whole, I believe I would sooner buy my shoes oftener and get some of the American comfort."

The rubber from which your rubber footwear is fashioned is made up in thin sheets and is fragile even when vulcanized in toughening process and if you will not wear heavy rubbers it's not fair to blame the dealer if you find it necessary to buy more than one pair a season. However, a person who purchases a first grade rubber that can be easily identified by the trade mark stamped on the bottom, may greatly extend their wear by using reasonable care; where it is not taken it does not seem like fair play to blame the dealer or the maker who has taken the utmost pains within human possibility to furnish footwear protection from the elements, at a price that offers a smaller margin of profit than does ninety-nine out of any one hundred articles in general use by the American public of today.

PICK YOUR COMPANY.

Be very circumspect in the choice of thy company. In the society of thine equals it is true thou shalt enjoy more pleasure, but in the society of thy superiors thou shalt find more profit. To be the best in the company is the way to grow worse. The best means to grow better is to be the worst there.—Quarles.

"I'LL GIVE MY LIFE TO IT."

holy joy overspread the fisherman's visage, and his hairy paws continued to open and close hungrily.

"Do you mean business?" he bellowed at Emerson. "Can you fight?"

"Yes."

"This gang won't stop at anything," warned Balt.

"Neither will I," affirmed the other, with a scowl and a dangerous down drawing of his lip corners. "I've got to win, so don't waste any time wondering how far I'll go. What I want to know is if you will join my enterprise."

"I'll give my life to it."

"I knew you would," flashed Cherry.

"And if we don't beat Willis Marsh, by glory, I'll kill him!" Balt shouted, fully capable of carrying out his threat, for his bloodshot eyes were lit with bitter hatred. Turning to the girl, he said:

"Now give me something to eat. I've been living on dogfish till my belly is full of bones."

Long after Cherry had gone to bed she heard the murmur of their voices.

"It's all arranged," they advised her at the breakfast table. "We leave tomorrow."

"Tomorrow?" she echoed blankly.

"We start in the morning. We have no time to waste."

She felt a sudden dread at her heart. What if they failed—and did not return? What, if some untoward peril should overtake them on the outward trip? It was a hazardous journey and George Balt was the most reckless man on the Bering coast. Emerson's next words added to her alarm:

"We'll catch the mail boat at Katmai."

"Katmai!" she broke in sharply. "You said you were going by the Ikamna route." She turned on Balt angrily. "You know better than to suggest such a thing."

"I didn't suggest it," said Balt. "It's Mr. Emerson's own idea; he insists."

"I shall be dreadfully worried until I know you are safely over," said the girl, a new note of wistful tenderness in her voice.

"Nonsense! We've all taken bigger risks before."

"Do you know," she began hesitatingly, "I've been thinking that perhaps you'd better not take up this enterprise after all."

"Why not?" he asked, with an incredulous stare. "I thought you were enthusiastic on the subject."

"I am. I believe in the proposition thoroughly," Cherry limped on, "but—well, I was entirely selfish in getting you started, for it possibly means my own salvation, but"—

"It's my last chance also," Boyd broke in.

"A few days ago you were a stranger; now you are a friend," she said steadily. "One's likes and dislikes grow rapidly when they are not choked by convention. I like you too well to see you do this. You are too good a man to become the prey of those people. Remember George Balt."

"Balt hasn't started yet. For the first time he is a real menace to Willis Marsh."

"Won't you take my advice and reconsider?" urged the girl.

"Listen," said the young man. "I came to this country with a definite purpose in mind, and I had three years in which to work it out. I needed money—God, how I needed money! They may talk about the emptiness of riches and tell you that men labor not for the 'kill,' but for the pursuit; not for the score, but for the contest. Maybe some of them do, but with me it was gold I needed, gold I had to have, and I didn't care much how I got it so long as I got it honestly. I focused every power upon my desire, but a curse was on me—a curse, nothing less. At first I took misfortune philosophically, but when it came and slept with me I began to rage at it. It was terrifying because my time was shortening, and the last day of grace was rushing toward me.

"Just to show you what luck I played in, at Dawson I found a prospect that would have made most men rich, and, although such a thing had never happened in that locality before, it pinched out. I tried again and again, and finally found another mine, only to be robbed of it by the Canadian laws in such a manner that there was not the faintest hope of my ever recovering the property. I finally shifted from mining to other ventures, and the town burned. I awoke in a midnight blizzard to see my chance for a fortune licked up by flames, while the hiss of the water from the firemen's hose seemed directed at me, and the voice of the crowd sounded like jeers.

"I was among the first at Nome and staked alongside the discoverers who undertook to put me in right for once; but, although the fellows around me made fortunes in a day, my ground was barren and my bedrock swept clean by that unseen hand which I always felt, but could never avoid. Once a broken snowshoe in a race to the recorder's office lost me a fortune; at another time a corrupt judge plunged me from certainty to despair, and all the while my time was growing shorter and I was growing poorer.

"Two hours after the Topkuk strike was made I drove past the shaft, but the one partner known to me had gone to the cabin to build a fire and the other one lied to me, thinking I was a stranger. I heard afterward that just as I drove away my friend came to the door and called after me, but the day was bitter, and my ears were muffled with fur, while the dry snow beneath the runners shrieked so that it drowned his cries. He chased me for half a mile to make me rich, but the hand of fate lashed my dogs faster and faster, while that hellish screeching outdinned his voice. Six hours later Topkuk was history. You've seen stampedes—you understand.

"My name became a byword and caused people to laugh, though they shrank from me, for miners and sailors are equally superstitious. No man ever had more opportunities than I, and no man was ever so miserably unfortunate in missing them. In time I became whipped, utterly without hope. Yet almost from habit I fought on and on with my ears deaf to the voices that mocked me.

"And something tells me that I have left that ill omened thing behind at last, and I am going to win!"

"But you're too late," suggested Cherry. "You say your time was up some time ago."

"Perhaps," he returned, staring into the distances. "That's what I was going out to ascertain. I thought I might have a few days of grace allowed me. That's why I can't quit, now that you've set me in motion again, now that you've given me another chance. That's why we leave tomorrow and go by way of the Katmai pass."

CHAPTER IV.

DURING the evening Emerson left the two other men in the store, and, seeking Cherry out in the little parlor, asked her to play for him. Again the blending of their voices brought them closer, his aloofness wore off, and he became an agreeable, accomplished companion whose merry wit and boyish sympathy stirred emotions in the girl that threatened her peace of mind. It was their last hour together before embarking on his perilous journey in search of the golden fleece, and his starved affections clamored for sympathy, while the iron in his blood felt the magnetic propinquity of sex. For her part, she lay awake far into the morning hours, now blissfully floating on the current of half formed desires, now vaguely fearing some dread that clutched her.

The goodbys were brief and commonplace. There was time for nothing more, for the dogs were straining to be off and the December air bit fiercely. But Cherry called Emerson aside and in a rather tremulous voice begged him again to consider well this enterprise before finally committing himself to it. "If this were any other country, if there were any law up here or any certainty of getting a square deal I'd never say a word; I'd urge you to go the limit. But"—

He was about to laugh off her fears, as he had done before, when the plaintive wrinkle between her brows and the forlorn droop of her lips stayed him. Without thought of consequences and prompted largely by his leaping spirits, he stooped and, before she could divine his purpose, kissed her.

"GOODBY" THAT'S MY ANSWER."

"Goodby," he laughed, with dancing eyes. "That's my answer." And the next second he was at the sled. The dogs leaped at his shout, and the caravan was in motion.

But the girl stood without sound or gesture, bareheaded under the wintry sky, a startled, wondering light in her eyes which did not fade until the men were lost to view far up the river trail. Then she breathed deeply and turned into the house, oblivious to Constantine and the young squaw who held the sick baby up for her inspection.

The hazards of winter travel in the north are manifold at best, but the country which Emerson and his companions had to traverse was particularly perilous owing to the fact that their course led them over the backbone of the great Alaskan range, that desolate, skyscraping rampart which interposes itself between the hate of the arctic seas and the tossing wilderness of the north Pacific.

A week of hard travel found the party camped in the last fringe of cottonwood that fronted the glacial slopes, their number augmented now by a native from a Russian village with an unpronounceable name, who, at the price of an extortionate bribe, had agreed to pilot them through. For three days they lay idle, the taut walls of their tent thrumming to an incessant fusillade of ice particles that whirled down ahead of the blast, while Emerson fumed to be gone.

The fourth morning broke still and quiet, but after a careful scrutiny of the peaks the Indian shook his head and spoke to Balt, who nodded in agreement.

"What's the matter?" growled Emerson. "Why don't we get under way?" But the other replied:

"Not today. Them tips are smoking, see!" He indicated certain gauzy streamers that floated like vapor from the highest pinnacles. "That's snow, dry snow, and it shows that the wind is blowing up there. We dassent tackle it."

"Do you mean we must lie here waiting for an absolutely calm day?"

"Exactly."

"Why, it may be a week!"

"It may be two of them; then, again, it may be all right tomorrow."

"Nonsense! That breeze won't hurt anybody."

"Breeze!" Balt laughed. "It's more like a tornado up yonder. No; we've just got to take it easy till the right moment comes and then make a dash. It's thirty miles to the nearest stick of timber, and once you get into the pass you can't stop till you're through."

The next dawn showed the mountain peaks limned like clean cut ivory against the steel blue sky, and as they crept up through the defiles the air was so motionless that the smoke of their pipes hung about their heads, while the creak of their soles upon the dry surface of the snow roused echoes from the walls on either side. At first their progress was rapid, but in time the drifts grew deeper and they came to bluffs where they were forced to notch footholds, unpack their load and relay it to the top, then free the dogs and haul the sled up with a rope hand over hand.

It was early in the afternoon when the Indian stopped and began testing the air.

"Feels like wind," said Balt, with a shake of his head. The native began to chatter excitedly, and as they stood there a chill draft fanned their cheeks. Little wisps of snow vapor began to dance upon the ridges, whisking out of sight as suddenly as they appeared. They became conscious of a sudden fall in the temperature and they knew that the cold of interstellar space dwelt in that ghostly breath which smote them. Before they were well aware of the ominous significance of these signs the storm was upon them, sweeping through the chute wherein they stood with rapidly increasing violence. The terrible unseen hand of the frozen north had unleashed its brood of furies, and the air rang with their hideous cries.

There was no question of facing the wind, for it was more cruel than the fierce breath of an open furnace searing the flesh like a flame.

All the morning the air had hung in perfect poise, but some change of temperature away out over one of the rival oceans had upset the aerostatic balance, and the wind tore through this gap like the torrent below a broken reservoir.

Balt came close to Emerson and bellowed into his ear:

"What shall we do? Roll up in the bedding or run for it?"

"How far is it to timber?"

"Twelve or fifteen miles."

"Let's run for it! We're out of grub, anyhow, and this may last for days."

There was no use of trying to secure additional clothing from the supply in the sled, so they abandoned their outfit and allowed themselves to be driven ahead of the storm, trusting to the native's sense of direction and keeping close together. The dogs were already well drifted over and refused to stir.

Once they had gone a stone's throw from the sled there was no turning back, and, although the wind was behind them, progress was difficult, for they came upon chasms which they had to avoid; they crossed slippery slopes where the storm had bared the hard crust and which their feet refused to grip. In such places they had to creep on hands and knees, calling to one another for guidance. They were numbed, blinded, choked by the rage of the blizzard; their faces grew stiff and their lungs froze. At times they fell and were skidded along ahead of the blasts. This forced them to crawl back again, for they dared not lose their course.

Much has been written concerning the red man's physical powers of endurance, but as a rule no Indian is the equal of his white brother, due as much perhaps to lack of mental force as to generations of insufficient clothing and inanition, so it was not surprising that as the long afternoon dragged to a close the Aleut guide began to weaken.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met in regular session Tuesday evening October 25, with fifty-seven members and three visitors present.

One candidate was instructed in the mysteries of the first and second degrees.

Lecturer's hour consisted of songs, question box, and current events, also a discussion of the question, "How should cows be fed", led by H. E. Coblentz, followed by several others.

Under good of the order, the women's work committee announced a big auction and contest of things made by the ladies, followed by supper the Tuesday evening before Thanksgiving. There will also be a masquerade dance in the hall Friday evening November 11. Committee, John Knudsen, Will Steinberg, Will Tunoth. It was decided to have a hunting match, Captains, Eugene Lewis and Ed. Jones.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks in regular session. After meeting all the patrons were made contented from well filled tables of refreshments.

Cravanettes, mackintoshes, rubber coats, $3.50 to $12. Benj. Brown.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session October 27, and was opened in regular form in the fourth degree with all officers present except Lecturer and Steward. After the usual order of business two candidates were instructed in the third and fourth degrees. One application was received for membership.

Lecturer's program was as follows:

Recitation—Byrl Meggison.
Song—May Phillips.
Recitation—Florence Meggison.
Song—Grange Melodies.
Recitation—Carrie Meggison.

The ladies served harvest feast to twenty seven members.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange No. 1451, held one of the best meetings it has had since its organization, on Tuesday evening, October 25th, at the home of the Master, J. A. Newville. Four candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees. A good program was rendered. Among the most enjoyable numbers on the program were recitations by J. A. Newville assisted by his son John and by one of the new members, Mrs. Loucks. Worthy Lecturer O. D Wilson presented a plan of co-operative buying, which was referred to the trade committee, composed of the following members: W. C. Burdick, J. A. Newville, H Willson and O. D. Willson.

Eight visitors were present from Deer Lake Grange, some assisting in the program.

The ladies served a supper that will long be remembered by those present.

The men's meeting was called for Tuesday evening November 1st at the school house. The ladies' meeting for Wednesday with Mrs. Marcia Burdick. The lecturer's announced a debate for the next regular meeting. Question, Resolved "That The United States Senate should be abolished". While waiting for the rain to cease, after the meeting was over, several members indulged in a discussion of Socialism and the size and need of our navy, until it was brought to an end by the young folks singing, "Keep Politics off of the Farm."

A Square Deal Platform

FOR YOUR TRADE

In announcing my candidacy for your trade, I feel that I owe it to you, to call attention to a few of the many bargains which I have to offer in my immense stock, consisting of the largest line of Fur Coats, Blankets, Robes, Harness, Trunks and Suit Cases ever shown in Charlevoix.

A few of the many planks in my platform, everyone a bargain:

Thibet Buffalo Fur Coats, one of the strongest and best furred. Well made, fully guaranteed. Price $30.00.

Heavy Boston Duck Coat, thirty inches long, Sheepskin lined, large corduroy collar. Price $3.00.

A heavy mangled punted burlap stable blanket, full lined, double surcingle. Has no equal for the price. $1.50.

The heaviest and strongest 84x90 5-A Storm King street blanket, bought direct from the 5-A Mills. Price $2.50.

If these prices merit your approval, I would be pleased to serve you. Come in and look over the numerous other bargain planks in my platform.

Defeat.

What is defeat? Nothing but education, nothing but the first step to something better.

Peanuts Fatten Hogs.

Experiments conducted by practical farmers showed that many tons of valuable hog go with the peanut crop and that after the peanuts have been gathered hogs can be turned in on the ground and fattened for market on what is left of the crop without other food. Several carloads of hogs fattened in this way sold at good prices last fall after having been rounded off with a ration of corn for two weeks. It takes but a few months to mature a peanut crop, and it has been found practical to follow it up with a crop of Irish potatoes on the same ground, and in some cases a second crop of the peanuts has been raised. As the peanuts will sell at from 90 cents to $1.25 per bushel and hogs will fatten on what is left after gathering the peanut crop, it makes this one of the cheapest foods for the south that can be raised, and it puts on weight fast enough to suit any hog grower.

Relief From Heaves.

Heaves can be greatly relieved or temporarily removed by medicine and special management. In summer grass should form the only feed, and in winter wet oat straw should be preferred to dry hay. Fowler's solution of arsenic in half ounce doses twice daily lessens the distress. Commercial medicines are also useful in that extent.

Keep the Best Ewes.

Too often ewe lambs born after the regular lambing season are retained for breeding ewes because they are not large enough to market with the rest of the flock. These develop into ewes that are undersized and late breeders and hence are detrimental to the building up of good stock.

Lumps on Horses' Legs.

On the appearance of any lump about the legs of a horse it should be bathed diligently with water as hot as can be borne. What might develop into a spavin may sometimes in this way be checked at the start.

Pointers In Selecting the Cow.

If you are buying a cow look for a long udder lengthwise of her body, very elastic, as this invariably means milk; a soft skin, large, roomy digestive organs, with broad ribs wide apart.

Professor Enos was married in Jackson county December 24, 1860, to Laura C. Barstow, who died in 1898. He is survived by two children Ralph C. and Marguerite wife of Dr. Archie A. Swinton, alderman from the first ward, and vice-president of the Argo Milling Company.

GOOD ROAD BOOSTERS.

Valuable Hints From Address by Congressman Ferris of Oklahoma.

Congressman Scott Ferris of Oklahoma in an enthusiastic address on the subject of good roads uttered the following:

Good roads bring the products of the mine and forest to the factory door.

Good roads bring thrift to the farmer and thrift to the consumer and wealth to the nation.

Good roads make farm life pleasant and profitable and enhance its usefulness.

Good roads bring us more rural routes—will bring us better ones and more efficient ones.

They make better homes, happier firesides, more patriotic people.

They distribute the products of the mine, the forest and the factory.

They are the avenues of progress and the highest and best proof of the intelligence we enjoy.

It does justice to producer and consumer and withholds injustice from all.

They save time, labor, money and failure. They patronize the railways and the waterways you have appropriated for so lavishly.

Highways, I tell you, sir, are not the property of one class of men, but are the property and interest of every one, whether he be black or white, educated or uneducated, weak or strong, high or low, savage or civilized. They are, I tell you, the property of us all, and we should all aid in their upbuilding.

HIGHWAYS TOO WIDE.

Those of Germany Compared to Roads of the West.

It is argued that as a general thing and particularly in the west the roads of the United States are too wide. The west and Germany are compared in this respect. It is pointed out that while in Germany, where the traffic is enormous, the highways are but twenty and twenty-one feet, in the west, where the traffic is comparatively light and land worth $100 an acre, the roadways are from fifty to sixty feet in width, three-fourths of which grows up in weeds and grass.

It can hardly be said, however, that the roads are too wide in the eastern states.

Mountain travelers especially will smile at the idea of wide roads in reading of the subject, having many a time and oft met face to face other travelers far from the "wide place," with the result that their vehicles had to be taken apart and carried by piecemeal or stood up at a dizzy angle against the cliff while the other hugged the perilous edge of a fathomless ravine.

To Kill Bull Thistles.

Bull thistles, common in pastures, cannot always be killed by mowing. Mowing tends to prevent maturity of seed. Cutting off the thistles just below the surface of the ground two or three times a year will effectually eradicate them.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County.

I take this opportunity to thank my party for the nomination for the office of Prosecuting Attorney of Charlevoix county. I am deeply grateful to those supporting me at the recent primary and hold no ill-will toward those who did not, recognizing fully the voter's will to choose.

I now most respectfully ask the support of the electors of the county at the election November 8. I promised before the primary that if I were nominated and elected to this office I would give everyone a "Square Deal" and perform the duties of that office to the best of my ability, practicing and advising economy in the conduct of the county business and enforcing the laws as I found them. That promise, the only one I have made, still holds good. My fifteen years of practice, nearly ten years of which has been in this county, will, I trust, be to my great advantage if you give me this opportunity to "Make Good."

Makes The Soap Go Four Times as Far

"RICHMOND" Suds-Maker Saves Time, Labor and Money

The Baltimore Dairy Lunch of Hartford, Conn., says one pound of a powdered soap when used in a "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker equals four pounds when used otherwise.

The "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker may be instantly attached to any faucet. One turn and it delivers thick, hot cleansing suds. It does away with all the disagreeable tedious features of dishwashing—makes it really a delightful task. You simply place the dishes under the creamy suds for an instant, then rinse and wipe. No unsightly messes to clean up afterward. No cracked or chapped hands.

Uses any soap—whole pieces or scraps. Makes the grease and dirt disappear as if by magic. Think of the scores of ways this ingenious device will cut down the work in the house. Think how handy it will be to always have thick, creamy suds on tap. It will pay for itself many times over in a year in the time, labor and soap it saves.

You can get a "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker for free trial by applying to the plumber whose name appears below: Try it ten days then if you think you can get along without it, return it. The trial does not obligate you to buy. Get one to-day.

LABOR PARTY SNOWED UNDER

In the Battle of the Ballots Held Yesterday

OSBORN ELECTED BY FIFTY-THOUSAND

Eastern States go Democratic by a Big Majority

Harmon Re-elected in Ohio—Next House of Representatives will Probably be Democratic.

Election day passed off quietly in Charlevoix County, a light vote being polled in every precinct. The results are shown in another column, the Republicans winning by the usual majorities, although the Labor Party put up a vigorous campaign, and the primary system in this county was indorsed by the people, who stood by the ticket which they named.

Early in the evening returns begin coming in, splendid service being given by the Michigan State Telephone Company and in Charlevoix, every body had occasion to feel good, the Republicans over the handsome majorities given their county ticket and the Democrats over the remarkable landslide in the eastern states. The only ones who could not see a ray of sunshine in the returns were the Labor Party followers who had only the majority which Mr. Thompson received in the third ward to cheer them up. In Michigan Osborn is elected by a large majority.

The Republicans carried every congressional district but the fifth, where Diekema probably is defeated by Sweet, by a small margin. The Republicans are in control of the legisature insuring the election of Charles E. Townsend as United States Senator.

The Democrats will control the next House of Representatives in Congress by a safe majority. The senate is in doubt, Democratic governors have been elected in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connetient and Ohio.

TO PREVENT FRAUD

Was the Purpose of the Placing of Ten Percent Tax

On Artificially Colored Oleomargarine Butter Prodncers are Protected.

Why did the Congress of the United States enact the present oleomargarine law which provides for an internal revenue tax of ten cents per pound on artificially colored oleomargarine? Was it to permit the butter producers of the country to exact a high price for butter as has been claimed? To make such a claim is a pretty serious indictment of our federal law making body. Of course butter is higher in price than it was ten years ago but so are other necessities of life. The percentage of oleomargarine now being put upon the market bears a higher ratio to the amount of butter consumed than it did ten years ago. This coupled with the fact that less than three per cent of the oleomargarine sold is taxed at ten cents per pound proves that the oleomargarine law has absolutely nothing to do with the price of butter.

Congress enacted this law to prevent fraud in the sale of oleomargarine. The law was never intended to prevent the honest sale of oleomargarine or to enhance to the interests of the butter producers of the country, but rather to protect the one against fraud in the purchase of butter or oleomargarine and the other against fraudulent competition.

Congress intended to compel the sale of oleomargarine in its natural color (which is white or nearly so) instead of in the natural color of butter (which is yellow). Congress at the same time reduced the former tax of two cents per pound on oleomargarine to one-fourth of a cent per pound when the product is not artificially colored to look like butter.

Congress used its taxing power to prevent fraud in the sale of oleomargarine because it had no other effective means of accomplishing that result. When oleomargarine is put upon the market in its natural color, thus making it impossible to commit fraud, the tax is one and three-fourths cents less per pound than under any previous oleomargarine law.

The butter producers of the country are benefitted by oleomargarine legislation only in so far as the integrity of the dairy industry is sustained—a benefit which is shared by every other citizen. It is a most important branch of agriculture and it is quite as essential to prevent the destruction of an agricultural industry by fraud as it is to prevent the destruction of our banking industry or any of the other industries in which every good citizen is interested.

GOOD GAME SATURDAY

Strong Petoskey Team Will Play the Locals on Home Grounds

Last Saturday's Game was Forfeited to Charlevoix by East Jordan.

Due to the fact that the East Jordan foot-ball team cancelled the game here at the last minute there was no game here last Saturday as advertised. It was a forfeited game so we claim a victory by a score of 1 to 0.

Petoskey comes here Saturday and it is likely the onlookers will be treated to one of the best games of the season. Petoskey is exceptionally stroog this year. Last Saturday they played a 3 to 3 game with Cadillac which is one of the strongest teams in northern Michigan.

This Wednesday the local team goes to Traverse City for what appears to be their hardest game of the season. The boys are in excellent trim and we are looking for a fifth victory.

Socialist Meeting.

Alexander Irvine, one of the most prominent speakers of the Socialists, will deliver a lecture at the Charlevoix Theatre, Monday night at 8:00 o'clock p. m. Mr. Irvine has created a greater sensation than any other minister in years. First, as pastor of the Pilgrim church in New Haven, Connecticut and later as pastor at the church of the Ascension, one of the fashionable churches in New York, he incurred the displeasure of his rich parishioners by his socialistic ideas. He has the reputation of being one of the most eloquent speakers on the Socialist list. Everybody is invited to hear him.

HAS NEW SCHEME

To Connect all County Seats in State With Highways.

State and County to Work Together in Building of the Roads.

Horatio S. Earle, former state highway commissioner and still Michigan's foremost apostle of good roads, has a new good road scheme. The scheme in brief is a project for connecting all the county seats throughout the state with a network of modern, well built highways by means of the co-operation of state and county government. The project will be presented to the legislature in the form of a bill and will be urged for passage.

It is proposed to have the county highway commissions in contiguous counties meet and outline a route for a proposed intercounty seat highway. The route agreed on would be presented to the state highway commission or commissioner, as the case might be, for approval. When approved the counties would be entitled to state aid to the extent of 50 per cent of the cost of the improvement.

It would be provided that the state could not go into debt for advancing this work, but that only such moneys should be used for it as the legislature saw fit to raise by taxation from year to year. This plan does not contemplate any extravagant splurge by the state, but has in mind the intelligent direction of highway improvements so that in time there would be a network of roads connecting all the principal cities and towns in both peninsulas.

Under this plan the poorer counties would be encouraged to take up the good road movement. As a case in point, under present conditions many years would elapse before there would be a modern highway between Houghton and Marquette counties, for the reason that Baraga county, which lies between, has limited resources and would not be likely to enter on the great expense that would be involved in supplying the link of highway between its two richer neighbors.

But if the state would defray 50 per cent of the expense Baraga county would be likely to do its share. The making of good roads for considerable distance in many places is held up by the inability of poorer counties to undertake their share of the expense.

Mr. Earle says that interest in and support of the good road movement steadly is increasing and he is confident that his plan will be received by the legislature.

WILL BE BIG SHOW

Western Michigan Ready to Meet Pacific States.

Display for Great Land Exposition in Chicago Will Greatly Exceed Last Year's Exhibits.

Western Michigan is ready to meet the fruit growers of the Pacific Coast states at the United States Land and Irrigation exposition this fall. During the summer it was feared that owing to the unfavorable season that the apple crop would not be such that Western Michigan could make a showing that would compare favorably with the efforts of the western horticulturalists, but after an inspection of the Western Michigan orchards it was found that there were many fancy apples in the region. The very best of these, to the number of 412 bushels, have been gathered and are now in cold storage in Chicago awaiting the opening of the exposition. The collection includes 34 different varieties, and in the case of several of the varieties the fruit secured is the finest that has ever been seen by those who packed it. The greater part of the 412 bushels were secured in the orchards by representatives of the bureau and were packed with the greatest possible care, that each specimen might be in the best condition for display purposes. Only apples that were extra fancy were considered good enough to be taken.

In addition to the showing of apples there will be a fine display of pears, grapes and other fruits, also a display of fruits in glass jars, about 100 jars of early fruit being available for this purpose. Grains, grasses and vegetables have been forwarded to Chicago against the date of the opening of the exposition. It is believed by those who have the matter in hand that the Michigan display this year will be a big improvement over the showing of 1908, which showing took honors among the many displays.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Of Development Bureau Held Meeting Last Friday

At Which Plans Were Made for Exhibit at Chicago Land and Irrigation Exposition.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Western Michigan Development bureau was held at Manistee, Friday afternoon and evening and considerable business of importance to the organization was disposed of before adjournment. There were present at the meeting President D. H. Day, F. A. Mitchell, R. F. Church, George Blass, H. R. Hendal, Secretary Gibson and Hon. William Rath of Ludington, who was present by special invitation.

It was decided that the bureau should further the work of preparing special features for the program that is to be given by the three bureaus on Michigan day, which will be on Saturday, November 26. The plan of running an excursion from Grand Rapids to Chicago for that day which will give Michigan people a chance to attend was also favored. On this day a farm will be given by the bureau for advertising purposes.

It was decided that each county will be asked to send some one to the Chicago land show to deliver a talk for a half hour period on the special advantages of the various counties, as it is thought that this will be the most satisfactory way of presenting the facts to the visitors at the fair.

At the banquet to the evening short speeches were delivered upon the subject of development by F. A. Mitchell, who acted as toastmaster, D. H. Day and Secretary Gibson. After the banquet and program the company adjourned to an electric theatre where Mr. Gibson gave his lecture on Western Michigan illustrated with 110 views taken from 17 of the 20 counties comprised in the bureau.

HAS MADE REMARKABLE GROWTH

Sugar Manufacturing Industry in the State of Michigan.

FIRST FACTORY BUILT 12 YEARS AGO

Last Year More Than 250,000,000 Pounds of Sugar Produced.

Yield of Beets was Increased as Well as the Sugar Content—By-products Add to the Value of the Product.

"With the single exception of the automobile industry," says F. R. Hathaway in the Pere Marquette Monthly Magazine, "no industry in the state of Michigan has shown the development in the past decade that characterizes the beet sugar industry. It is only twelve years since the first factory was built in the state, and last year the sixteen factories in operation in Michigan produced 250,000,000 pounds of granulated sugar, valued at more than $12,000,000." This does not take into account the by-products which add $1,000,000 more to the value of the beet sugar industry of Michigan, and places beet sugar ahead of all agricultural products.

Another remarkable feature of the growth of the industry in Michigan is the steady increase in the yield of beets per acre, and in the amount of sugar per ton of pulp. The sugar content has increased in the past ten years from thirteen per cent to seventeen per cent and for the past two years has been greater than in any beet raising locality in the United States with the possible exceptions of some portions of California. It has been conclusively demonstrated that the climate and soil of Michigan are ideal for the crop.

The beet sugar crop is an exceedingly profitable one for the railroads of Michigan to move. The freight receipts of the railroads of the state arising from the handling of this product amounted to $1,500,000 last year.

Among the by-products of beet sugar manufacture is what is known as a final molasses and most of the Michigan factories sell this molasses to the chemical manufacturing company in Bay City, which makes from this material a high grade alcohol. The excise tax on this alcohol amounts to more than $2,000,000 per year. This contribution to the national treasury offsets in a measure the benefits which the beet sugar industry derives from the tariff by which it is protected. In the meantime, sugar is sold here at a lower price than anywhere else in the civilized world with the exception of England and one or two of her colonies.

Sugar has declined in price during the last decade, largely owing to the development of the beet sugar industry. In 1901 the average price in New York was $5.82 per hundredweight, while the average price for 1909 was $4.59, and the average for ten years, $4.81.

Those who a few years ago invested their money in the beet sugar industry, have reason to feel proud of its development during the past ten years. The leading companies are now on a regular dividend basis, and it looks as if the experimental stage is past, and that the sugar business has taken rank as a stable industry of great magnitude.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering mankind. I realize that my time is short, but while able in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointments when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lecturing to medical classes, way back in '71. In that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men, let me assist you to be your master.

If you are suffering from lost or pass back or weakened condition of the kidneys, LET ME SEND YOU MY prescription in a plain sealed envelope that you may try in your own home. I am sure it will work like every other case I have treated if not I will

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally.

The Heat of the Sun.

It has been demonstrated that every square yard of the radiant surface of the sun gives out every hour into space as much heat as would be generated by burning 13,500 pounds of coal. The entire surface of the sun emits in a year as much heat as would be produced by burning a layer of coal seventeen miles deep spread all over the solar surface. Of this inconceivable amount of heat the amount actually received by the earth amounts to only the two hundred and thirty millionth part.

The only beneficial spray mixture is the Rex Lime-sulphur. We have it all ready to dilute and apply.

Repolishing Old Furniture

"No one gets the full measure of joy out of a 'find' who does not set it up in a bare work-room in some sunny angle of his home and there, for himself, coax it back to beauty," says Edith Stow in the WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION for November. "Redressing old furniture is necessarily slow work; but being done, as it is, step by step, with periods of intervening, it is admirably suited to one who now and then snatches an hour for his hobby. The ten processes given below are those employed by an expert cabinet-maker.

"1. Having purchased a cabinet-maker's steel scraper, wrap the blunt end, which fits into the palm of the hand, in a piece of soft cloth and scrape carefully the surface to be redressed, following always the grain of the wood. This comes from a steady forward pressure upon the scraper; a downward weight from the palm is liable to make a wound in the fiber. For one's peace of mind it is well to experiment first upon furniture that is not valued too highly.

"2. With a piece of sand-paper, medium coarse, smooth down the wood, drawing the paper straight along the grain.

"3. Shellac the surface, using a painter's brush one and one fourth to one and one half inches wide, and applying it with the grain of the wood. It takes about twenty minutes for a coat of shellac to harden.

"4. Sand-paper again as in process 2, only this time use the finest grade of paper.

"5. Shellac as in process 3.

"6. Sand-paper as in step 4.

"7. Apply a coating of hard oil, still working with the grain. This should be dried in a room with the temperature at eighty degrees and allowed to set for at least eight hours.

"8. Rub down with a bunch of curled hair. This is done with a circular movement and without regard to the grain of the wood.

"9. Repeat the hard-oil coating as described in process 7.

"10. Rub down with a mixture of ground pumice stone and painter's hard oil.

The result will be a clear polish, through which all the beauties of the rich, oil seasoned wood stand perfectly revealed."

DON'T EXPERIMENT

You Will Make No Mistake if You Follow This Advice.

Never neglect your kidneys.

If you have pain in your back, urinary disorders, dizziness and nervousness, it's time to act and no time to experiment. These are all symtoms of kidney trouble, and you should seek a remedy which is known to cure the kidneys.

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use. No need to experiment. It has cured many stubborn cases in this vicinity.

Can Charlevoix residents demand further proof than that contained in the following testimonial?

George Holbrook, Main and Danforth streets, Mancelona, Mich., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills helped me wonderfully. I had an extremely lame back and there were acute pains in my loins when I stooped or lifted. My kidneys also bothered me considerably. After using Doan's Kidney Pills, the lameness left my back and the kidney secretions became regular in passage. Since then I have been free from kidney disorders and consequently, I have no hesitation in giving Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement."

The Original Wedding Cake.

Our wedding cake is the remains of a custom whereby a Roman bride held in her left hand three wheat ears, and many centuries later an English bride wore on her head a chaplet of wheat. The attendant girls threw corn, either in grains or in small bits of biscuit or cake, upon the heads of the newly married couple, and the guests picked up the pieces and ate them. Such was the beginning of the wedding cake, which did not come into general use until the eighteenth century and was then composed of solid blocks laid together and iced all over with sugar so that when the outer crust was broken over the bride's head the cakes inside fell on the floor and they were then distributed among the company.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

Darkness found them staggering on, supporting him wherever possible. At length he became unable to guide them farther, and Bait, who had once made the trip, took his place, while the others dragged the poor creature along at the cost of their precious strength.

They had long since lost all track of time and place, trusting blindly to a downward course. The hurricane still harried them with unabated fury, when all at once they came to another bluff where the ground fell away abruptly. Without waiting to investigate whether the slope terminated in a drift or a precipice, they flung themselves over. Down they floundered, the two half sensible men tangled together as if in a race for total oblivion, only to plunge through a thicket of willow tops that whipped and stung them. On they went, now vastly heartened, over another ridge, down another declivity, and then into a grove of spruce timber, where the air suddenly stilled, and only the treetops told of the rushing wind above.

It was well nigh an hour before Bait and Emerson succeeded in starting a fire, for it was desperate work groping for dry branches, and they themselves were on the verge of collapse before the timid blaze finally showed the two more unfortunate ones huddled together.

Cherry had given Emerson a flask of liquor before starting, and this he now divided between Fraser and the guide, having wisely refused it to them until shelter was secured. Then he melted snow in Bait's tin cup and poured pints of hot water into the pair until the adventurer began to rally, but the Aleut was too far gone, and an hour before the laggard dawn came he died.

The day was well spent when they struggled into Katmai and plodded up to a half rotted log store. A globular quarter breed Russian trader took them in and administered to their most crying needs.

As soon as Emerson was able to talk he inquired concerning the mail boat.

"She called here three days ago, bound west," said the trader.

"That's all right. She'll be back in about a week, eh?"

"She won't stop coming back."

"What!" Emerson felt himself sickening.

"No; she won't call here till next month, and then if it's storming she'll go on to the westward and land on her way back."

"How long will that be?"

"Maybe seven or eight weeks."

In his weakened condition the young man groped for the counter to support himself. So the atoriu'a delay at the foot of the pass had undone him! Fate, in the guise of winter, had unfurled those floating snow banners from the mountain peaks to thwart him once more!

Out of consideration for his companions Emerson did not acquaint them with the evil tidings until the next morning; moreover, he was swallowed up in black despair and had no heart left in him for any further exertion. He had allowed the Russian to show him to a bed, upon which he flung himself, half dressed, while the others followed suit.

Emerson fell into a deep sleep, and it was late in the day when he awoke, every muscle aching, every joint stiff, every step attended with pain. He found his companions up and already breakfasted. Big George none the worse for his ordeal, while Fraser, bandaged and smarting, was his old shrewd self.

"Have you heard about the mail boat?" asked Emerson.

"No."

"We've missed her."

"What d'you mean?" demanded Big George blankly.

"I mean that that storm delayed us just long enough to ruin us."

"Why—er—let's wait till the next trip," offered the fisherman.

Emerson shook his head. "She may not be back here for eight weeks. No! We're done for."

Bait was like a big boy in distress. His face wrinkled as if he were about to burst into loud lamentations. Then a thought seized him.

"Where in blazes is this steamer?" he cried.

"Out to the westward somewhere."

"Well, she's a mail boat, ain't she? Then why don't she stop here coming back? Answer me."

The rotund man shrugged his fat shoulders. "She'a got to call at Uyak bay going east."

Emerson looked up quickly. "Where is Uyak bay?"

"Over on Kadiak island."

"When is the boat due at Uyak?" Emerson asked.

"Most any time inside of a week."

"How far is that from here?"

"It ain't so far—only about fifty miles." Then, catching the light that flamed into the miner's eyes, Petellin hastened to observe: "But you can't get there. It's across the straits—Shelikof straits."

"What of that! We can hire a sailboat and"—

"I ain't got any sailboat. I lost my sloop last year hunting sea otter."

"We can hire a small boat of some sort, can't we, and get the natives to put us across? There must be plenty of boats here."

"Nothing but skin boats, kyaks and bidarkas, you know. Anyhow, you couldn't cross at this time of year—it's too stormy. These straits is the worst piece of water on the coast. No; you'll have to wait."

Emerson stared hopelessly at the fire.

The disheartened man started at this juncture as if a sudden thought impelled him and followed Bait out into the cold. He turned down the bank to the creek, however, and made a careful examination of all the canoes that went with the village. Fifteen minutes later he had searched out the disgruntled fisherman and cried excitedly:

"I've got it! We'll catch that boat yet!"

"How?" growled the big man sourly.

"There's a large open skin boat, an oomiak, down on the beach. We'll hire a crew of Indians to put us across to Uyak."

THEY COULD NOT WALK, BUT CREPT.

"Can't be done," said Big George, still gruffly. "It's the wrong season. You know the Shelikof straits is a bad place even for steamships at this time of year. They're like that pass up yonder, only worse."

"But it's only fifty miles across."

"Fifty miles of that kind of water in an open canoe may be just as bad as 500—unless you're lucky. And I ain't noticed anything so darned lucky about us."

"It's our only chance. Are you game?"

"Come on," cried Big George; "let's find Petellin!"

That worthy uttered a shriek of denial.

"In summer, yes, but now—you can't do it. It has been tried too often. The straits is always rough, and the weather is too cold to sit all day in an oomiak; you'd freeze."

"We'll chance it."

"No, no, no! If it comes on to storm you'll go to sea. The tides are strong; you can't see your course and"—

"We'll use a compass. Now, you get me enough men to handle that oomiak; that's a good fellow. I'll attend to the rest."

"But they won't go," declared the little fat man. "They know what it means. Why"—

"Call them in. I'll do the talking." And accordingly the storekeeper went in search of the village chief, shaking his head and muttering at the madness of these people.

But it all proved useless. The natives would not risk it. Desperate, the three men fitted up a boat themselves and resolved to make the attempt.

CHAPTER V.

All three knew the desperate chance they were taking, and they spoke little as they made their way out into the straits. Their craft was strange to them, and the positions they were forced to occupy soon brought on cramped muscles. The bidarka is a frail, narrow framework over which is stretched walrus skin, and it is so fashioned that the crew sits, one behind the other, in circular openings with legs straight out in front.

Gradually, imperceptibly, the mountain shores behind them shrank down upon the gray horizon. It seemed that for once the weather was going to be kind to them, and their spirits rose in consequence. They ate frequently, food being the great fuel of the north, and midday found them well out upon the heaving bosom of the straits with the Kadiak shores plainly visible. Then, as if tired of toying with them, the wind rose. Had it sprung from the north it would have wafted them on their way, but it drew in from the Pacific, straight into their teeth, forcing them to redouble their exertions. In the hope that it would die down with the darkness the boatmen held on their course, and night closed over them still paddling silently.

It was nearly noon of the following day when the watchman at the Uyak cannery beheld a native canoe creeping slowly up the bay and was astonished to find it manned by three white men in the last stages of exhaustion. One of them, in fact, was unconscious and had to be carried to the house. He did marvel, however, that another of the travelers should begin to cry weakly when told that the mail boat had sailed for Kadiak the previous evening.

"Too bad you didn't get in last night," said the caretaker sympathetically. "She won't be back now for a month or more."

"How long will she lie in Kadiak?" Big George asked.

"The captain told me he was going to spend Christmas there. Let's see—today is the 22d. She'll pull out for Juneau on the morning of the 26th; that's three days."

"We must catch her," cried Emerson quickly. "If you'll land us in Kadiak on time I'll pay you anything you ask."

"I'd like to, but I can't," the man replied. "You see, I'm here all alone, except for Johnson. He's the watchman for the other plant."

Emerson turned his eyes upon the haggard man who sprawled weakly in a chair. And Fraser, noting the appeal, answered gamely with a forced smile on his lips, though they were drawn and bloodless:

"Sure! I'll be ready to leave in the morning, pal!"

The old Russian village of Kadiak lies on the opposite side of the Ishmu from the canneries, a bleak wind swept relic of the country's first occupation, and, although peopled largely by natives and breeds, there is also a considerable white population, to whom Christmas is a season of thanksgiving and celebration, and it caused much comment when, late on Christmas afternoon an ice burdened canoe, bearing three strange white men, landed on the beach beside the dock—or were they white men, after all? Their faces were so blackened and split from the frost they seemed to be raw bleeding masks, and their hands were cracked and stiff beneath their mittens. They were hollow eyed and gaunt, their cheeks sunken away as if from a wasting illness, and they could not walk, but crept across the snow covered shingle on hands and knees, then, reaching the street, hobbled painfully, while their limbs gave way as if paralyzed.

A week later Boyd and George were watching the lights of Port Townsend blink out in the gloom astern. A quick change of boats at Juneau had raised their spirits, enabling them to complete the second stage of their journey in less than the expected time.

"I suppose a feller has got to dress pretty swell back there in Chicago," George ventured. "Full dress suits of clothes, eh?"

"Yes."

"Did you ever wear one?"

"Certainly."

"Well, I'll be"— The fisherman checked himself and gazed at his companion as if he saw him suddenly in a new light. "Right along?" he questioned incredulously.

"Why, yes; pretty steadily."

"All day at a time?"

Boyd laughed. "I haven't worn one in the daytime since I left college. They are used only at night."

"A feller told me a funny thing once," went on George. "He said them rich men back east had women come around and clean their finger nails and shine 'em up. Is that right?"

"Quite right!"

"Well, I don't suppose—you ever had 'em—shine your finger nails, did you?"

"Yes."

The big man opened his mouth to speak, then, evidently changing his mind, observed, "Seems to me I'd better stay here on the coast and wait for you."

"No, indeed!" the other answered quickly. "I will need you in raising that money. You know the practical side of the listing business, and I don't."

Finally the steamer docked, and the three men put up at a hotel.

"You better train me up to wearing a dress suit before we get east," George warned, "or I'll make your swell friends sore and spoil the deal. I could wear it on the cars and get easy in it."

"My dear fellow, it takes more than a week to 'get easy' in a dress suit." Boyd smiled, amused at his earnestness, for the big fellow was merely a boy out on a wonderful vacation.

"Well, if there is a down east manicure woman in Seattle show her to me, and I'll practice on her," he insisted. "She can halter break me at least."

It was the labor of several hours to fit Big George's bulky frame, and when the two returned to the hotel Emerson found the representative of an afternoon newspaper anxiously awaiting him at the desk.

"Mr. Athens sent me down to get a story."

"Athens—Billy Athens?"

"Yes. He is the editor. I believe you two were college mates. He wanted to know if you are the Boyd Emerson of the Michigan football team."

"Well, well," Boyd mused. "Billy Athens was a good tackle."

"He thought you might have something interesting to tell about Alaska. Your partner has been telling me all about you and your trip and your great success."

"My partner?"

"Yes. Mr. Frobisher volunteered an interview in your name."

"Frobisher!" said Emerson.

"Sure. That's him over yonder." The reporter indicated "Fingerless" Fraser, who, having watched the interview from a distance, now solemnly closed one eye and stuck his tongue into his cheek.

"Oh, yes, yes—Frobisher!" Boyd stammered. "Certainly!"

"He is a character, isn't he? He told me how you rescued that girl when she broke through the ice at Kalvik."

"He did?"

"Quite a romance, isn't it? It's a good newspaper story, and I'll play it up. He is going to let me in on that hydraulic proposition of yours too. Of course I haven't much money, but it sounds great, and"—

"How far along did you get with your negotiations about this hydraulic proposition?" Boyd asked curiously.

"Just far enough so I'm all on edge for it. I'll make up a little pool among the boys at the office and have the money down here before you leave tonight."

"I am sorry, but Mr. Frobisher and I will have to talk it over first," said Emerson grimly. "I think we will keep that 'hydraulic proposition' in the family, so to speak."

"Then you won't let me in?"

"Not just at present."

"I'm sorry. I should like to take a chance with somebody who is really successful at mining. When a fellow drones along on a salary month after month it makes him envious to see you Klondikers hit town with satchels full of coin.

Now that election is over we can all get busy on the campaign where we all work together—the boosting of Western Michigan. Only a few more days and the big land show opens and in spite of the poor crop this year Western Michigan will again be on hand with a display which will prove the superiority of Western Michigan as a fruit growing region.

JOHN C. KETCHAM

Will be State Speaker At Next Meeting of Pomona

Which Will be Held With Barnard Grange Thursday November 17 Important Meeting.

Charlevoix Pomona grange will meet with Barnard grange Thursday November 17. A full program is being prepared by Worthy Lecturer Black, the principal feature of which will be an address by John C. Ketcham of Hastings. Mr. Ketcham needs no introduction to Charlevoix county patrons, having been with us on many occasions, as inspector of County Normal schools, lecturer of farmer's institutes and speaker at grange picnics and meetings of Pomona. He has the reputation of being one of the best speakers in Michigan and all who have heard him in the past state that he deserves the reputation. Don't fail to attend and hear him.

Aside from the program the meeting will be of the utmost importance, being the last meeting before the assembling of the state grange. The committee on exhibit will make their report and patrons will be informed how to aid them in their work. At this meeting also there will be elected two delegates from Pomona to the state grange and if you have any thing which you wish brought before the state meeting now will be the time to bring it up. By all means plan to attend the next meeting of Pomona and don't forget the fifth degree will be conferred in full form, which you must have if you wish to attend every session of the state grange and receive the sixth degree.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY

Will Hold Annual Meeting at Benton Harbor First Week in December

Proposed Lakes-to-the-Gulf Deep Waterway Will be Discussed.

The Michigan State Horticultural Society will meet at Benton Harbor December 6, 7 and 8.

The meeting this year will be one of the most important ones ever held by the society, on account of the vast amount of work now being done in pushing the fruit growing interests of this state. While the program has not been announced, it is known that it will contain the names of several experts of fruit culture in the state and nation. A big banquet will be one of the features of the meeting. The most important matter which will come before the meeting will be the discussion of some action which will be taken on the proposed Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway. Recently Senator William Alden Smith spoke at Boyne City and in the course of his remarks he told the fruit growers that all the territory lying along Lake Michigan was threatened with grave danger if the gulf waterway was projected. He showed how, if the waterway to the gulf was deepened, the warm waters of Lake Michigan would be emptied—into the Mississippi, and the currents of the lake would be changed, bringing down a cold current of water from the straits, which would mean great destruction to our fruit growing industry.

The Greater Youth's Companion.

Since its enlargement by the addition of an amount of reading in the year equal to four hundred ordinary magazine pages, The Youth's Companion can offer even a wider range of wholesome entertainment than ever before; but the character of the paper's contents remains the same, and the subscription price $1.75, is unchanged.

Every boy will eagerly look for the articles on skill in sports and pastimes and how to develop it.

The girls will find many novel and practical suggestions which will be helpful in their daily life.

For the family in general, hints for the profitable occupation of winter evenings, for increasing the happiness and comfort of the household.

This reading is all in addition to the ordinary treasury of stories, articles by celebrated men and women, the unequated miscellany, the invaluable doctor's article, the terse notes on what is going on in all fields of human activity.

It will cost you nothing to send for the beautiful Announcement of The Companion for 1911, and we will send with it sample copies of the paper.

Do not forget that the early subscriber for 1911 receives free all the remaining issues of 1910, including those containing the opening chapters of Grace Richmond's serial story, "Five Miles Out."

The new subscriber receives also The Companion's Art Calender for 1911, lithographed in thirteen colors and gold.

UTILITY PLAYER HAS HARD JOB

Idle Most of Time—Must Be There When Chance Comes.

M'INNIS IS A GOOD ONE

Philadelphia Americans' Substitute Infielder Can Play Better Than Many Regulars—Engle of Boston Another Star—Zimmerman of the Cubs.

The recent statements by Managers Frank Chance and Connie Mack that they would not part with any of their utility players for many of the regulars on other teams call to mind once more the importance of the substitute player.

In a way the position of substitute on a baseball team is the hardest of all. The substitute gets his chance only once in awhile, and he is expected to do as well when that chance comes as the regular whose position he is called upon to take. He doesn't get the seasoning, the benefit of everyday competition, as does the regular, but it is up to him to fill the latter's shoes as well as the regular, when the occasional moment arrives. Whether as a pinch hitter or in the field no less is expected from his exercise of mental and physical faculties than if he were getting the training of everyday battling and ability to adapt himself to situations as they rise.

Hofman Was Greatest of All.

In a way, too, the substitute must be an all around man, capable of filling any position in the infield or outfield, and sometimes both. In modern times the ablest substitute who has come before the public is Artie Hofman, the Chicago Cubs' star, now a regular because his exceptional ability finally brought him the berth. The wonder of his case is that he ever was a substitute. Barring experience, he was as good a player when he was understudy as he is now. Yet for several seasons he filled the utility role, and there were men ahead of him who weren't his equals in point of value to the team. Any team in the country even then would have been glad to take Hofman off Chance's hands and make a regular of him. Chance knew the man's value, however, and kept him.

A baseball expert, a former manager, recently put it this way about Hofman: "He can play any position in the infield or outfield, and play it better than the regular in that position." That may be putting it strong, but put Hofman anywhere you like outside of a pottery place and the team won't be weakened any.

Substitute's Hard Lot.

Keeping on edge by sitting on the bench is the hard lot of the substitute, and one of the most interesting phases of the game is that he generally does it. Some teams have men who can fill in either in the outfield or infield.

There is Heinie Zimmerman of Chicago. When Evers was injured many experts figured that the Cubs would be very weak without the services of their star second baseman. Shelf was not the case, however, for Zimmerman filled in very nicely. On his first day as a regular he won the game for the Cubs by making three hits, two of which were home runs, and scoring three runs. He continued to play such a good game that Evers was not missed. Since he broke into baseball Zimmerman has played every position on a ball team except that of pitcher.

Melunis of the Philadelphia Athletics, substitute infielder, is a better man right now than several regular big league shortstops, and you'd never know it wasn't Barry playing if you didn't know the two men by sight. Jennings has in Luthers and Simmons a couple of extra infielders whose work when pitched into games has all the finish of veterans.

Engle Made Good.

Look at the way Hack Engle of the Boston Red Sox has made good. He went to third base to understudy one of the best third basemen in the business and day after day played clever ball there. Then when Harry Lord was traded for a regular third baseman, Purtell, Engle was shifted over to second base suddenly to take the place of Gardner, who was hurt. It didn't make any difference, however. Engle made himself at home at once, playing not only a capable but a conspicuously good game at the second bag.

Wid Conroy of the Washingtons is a cross between a regular and a substitute. He is a first class third baseman, first class shortstop and a first class outfielder; likewise he is a good base runner and is apt to do his hitting at opportune times. Hyatt of the Pittsburgs made a name for himself last season as a pinch hitter. That's about all he was used for—to bat in emergencies. It is hard to imagine a more trying position than that of pinch hitter, one whose batting practice is confined chiefly to morning and preliminary practice, but whose eye and judgment must be keen when he is called upon.

There are numerous others, and their berths are anything but "pretty soft." Being in the game every day is an outlet for the feelings which the substitute doesn't have, but none the less is his responsibility when he is called into action.

Trembling on the Brink

When one is considering how to save time it is well to take into account such an item as affected the daily habits of a certain wealthy citizen whom a writer in the Birmingham Age-Herald tells about. "Are you still taking a cold plunge every morning?" asked a friend.

"No; quit that to save time."

"Why, a cold plunge doesn't take but a minute or so."

"I know, but I used to spend three-quarters of an hour curled up in bed debating."

The fourteen counties are: Antrim, Benzie, Grand Traverse, Kalkaska, Kent, Lake, Leelanau, Manistee, Mason, Missaukee, Muskegon, Newaygo, Osceola, Ottawa. In the other six counties in the Western Michigan territory the funds necessary to keep the "forward march" work will be raised by public subscription.

An act of courtesy that is greatly appreciated by the Boyne City boys has been done by the Charlevoix High School Athletic Association which recently sent a large bunch of hothouse flowers to Ole Robertson who has been very ill with pneumonia. The flowers were fine and Mr. Robertson as well as the members of the local association greatly appreciated the kindly thought that prompted the act. It shows the friendly relations that exist between the two schools in fine shape. Mr. Robertson is said to be doing very nicely.—Boyne City Journal.

THEATRICAL

On Thursday evening, November 17, the popular play "A Mis-spent Life" will be produced at the Charlevoix Theater by one of the best organized local talent casts ever before the Charlevoix public.

"A Mis-spent Life" deals with the career of an ambitious Doctor, who became edicted to the use of drugs. The effect of the use of this opiate on a man is strongly portrayed by the author in the character of Dr. Jekyll, who in his dual life, is Edward Hyde, the result of the use of drugs. Robert Louis Stevenson says a man has two souls, one of good and one of evil, and that the good soul in upright and pure while the bad soul is cramped and immoral. Dr. Jekyll represents the former and Mr. Hyde the latter, both of whom are supposed to be the dual life Dr. Jekyll.

The excellent local talent cast is as follows in order of appearance:

Poole—Butler of Dr. Jekyll ..... John Lyngklip
James—Footman of Lady Janswett ..... Amil Hoffman

HARVARD LOOMS UP VERY STRONG

Crimson Eleven Appears to Be Class of Big Eastern Four.

LINE IS ALMOST IMPREGNABLE

With Abolition of Old Pulling and Pushing and Tandem Formations This Is Exceptionally True—Has Powerful Back Field.

By TOMMY CLARK.

Johnny Harvard wears a broad grin over his football outlook. And surely John has "the makings" if ever he had in his football history. This year's eleven looms up over the gridiron horizon as the best team of them all. Individually and collectively the Crimson appears just now to be the class among the big eastern four.

Team Rich In Experience.

Head Coach Haughton has had fewer football problems to face than any other eastern coach, and as a result the Crimson eleven and substitutes comprise at the moment the strongest squad east of the Mississippi. The many veterans have taken kindly to the new playing regulations. They are rich in experience and have had a lot of hard personal coaching. The team is going fast and well. The line is heavy, strong and active, and there are three sets of backs as good as the Crimson has had in recent years. Under the new game Harvard is as strong as it has been in seasons past, if not stronger.

MINOT, LAST YEAR'S ALL AMERICAN FULLBACK, NOW PLAYING AT GUARD.

Crimson's Great Line.

Harvard's line seems almost impregnable, and this is exceptionally true now with the abolition of the tandem formations and the old pulling and pushing. The line is as follows: Felton, 190; M. Kay, 200; Minot, 195; Perry Smith, 181; Fisher, 185; Withington, 192; L. D. S mith, 175. Minot, of course, is not yet accustomed to playing at guard, but it could seem, not only on paper, but from the experience of the few games already played, that this line is as strong as any coach could wish for. But Harvard has not been able to push Yale across her own goal line. It is going to be a question between the open game and speedy men. In the open game Harvard has worked her forward passes successfully more than she has lost, and of speed she seems to have plenty.

Being scarcely more than a midget, Maher decided to become a jockey and first rode for Mike Daly. Later on A. J. Joyner saw in the boy a great rider, and it was under his tuition that Danny became proficient. He was Tod Sloane's rival in 1897-8-9 and brought in so many winners that his mounts were heavily backed simply because he rode them.

Among the notables who came to this country to take part in the international aviation tournament is Count Jacques de Lesseps, whose work as a bird man has attracted so much attention abroad. The count is best known in this country for his flight across the English channel, accomplished on May

General Harrison Gray Otis, who is so much in the public eye just now owing to the blowing up of his newspaper plant at Los Angeles, is one of the most successful Pacific coast publishers and has followed that profession most of his life. Before the civil war he was a journeyman printer and was at one time foreman of the government printing office at Washington.

General Otis is a veteran of three wars, having served throughout the rebellion and in the Spanish-American war and the Filipino insurrection. He was appointed brigadier general of volunteers by President McKinley and commanded the brigade which constituted the principal force engaged in the capture of Caloocan on Feb. 10, 1899, and won fame in this and later battles of the campaign which closed with the capture of Malolos, the Filipino capital. In April, 1899, he was relieved of his command at his own re-

General Otis has all his life been prominent in the councils of the Republican party, having been a delegate to two national conventions. Aside from his conspicuous position as an editor and soldier, he is widely known for his advocacy of a government deep sea harbor at San Pedro, the port of Los Angeles.

A. G Spalding Will Ask Baseball Commission to Consider Plan.

A plan to have the world's baseball championship series played in San Francisco in 1915 in connection with the Panama exposition being planned for that year has the backing of A. G. Spalding. He will urge favorable consideration of the plan upon the members of the national baseball commission. It is urged that such an arrangement would not only be financially profitable, but would also give many thousands who would not otherwise get the chance an opportunity to see major league teams play.

Two Changes In Baseball Managers.

The season of 1911 will not see as many changes in the big league teams as came about a year ago. In 1909 Philadelphia, Boston and Brooklyn had pilots who lost their jobs when the season ended. This is the first year for Lake, Doolin and Dahlen, and all three have been signed for another campaign. In the American there will be only two new leaders, Hal Chase in New York and another in St. Louis. O'Connor of the Browns is to be relieved of managerial duties.

People Talked About

DANNY MAHER.

WHAT cares little Danny Maher that the deathknell of horse racing has been sounded in America? In fact, if all other countries follow our example in this respect it won't bother him a whit, for the premier jockey of the world has earned a million dollars on the turf and now announces that he will retire to settle down as a country gentleman on an estate in Tipperary, Ireland.

The history of Maher's career as a pilot of race horses reads like a romance. His parents were so poor that at an age when most boys are playing marbles, spinning tops and storing

Neighborhood Notes

Last Friday while hunting about five miles south-east of Bull Run corners, near Spencer, Silas Trowbrige, accidentally shot and killed himself. Trowbridge whose home is in South Haven, was hunting in company with Charles Ottomen, of the same place, James Stephenson, of Kibbie, and a Mr Schaffer, of Spencer. The party started out after game Friday morning and at about noon seperated, with the understanding that should any one of them run onto an abundance of game he was to fire two shots as a signal to the others.

Late in the afternoon the party came together again with the exception of Trowbridge, who did not show up. The men became worried about him and started out in search and at about one o'clock that night his dead body was found lying beside a stump terribly mangled and torn by a charge of shot from the gun he was carrying. Every evidence pointed to the fact that he had climbed upon the stump to gain a better view of the surrounding country and while there the gun had come in contact with the stump and been discharged, emptying its contents into his abdomen.

The remains were taken to Spencer and from there brought to Clapp's undertaking rooms in this village where they were prepared for shipment to South Haven. Deceased was 46 years of age and leaves a wife and four children.—Kalkaska Leader.

Monday Ad. Wolgast purchased of Bert Gardner forty breeding ewes which were added to the already large flock of sheep owned by the champion and which he intends to have increased from time to time. His farming property will be the fields upon which the sheep will graze and his idea of starting one of the largest sheep farms in the northern part of the state is very feasible. He has also purchased several cattle of late and will enter that line of live stock business also. Wolgast is after the sheep raising proposition with a vim that speaks well for its future.—Cadillac News.

An order has been placed by the Pere Marquette road for a new ferry to run on the Lake Michigan route from Ludington in place of the ill fated No. 18, which now is resting under several hundred feet of water, and is now under construction by the American Ship Building Co. of Chicago.

The new ship will be similiar to No. 18 with the exception of some probable late improvements. Its capacity will be about the same. The contract price is $400,000. It is expected the boat will be ready to go into service the first part of the year. The company has undecided what the number of the boat will be.

Arguments on the motion to quash was made by attorneys for E. L. Baldwin, convicted in the justice court of maliciously libeling Chase S. Osborn, republican candidate for governor of Michigan, will be heard on the first day of the Menominee circuit court, on November 21, according to an agreement reached by the attorneys in the case, this week. It was announced at the opening of the present court term that Baldwin's attorneys would make a motion to quash the complaint at this Delta county court term, but a copy of the motion was not served upon the prosecuting attorney and his assistant until Monday of this week. As the motion presents a general denial of any offense being committed and would require extended arguments before the court, it was decided by the attorneys that the matter should not be brought up at this court term but should be set for a hearing on the first day of the Menominee county court.

In an interesting suit tried in circuit court at St. Ignace, Mrs. Lillie E. Walton has been given a verdict for $1,600 against Edward Staley. She had asked damages of $5,000 on the charge of slander. The Republican-News says of the case: "Mrs. Walton is the wife of a Congregational minister whose field of endeavor is in or near Chattanooga, Tenn. She has been coming to St. Ignace for many seasons, finding immunity here from hay fever. Edward Staley is a man of considerable means, a prominent citizen of Paulding, Ohio. He, too, visits St. Ignace to escape from hay fever and in 1907 built himself an old looking but comfortable bungalow on the water's edge at Graham's point. In the summer of 1908, Mrs. Walton visited Mrs. Staley at the bungalow, and she was invited to lay aside her wraps in the latter's room. The ladies had met each other in former years when guests of the same tourist home in the city, and were on cordial terms. In this room Mrs. Staley had left a reticule containing two diamond rings and two return trip railroad tourist tickets. These valuables disappeared. Mr. Staley, it is alleged, accused Mrs. Walton of taking them. The diamonds were found some time after, enclosed in an envelope, and lying in a grass plat near the bungalow by Clyde Sears, then in the employ of J. M. Campbell. Sears took them to Mr. Campbell, and on that gentlemen's advice handed them over to Mr. Hotchkiss, cashier of the First National bank. The tickets were afterward discovered in an envelope by Jerry Lachappelle. Sears and Lachappelle were witnesses in the case the former coming from Springfield, Ohio, and the latter from Flint."

Tries One "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker Buys Two More

The Loomis Sanitarium, Loomis, N. Y., writes "The "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker is very satisfactory. Will you kindly send two more?"

The "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker is one of the few things that everybody takes to, swears by and feels in duty bound to spread among others its usefulness, that they too may enjoy its benefits.

Think of it! By a simple turning on and off of a faucet, the "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker instantly cleans and dries China, Silver, Iron Cooking Utensils, without wetting of the hands or use of a dish towel. No special soap needed—just use any kind you prefer, either whole pieces or scraps. It puts an end to sloppy sinks, sneary soapdishes, slippery cakes of soap and sticky hands. Saves time, labor, worry and money; and enables you to keep the kitchen, the laundry, the butlers' pantry absolutely free from the slop and smell of soap.

You can get a "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker for free trial by applying to the plumber whose name appears below. If after using it ten days you do not find it worth many times its cost, simply return it. It won't cost you a penny to try it so why not get one today.

"Perhaps," acceded Boyd, but when the young man had gone he strode quickly over to Fraser.

"Look here, Mr. 'Frobisher,'" he said in a low tone, "what do you mean by mixing me up in your petty larceny frauds?"

Fraser grinned. "'Frobisher' is not monaker, ain't it? It sounds like the money. I believe I'll stick to 'Frobisher.'"

"I spiked your miserable little scheme, and if you try anything more like that I'll have to cut you out altogether."

"Pshaw!" said the adventurer mildly. "Did you say that hydraulic mine was no good? Too bad! That reporter agreed to take some stock right away."

"Now, see here, Fraser, I want you to leave me out of your machinations absolutely. You've been very decent to me in many ways, but if I hear of anything more like this I shall hand you over to the police."

"Don't be a sucker all your life," admonished the rogue. "You stick to me and I'll make you a lot of money. I like you"—

Emerson, now seriously angry, whirled and left him, realizing that the fellow was morally atrophied. He could not forget, however, that except for this impossible creature he himself would be lying at Frobisher's store at Katmai with no faintest hope of completing his mission, wherefore he did his best to swallow his indignation.

"MR. AGENS SENT ME DOWN TO GET A STORY."

Boyd hurried to a telegraph office and despatched two messages to Chicago, one addressed to his own tailor the other to a number on Lake Shore drive. Over the latter he pondered long, tearing up several drafts which did not suit him, finally giving one to the operator with an odd mingling of timidity and defiance. This done, he hastened to one of the leading banks, and two hours later returned to the hotel, jubilant.

He found Big George in the lobby, staring with fascinated eyes at his finger nails, which were strangely purified and glossy.

"Look at 'em," the fisherman broke out admiringly. "They're as clean as a hound's tooth. They shine so I dassent take hold of anything."

"I have made my deal with the bank," Boyd exulted. "All I need to raise now is $100,000. The bank will advance the rest. That $100,000 makes all the difference in the world. The task is easy now. We will make it go sure. These bankers know what that salmon business is. Why, I had no trouble at all. They say we can't lose if we have a good site on the Kalvik river."

That evening Boyd and George started away, but could not locate Fraser.

When the train pulled out a familiar voice greeted them:

"Hello, you"—and there was Fraser, grinning.

"What are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm on my way east."

"Whereabouts east?"

"Chicago, ain't it? I thought that was what you said." He seated himself and lighted another long cigar.

"Are you going to Chicago?" George asked.

"Sure, we've got to put this cannery deal over," the crook sighed luxuriously and began to blow smoke rings. "Pretty nice train, ain't it?"

"Yes," ejaculated Emerson, undecided whether to be pleased or angered at the fellow's presence. "Which is your car?"

"This one—same as yours. I've got the drawing room."

"What are you going to do in Chicago?"

"Oh, I ain't fully decided yet, but I might do a little promoting. Seattle is too full of Alaskan snares."

The younger man shook his head. "You are impossible," said he, "and yet I can't help liking you."

In Chicago, as in Seattle, Fraser accompanied his fellow travelers to their hotel and would have registered himself under some high sounding alias except for a whispered threat from Boyd.

Promptly at 4 o'clock Emerson called a cab and was driven toward the north side. As the vehicle rolled up Lake Shore drive the excitement under which he had been laboring for days increased until he tapped his feet nervously, clinched his gloved fingers and patted the cushions as if to accelerate the horse's footfalls. Would he never arrive?

The vehicle drew up at last before one of the most pretentious residences, a massive pile of stone and brick fronting the lake with what seemed to him a singularly prepid and chilling aspect. During the moments that he waited he found his body pulsating to the slow, heavy thumping of his heart; then a familiar face greeted him.

"How do you do, Hawkins?" he heard himself saying as a liveried old man ushered him in. "Is Miss Wayland in?"

"Yes, sir; she is expecting you. This way, please."

Boyd followed, thankful for the subdued light which might conceal his agitation. He knew where they were going; she had always awaited him in the library, so it seemed.

Hawkins held the portieres aside, and Boyd heard their velvet swish at his back, yet for the briefest instant he did not see her, so motionless did she stand. Then he cried softly:

"My lady?" and strode forward.

"Boyd, Boyd!" she answered, and came to meet him, yielding herself to his arms. She felt his heart pounding against hers like the heart of a runner who has spent himself at the tape, felt his arms quivering as if from great fatigue. For a long time neither spoke.

CHAPTER VI.

"AND so all your privations and hardships went for nothing," said Mildred Wayland when Boyd had recounted the history of his pilgrimage into the north.

"Yes," he replied; "as a miner I am a very wretched failure."

She shrugged her shoulders in disapproval.

"Don't use that term!" she cried. "There is no word so hateful to me as 'failure'—I suppose because father has never failed in anything. Let us say that your success has been delayed."

"Very well. That suits me better, also, but you see I've forgotten how to choose nice words."

They were seated in the library, where for two hours they had remained undisturbed, Emerson talking rapidly, almost incoherently.

"And you did all that for me," she mused. "I wonder if any other man I know would take those risks just for—me."

"Of course. Why—the risk, I mean the physical peril and hardship and discomfort, don't amount to—that." He snapped his fingers. "It was only the unending desolation that hurt; it was the separation from you that punished me—the thought that some luckier fellow might"—

"Nonsense!" Mildred was really indignant. "I told you to fix your own time, and I promised to wait. Even if I had not—cared for you I would have kept my word. That is a Wayland principle. As it is, it was—comparatively easy."

"Then you do love me, my lady?" He leaned eagerly toward her.

"Do you need to ask?" she whispered from the shelter of his arms. "It is the same old fascination of our girl and boy days. Do you remember how completely I lost my head about you?" She laughed softly. "I used to think you were a football suit better than anybody in the world. Sometimes I suspect that it is merely that same girlish hero worship and can't last. But it has lasted—so far. Three years is a long time for a girl like me to wait, isn't it?"

"I know, I know!" he returned jealously.

"But legions of men are courting you. Oh, I know. Haven't I devoured society columns by the yard? The papers were six months old, to be sure, when I got them, but every mention of you was just like a knife stab to me. I used to torture my lonely soul with pictures of you. You were never out of mind for an hour. My days were given to you, and I used to pray that my dreams might hold nothing but you. You have been my fetish from the first day I met you, and my worship has grown bolder every hour. Mildred. Oh, my lady, how beautiful you are!"

And indeed she was, for her face, ordinarily so imperious, was now softly alight; her eyes, which other men found cold, were kindled with a rare warmth of understanding; her smile was almost wistfully sweet.

He recalled how excited he had been in that faraway time when he had first learned her identity, for the name of Wayland was spoken soundingly in the middle west. In the early stages of their acquaintance he had looked upon her aloofness as an affectation, but a close intimacy had compelled a recognition of it as something wholly natural. He found her as truly patrician as Wayne Wayland, her father, could wish. The old man's domain was greater than that of many princes, and his power more absolute. His only daughter he spoiled as thoroughly as he ruled his part of the financial world, and willful Mildred, once she had taken an interest in the young college man so evidently ready to be numbered among her lovers, did not pause half way, but made her preference patent to all and opened to him a realm of dazzling possibilities.

And when he had graduated how proud of her he had been! How little he had realized the gulf that separated them, and how quickly had been his awakening!

It was Wayne Wayland who had shown him his folly. He had talked to the young engineer kindly, if firmly, being too shrewd an old diplomat to fan the flame of a headstrong love with vigorous opposition.

"Mildred is a rich girl," the old financier had told Boyd, "a very rich girl, one of the richest girls in this part of the world, while you, my boy—what have you to offer?"

"Nothing! But you were not always what you are now," Emerson had replied. "Every man has to make a start. When you married you were as poor as I am."

"Granted! But I married a poor girl from my own station in life. Fortunately she had the latent power to develop with me as I grew so that we kept even and I never outdistanced her. But Mildred is spoiled to begin with. I spoiled her purposely to prevent just this sort of thing. She is bred to luxury, her friends are rich, and she doesn't know any other kind of life."

And so it was that Boyd Emerson had gone to Alaska, to the Klondike, to win a fortune and thus to win the girl he loved. He fixed his own time for returning, and so it was that Mildred Wayland had awaited him.

If today, after three years of deprivation, she seemed to him more beautiful than ever—the interval having served merely to enhance her charm and strengthen the yearning of his heart—she seemed in the same view still further removed from his sphere.

His story finished, Boyd went on to tell her vaguely of his future plans, and at last he asked her, with something less than an accepted lover's confidence:

"Will you wait another year?"

She laughed lightly. "You dear boy, I am not up for auction. This is not the 'third and last call.' I am not sure I could induce anybody to take me even if I desired."

"I read the rumor of your engagement in a San Francisco paper."

She mentioned a number of names, counting them off on her finger tips. "Then, of course, there are the old standbys, Mr. Macklin, Tommy Turner, the Lawton boys"—

"And Alton Clyde!"

"To be sure; little Alton, like the brook, runs on forever. He still worships you, Boyd, by the way."

"Is there any one in particular?" Boyd demanded.

Miss Wayland's hesitation was so brief as almost to escape his notice. "Nobody who counts. Of course father has his predilections and insists upon engineering my affairs in the same way he would float a railroad enterprise, but you can imagine how romantic the result is."

"Who is the favored party?" the young man asked darkly.

"Really it isn't worth discussing. Do you remember when I offered to give it all up and go with you, Boyd?"

"I have never forgotten for an instant."

"You refused to allow it."

"Certainly! I had seen too much of your life, and my pride figured a bit also. But I am going to have you." He drew her to him tenderly. "You are going to be my wife." He repeated the words softly, reverently. "My wife!"

She gazed up at him with a puzzled little frown. "What bothers me is that you understand me and my life so well, while I scarcely understand you or yours at all. That seems to tell me that I am unsuited to you in some way. Why, when you told me that story of your hardships and all that I listened as if it were a play or a book, but really it didn't mean anything to me or stir me as it should. I can't understand my own failure to understand. Do you see what I am trying to convey?"

"Perfectly," he answered, releasing her with a little unadmitted sense of disappointment at his heart. "I suppose it is only natural."

"I do hope you succeed this time," she continued. "I am growing deadly tired of things. Not tired of waiting for you, but I am getting to be old; I am, indeed. Why, at times I actually have an inclination to do fancy work—the infallible symptom. Do you realize that I am twenty-five years old?"

Very Fine Penmanship.

Dr. Hall's "Life of King Charles" records that on the back of One Penny Bob Willis wrote the Ten Commandments, the Creed, the Paternoster, the name and the prayer of our Lord within the compass of a penny and gave her majesty a pair of spectacles of such an artful contrivance that by the help thereof she did plainly and distinctly discern every letter."

A somewhat similar feat was that "rare piece of work brought to pass by Peter Bales, an Englishman, who also exhibited before her majesty the entire Bible written in a book containing as many leaves as a full sized edition, but fitting into a walnut."

Courier Grange Column

Now is the time to prepare a good winter's campaign of grange work. The evenings are getting longer, the work of harvesting our crops will soon be over and we can take stock of our successes and failures during the year and compare them with our brother patrons for the advantage of both. The session of the state grange will soon be over and the plan of state work will be outlined so we may enter upon the new year with new state and subordinate officers ready to help all together to advance the grange cause in Charlevoix county. All of us can do something in fact all that any of us have to do to make our grange a success in every way is to respond to the call of the lecturer. If every patron will do that every grange will be a success. It can't be anything else.

Horton Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay grange met in regular session November 4th, with nineteen members present. With Worthy Master J C Wallace in the chair.

Two candidates were instructed in the mysteries of the first and second degrees.

The "Blues" rendered a short program which ended the contest. The "Blues" seeming the least points have to serve refreshments at the next meeting.

Grange closed in form to meet again November 18. After grange refreshments were served.

Norwood Grange No. 1291

Norwood Grange will have a fair at their hall on the afternoon and evening of November 22. Come, bring your large sugar beet, cabbage, potatoes, pumpkins, squash and get the prize. A prize will be given to the boy in district No. 1 2 and 17 for the best composed essay. Subject to be the history of his town. Essay not to consist of over three hundred words. Also one for the girls of the same districts and on the same plans. Subject, "The Origin of Thanksgiving Day." There will be an entertainment in the evening there will be aprons and other articles for sale, also a prize is to be given on the plate of best apples and canned fruits. Come, everybody can get in. Don't forget the date.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met in regular session Saturday evening, October 29.

After vacant offices were filled we proceeded to the regular order of business.

The secretary announced that the next meeting of Pomona would be held with Barnard Grange, November 17.

Under suggestions for the good of the order several good ideas for keeping up the interest in the grange were brought forth.

Lecturer's hour was omitted on account of degree team practice.

Grange closed in form.

COUNTY NORMAL

The class worked on arithmetic plans last week.

Miss Angeline Hebert visited the normal class, Friday, November 4.

The Misses Emily and Esther Malpas of East Jordan, visited the class, Thursday afternoon, November 3.

Miss Bessie Hanshaw of the class of 1907, visited in the normal room Friday afternoon, November 4, and gave a short but interesting talk to the class. Miss Hanshew is teaching near Clarion and has eleven pupils enrolled. Her school has been provided with one hundred new library books this fall.

Mrs. Wilson, mother of D. L. Wilson, former principal of the high school and of Miss Florence Wilson the seventh grade teacher, visited the normal class, Friday morning, November 4.

Housekeepers for the week are Lula Taylor and Lila Shapton. The editors are Eva Cram and Helen Pulcipher. Andie Delaney is gardener.

Word has been received from Blanche Nowland, of the class of 1910 who is teaching near Vanderbilt. She has an enrollment of twenty-eight pupils.

Reports on observation work during Miss Himes' absence were given last Friday morning by several members of the class.

The following program was given by the "Septem Puellae," Friday afternoon, November 4.

Story—Hazel Price.

Debate—"Resolved that there should be stricter regarding Hallowe'en sports." Negative: Eva Cram and Jennie Bunderman; affirmative: Edith Holt and Helen Pulcipher.

Reading—Reta Carr.

Talk—Andie Delaney.

The judges decided in favor of the affirmative.

Hilton School

The following pupils were neither tardy nor absent during the past month: Belle Wells, Bernice Wells, Ella Mae VanDusen, Orville Hilton, Frankie Cook, Ella Robbins, Catherine Hartwell, Emily Hartwell and Edna Scott.

The percentage of attendance is ninety-eight.

Visitors this month were: Mrs. Henry VanDusen, Miss G. Meggison and Nellie Hull.

Ella Mae VanDusen of the eighth grade and Ellie Cook of the seventh grade will write an essay on the "Origin of Thanksgiving," for the Norwood Grange fair, which will be held in Norwood, November 22.

Our burdock contest proved to be a very successful one. Thirty-three bushels of burrs were gathered. Though there were more girls, the boys had one bushel more than the girls. The candy was given to the boys. But they, knowing that the girls had worked hard, gave them a share of it. Mr. James O'Brien gave the girls a pound of candy of which they also gave the boys a share. While the burrs were going up in smoke, the candy was going down and the children knew where.

RULES ENCOURAGE FORWARD PASS

Toss Will Be Feature of Football Games This Year.

TAKES PLACE OF MASS PLAY.

Restrictions on Push and Pull and Interference Make Its Development Necessary—Coaches See Possibilities of This Play More Than Ever.

With line rushes virtually barred from football games as a result of penalties placed upon the push and pull plays and with end runs and off tackle plays waited for by a defense which has been in no degree weakened, forward passes promise to be a more important feature of football this season than ever before. The forward toss is one of the few departments of the offensive game which have grown in usefulness through revisions in the rules. Coaches are more and more seeking the possibilities this year than before, and critics declare that by the middle of the season the toss will become important a part of the sport as the mass play under the old regime.

Plays around the end and off tackle will vary the forward passes, and plays inside the tackles seldom will be seen in the later games of the season. "The abolition of the push and pull has killed the mass play as nothing else could," is the declaration of a prominent western player. There is no chance for a man to gain more than a yard or so through the line without interference save when the combination is used as a trick play, when it may result in good gains. As is the case with all tricks, the value of the line play this year lies not in the real strength of the play, but rather in the infrequency with which it is attempted and the surprise occasioned.

New Code Favors Pass.

Two parts of the revised rule favor the use of the forward pass. The first of these is the clause permitting the ball to be thrown directly over the line of scrimmage instead of five yards to the side of the snapper back. The second is that which prohibits interference on the part of the defense with men eligible to receive the ball, except that interference which may be incidental to a bona fide attempt to secure the oval. Both these revisions will prove of great assistance to the offense and make the forward pass one of the safest and surest ground gainers which is to the power of coaches to use.

In permitting the ball to be passed directly over the line of scrimmage the rules allow greater leeway than ever before for trick plays, with the forward pass as the mainspring. The variety which can be used in this way is almost unlimited, whereas under the old system of forcing the ball to be thrown to the side the forward pass was handicapped.

The Restrictions on the Toss.

There is a restriction of the forward pass, however, which requires that the man making it be at least five yards behind the line of scrimmage. At first glance this would appear to be a serious handicap, for it might be supposed the back field would be obliged to stand farther back when such a play was contemplated than under ordinary circumstances and in so doing would show its hand to the opposing eleven. Closer study of the play, however, will show this restriction has little effect, for the man who is to make the pass may stand in his regular position until he receives the ball and then drop back the required five yards. In this way he not only covers his own intentions regarding the forward pass, but also gives his teammates time to get into position to receive the throw.

Men eligible to receive the forward pass are more clearly defined this year. The rule book says that all men standing more than a yard back of the line of scrimmage and those on the ends of the line of scrimmage are eligible. Thus the back field, the quarterback and the ends are all possibilities, and as one of these must make the pass there are five men who may receive the ball. Care must be taken that the ends either are on the line of scrimmage or more than a yard back. If they are not on the line of scrimmage or more than a yard back of it they are eligible for the pass neither as backs nor as ends.

Body Check Prohibited.

In the restriction prohibiting the body check by defensive players the side making the forward pass has more chance to complete the play. Before the body check was introduced by Princeton and Pennsylvania there were more completed passes despite the fact that the toss was crude and not nearly so well planned as was the case last year when more than half the attempts resulted in penalties. This was the direct result of the permission of the body check, at once the greatest defensive measure and the most dangerous play brought out by coaches in the last ten years.

ANOTHER PUGILISTIC PHENOM

Storbeck, South African, to Be Groomed For Chance at Jack Johnson.

New fistic phenoms are springing up all over the world, eager for a chance at Jack Johnson. The latest one is John Storbeck, the South African amateur champion, who recently arrived in England. The new candidate for championship honors is a big, young Boer fighter, who won the English amateur championship in a few punches last year, having the best of them in his native style. Storbeck is twenty-one years old, stands fully six feet one inch and weighs when in fair condition 203 pounds. He is a strong, hard hitting fighter that, with some experience, may make things troublesome for the white man who bars designs on Johnson's title. Storbeck never fought professionally, but in trial bouts against the best pugilists that have visited the Cape has more than held his own.

This sounds for a white man is going to prove a harrowing genius, and more than one reputation is going to be blasted before success has perched upon the banner of the knight errant.

After several months of absence from competition Ray Ewry, the world's greatest standing broad and high jumper, is preparing to slip his castor into the ring. For the past few weeks this old athletic chief has been whetting his sapling knife, mixing his war paint and will in another week be ready to take to the warpath.

This tall and willowy veteran for sixteen years has been the world's undisputed champion at standing jumping. Besides holding all the world's records for amateur standing jumping events, he enjoys the distinction of having scored more points in Olympic games than any other athlete. Representing Uncle Sam in four Olympiads, this wonderful athlete has won ten first prizes, rolling up fifty points for Old Glory, a total greater even than the combined scores of Sheridan and Shepard, the individual point winners in the last two sets of Olympic games.

MICHIGAN LEADS THE NATION

In Its Great Opportunities for Successful Culture of Fruit

LETTER FROM OBSERVANT TRAVELER

Written to a Prominent Charlevoix Business Man

If We only Give our Orchards the Attention They Deserve and Co-operate, Increased Wealth will be our Reward.

Dear Sir:

—I thought I would let you know how much I enjoyed the drive I had with you through your section.

I could write a column or so on the subject, but fear it might weary you.

I cannot help however, giving you a few impressions that that trip gave me, of the vast opportunities Western Michigan offers to the man or men, who will see far enough into the future in the matter of fruit culture.

My wandering through the length and breadth of America should give some little right in talk on the subject, as I have for years traveled America, north south, east and west, and believe I know whereof I speak when it comes to a question of fruit and the country best adapted to its culture.

By fruit, of course, I mean, now, fruit such as can be grown in Northern latitudes, apples, peaches, cherries, plums and small fruits, and when one knows, as I profess to do, what is going on in other sections and how really few sections are putting forth efforts to supply the ever-increasing demand, and the fast diminishing supply, I know you will recognize the fact as I do: that the people in Western Michigan, so ideally located for raising the best fruit of all descriptions are letting golden opportunities get by, that in after years they will undoubtedly regret.

If I have not already tired you, I would like to take you on a little trip with me, across a continent, and show you just where Western Michigan "Is at", in this matter of supply and demand.

If you can spare the time, and have this inclination, we will start in away down in Maine. Calais, Maine, is down on the extreme northeast corner, and, to be fair, we should start right. While they might possibly raise a few apples down there, truth compels me to state, that they do not try, nor do they make any effort in any other section of Maine, if we except small sections around Augusta, Monmouth and Bangor. What they do raise would not supply Boston, Massachusetts, or Portland, Maine, more than a couple of weeks.

Practically no apples are raised in Massachusetts, Vermont, or any of the New England States.

Connecticut does raise some peaches, and small fruits.

York State, in that section bordering Lake Ontario, from Oswego to Buffalo, raises some apples 'tis true, but even in that section many of the orchards have been allowed to deteriorate, until they may be termed in the "Down and Out" class.

Pennsylvania, with the exception of about one county, Adams, that lies between Philadelphia and Baltimore, raises but few apples, nor are there any orchards outside of that county worthy of the name.

Ohio, in the whole state, so far as I have seen, would be unable to supply the demands of Cincinnati alone, to say nothing of the other large cities and manufacturing towns, and that of vast territory that stretches down to the Gulf of Mexico.

Indiana has practically no orchards.

Illinois never was noted as a fruit state. Tis true, at one time, Southern Illinois, raised some fruit, and there were many very good orchards there, but the San Jose scale got in there, and the people of that section were so slow in applying modern methods of combating its ravages, that the result is orchards are all in. Missouri, in the vicinity of Springfield and Kansas City, has some orchards, and the territory on its southern border, makes some pretext of raising peaches, but, well, it is not my purpose to knock or boost any particular section, yet truth compels the statement, that Michigan has by soil, environment, and climate, nothing to fear from competition, let it come from where it may.

Colorado, Idaho, Washington and Oregon, in the face of a freight rate almost prohibitive, have certainly given Michigan and the country at large, such an object lesson as to what can be accomplished by brainy work and co-operation, as should make Michigan and Michiganders "Sit up and Take Notice."

Prof. O. K. White gives us a conservative estimate of 10,000,000 trees in Michigan 7,000,000 neglected.

The last census shows us every city, town, village and hamlet, increased in population. These teeming millions all like fruit, and most of them have the price: then co-operate: form fruit growers associations. Give the orchards the attention, they should have and it will not only swell the bank accounts of those who are engaged in orchard culture, but it will undoubtedly increase the land values now so ridiculously low, and will make every struggling, town, village and hamlet, in the Fruit Belt of Western Michigan "sit up and look pleasant."

A new era of prosperity will dawn on the community, and settlers will flock in. In closing I would like to say, that, to one who has the welfare of the community at heart, to the extent of a trip of several thousand miles, merely to find out how fruit could be made to pay, on land worth from $200.00 to as high as $1000.00 per acre, and who brought back, at his own expense and trouble, samples of the goods that were getting the money, why I, for one, am willing to take off my hat to Mr. F. D. Clark of Wolverine, Mich., and remain,

Yours for Michigan,
F. E. BENNETT,
231 N. Boulevard,
Port Huron, Mich.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

"It is a wise and beneficient custom that has taught our people to set aside a day during the season of sere and yellow leaf and after the harvest promised God's people at seed time has been completed, as a day of praise and thanksgiving for the blessings showered upon us. In obedience to the custom showered upon us and hallowed by long observance, I hereby designate Thursday, November 24, as a day to be set apart for the purpose of rendering thanks unto the giver of every good and perfect gift that has come to us as individuals and as people.

"Our state is one of marvelous material resources, and in the year now drawing to a close we have been especially favored. The land has yielded bountifully under the skillful husbandry of intelligent ownership. Her cities are centers of commercial enterprise and the handiwork of our artisans is bringing fame and fortune to our people.

"Our progress is not all along material lines. Religious activity and unity of our people is everywhere manifest and brings assurance of better citizenship, higher ideals, better and purer home life and a continuance of those conditions that have made our state and nation the greatest heritage that has come to any people.

"In recounting our numerous blessings we must not neglect those of our number who are deprived by misfortune or otherwise of just measure of prosperity and happiness. The aged and infirm, upon whom the hand of affliction has been laid, should share our love and material welfare. The day should be one of joy and happiness and we can enrich our lives by deeds of charity by lightening each other's burdens and by carrying for this day some of the blessings of the outside world to those deprived of liberty. The bonds of love and affection should be cemented by bringing together those who make complete the family circle.

"Let us assemble on this day in our places of worship and in the spirit of true devotion thank the Omnipotent Ruler of the Universe for the good measure of peace and prosperity we are permitted to enjoy."

By the Governor,
FRED M. WARNER.

ANOTHER FIRE AT BOYNE

Boyne City, Gaylord and Alpena Railroad Carshops Destroyed.

Fire Hot Blaze Thursday Night—Loss Over Forty-Five Thousand Dollars.

Thursday night another destructive fire visited Boyne City, the machine shop of the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad being destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown. The fire broke out about six o'clock and, owing to the heavy wind, the entire business part of the city was in danger, the prompt work of the fire department prevented the spreading of the fire and although it broke out in several other places being quickly put out and the blaze was confined to the carshops.

Many of the men employed in the shops lost valuable tools. The building was used in addition to a carshop as a foundry machine shop and car barn and was well equipped. Fifty-five men were employed and will be thrown out of work for a time.

The losses are two engines, $15,000 patterns, $9,000; tools, machinery, etc., $15,000; building $5,000; two Russell log cars, $800; tools lost by workmen $680; total $45,400. The insurance will amount to $20,000.

Work will at once commence on the work of rebuilding many improvements being contemplated over the building destroyed.

BAKER FOR SPEAKER

Campbell's Defeat Puts Cheboygan Man Several Laps Ahead

His Election Would be Cause of Gratification to People of Michigan.

One result of the recent election has been to improve the chances of the election of Representative Baker of Cheboygan to the speakership of the house of representative in the state legislature. Speaker Campbell, of the present house, who was his chief opponent, having gone down to defeat.

Mr. Baker is well known in Charlevoix county and his many friends wish him success in gaining the honor which he seeks. During the last session Mr. Campbell imitated Speaker Cannon and rode roughshod over the demands of the people while Mr. Baker was an outspoken advocate of the legislation demanded by the people of Michigan. Aggressive, forceful and pushing, Speaker Baker would be a power in the chair and the people of Michigan would at all times be assured of a square deal.

Mr. Baker in addition to his legislative position in state council of the M. W. A. and chairman of the executive committee of the Michigan state grange. Last summer he spoke at the grange picnic held at Ironton.

WHERE WE COME IN

What it Means for You to Ask Us to Print Drawing Schemes

People do not understand how strict the law is against newspapers announcing anything connected with drawings, raffles, etc. A church fair raffle is just as much barred as is the Cuban lottery. Here is what the law says:

"No newspaper, circular, pamphlet or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise or scheme of any kind, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or containing any list of prize draws or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift, enterprise or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United states."

And then the penalty! Uncle Sam soaks offenders against his laws with no sparing hand. Read this: Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned for not more than two years or both, and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years."

Do you wonder, now that publishers shy at the very mention of a game of chance?—St. Ignace Enterprise.

STATE REWARD ROAD LAW

Effort Will be Made to Amend it Next Winter.

To Allow Department to Pay Reward on Six Miles in Each Township.

At the coming session of the state legislature, the state highway department will have an effort made to have the state road reward law amended so as to allow the department to pay rewards on six miles of road in each township annually, instead of two, the present legal maximum.

The great progress in state road building makes the amendment necessary, and the fact that Wayne county will do a large amount of road work during the next few years is cited as one of the reasons. Many districts of the state, several of which are in the upper peninsula have built long roads, reaching cities in two or more counties. The fact that the counties only receive a portion of the reward due them each year certainly hampers their road improvement programs.

During his recent inspection tour of the upper peninsula Deputy State Highway Commissioner Rogers found more than one instance where the state was unable to pay counties the full rewards on accepted roads. If that law is amended, the department believes the good roads movement will be unrestricted even in counties where big appropriations have been made.

WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS

State Inspector was Present at the Meeting Held November 10.

Thursday, November 10, the last regular meeting of Baxter W. R. C. was a very instructive meeting as Mrs. Anna Dunton of Petoskey, state inspector, was with us and found everything in good shape. She complimented our floor work and said we had made wonderful advancement in two years since she inspected us before. The deed to the G. A. R. cemetery was accepted and placed in charge of the treasurer.

Mary A. Kanady, who leaves soon to spend the winter with her daughter in Philadelphia, was with us as an honored guest. The supper was a success in every way but we would like to have seen more old soldiers out. Are they getting to old or careless? Come boys we need your encouragement to make a success of our work. Don't snub us again.

ONE DEFEAT ONE VICTORY

Record of Charlevoix High School Football Team last Week

PETOSKEY DEFEATED SIX TO NOTHING

Traverse City were Victors by Score of Thirty-two to Nothing

Saturday Game was Hard Fought Contest—First Half was in Petoskey's Favor but Last Half Charlevoix's.

Saturday November 12 proved to be another Charlevoix day in athletics, Charlevoix high school ball team winning from the Petoskey team by a score of 6 to 0.—A hard game was expected as the Petoskey team have been playing excellent football showing much improvment over the first games of the season. The first half of the game can fairly be said to be in Petoskey's favor, but they were kept from scoring only by Charlevoix spirit which has shown itself in previous occasions and prevented a team from making their gains when approaching within striking distance of the Charlevoix goal. During this half, Petoskey carried the ball with in ten or fifteen yards of the Charlevoix goal, and twice tried for a field goal, failing in each instance. At the beginning of the second half the locals were given a lecture by Coach Wise showing them their weak points and imparting to them the true spirit of football which insists every man do his best individually as well as helping his team-mates. The local boys started in the second half a different team, if one may judge by the way they carried the ball down the field scoring a touchdown in a few minutes of playing. During this half, the local boys stuck to straight football, making constant gains through the line and on short end runs. The forward pass was worked twice for good gains but a costly failure of it the third time gave the ball to Petoskey who promptly punted it to the other end of the field, spoiling Charlevoix's hopes for a second touchdown.

The best athletic spirit prevailed during the game which was free from any thing which might be called unnecessary roughness, and also free from any jangling.

The grade and high school teachers with the help of the high school girls spread a banquet at the bank hall at which the high school students, faculty and members, the respective football teams were invited. Songs and high school yells were in order and the best of feeling prevailed between the victors and the vanquished.

The following letter was received from the superintendent of the Petoskey school:

"This is just a note to tell you how much we appreciated the royal good time that your young people gave us while we were in Charlevoix last Saturday. Will you kindly tell your boys and girls that we enjoyed ourselves most thoroughly and that if we must lose football games we prefer to lose them to such generous victors. We hope, however to not only return your hospitality but to change the fortunes of war when next we have the opportunity."

The lack of vim in the first half of the game might possibly be attributed to the defeat given us by the strong Traverse City team to the tune of 32 to 0 on the Traverse City gridiron.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 52 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 10 and the rest of my life will be spent in ahding suffering manhood. I realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. I know there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp, but let me send you my free prescription (and booklet) of private lectures to men which is the result of study since I began lecturing to student classes, way back in '71. Since that time I have cured many cases that are now pleased to recommend me.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you to regain your former standing among men. In short, let me assist you to be yourself once more.

If you are suffering from failing memory, lame back or weakened manhood or nervous chills, LET ME SEND YOU A TEST in a plain sealed envelope that you can try in your own home. I am quite sure you will thank me every day in your life after you have tested it for yourself.

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally.

DR. ANDREW B. SPINNEY,

CRYING FOR HELP

Lots of it in Charlevoix But Daily Growing Less.

The kidneys crying for help.
Not an organ in the whole body so delicately constructed,
Not one so important to health.
The kidneys are the filters of the blood.
When they fail the blood becomes foul and poisonous.
There can be no health where there is poisonous blood.
Backache is one of the first indications of kidney trouble.
It is the kidneys' cry for help. Heed it.
Doan's Kidney Pills are what is wanted.
Are just what overworked kidneys need.
They strengthen and invigorate the kidneys; help them to do their work; never fail to cure any case of kidney disease.

Mrs. D. McDonald, 613 Michigan St., Petoskey Mich., says: "A member of my family used Doan's Kidney Pills when suffering from kidney complaint and received great relief. We hold a high opinion of this remedy."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember, the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Neighborhood Notes

There are four generations on the Mudge farm in the Bay View neighborhood and they were all in the granery at the same time the other day when one of them suggested that they get weighed. Joshua Mudge, the oldest, weighed 134, Elkanah Mudge weighed 133, Grant Mudge weighed 133½, and Earl, the youngest, weighed 134 pounds. This is the second time that four generations have lived on the farm.

Will Alcook, who came to Grand Traverse county from Chicago three years ago, because his health demanded an out door life, has reported the results of this third season at farming. He has a place that is one-half mile square in the river valley of the Boardman river near the eastern edge of Grand Traverse county. On at trifle over an acre of river bottom he raised this year, 1,000 bushels of as fine onions as ever grew out of doors. This was in addition to good crops of hay and oats. As onions retail in the neighborhood of $1 per bushel and Mr. Alcook has a large number of river bottom acres at his command, he has come to the conclusion that the onion industry is good enough for him. He is planning on raising the onions in sufficient quantity to make carload shipments to new markets which he is arranging to develop. By getting the profits of the growing end and the marketing end of the onion business he feels sure that he will soon have a competence.

President H. J. Waters of the Kansas Agricultural College, on a recent occasion expressed himself as follows:

"The International Live Stock Exposition, which will this year be held from November 26th to December 3rd, is the court of last resort in all matters pertaining to the improvement of live stock. It is the place where all controversies regarding superior merit are settled for the year, and as such contributes more to live stock improvement than any other single agency in America. As an object lesson it is unequaled on the continent. As a means of awakening interest in improved live stock, it and similar shows are indispensable. It is a liberal education in live stock production for any farmer, breeder or student to attend the International."

J. H. Moyer, a Boyne City man, finds that he can grow peppermint as well as it is raised in the southern part of the state. Two years ago he planted a few plants on his land and it grew very well. There is a fine spring that runs through the land which makes it possible to irrigate the whole eighty acres. Next spring he will seed eighteen acres of the peppermint and will also build a still. He grows the English mint, which he expects will in a few years yield 50 to 75 pounds to the acre. At present the mint is worth about $2.25. He also has a fine celery garden.

Here's a little statement of facts that go to show the benefits of local option in Elk Rapids: Constable Shannon says that one year ago he was serving from 12 to 15 garnishees before pay day. Since May 1 he has served but five, and two of those were against the same party—a man who is boozing hard and is making frequent trips to Traverse City for his medicine. From a reliable source we learn that at the last pay day at the cement mill no collections had been handed in to the office to be made against the employes, and no orders had been given by any of them to settle pressing debts. This we are assured, is something that never happened before.

Saturday, November 26th, is to be Michigan Day at the United States Land and Irrigation Exposition at Chicago. A special program is being prepared for the occasion by the secretaries of the Western Michigan Development Boreau, the Northeastern Michigan Development Bureau and the Southwestern Michigan Development Bureau. It is expected that the program will include a talk by the governor of the state who is to be invited to attend with his full staff. People in all parts of Michigan are being urged to plan to visit the Michigan exhibits, on this day and to participate in the program now being prepared. It is expected that enough loyal Michigan citizens can be rounded up at Grand Rapids to justify a special train from that city to Chicago. D. H. Day, president of the Western Michigan Development Bureau has finished an experiment concerning light lands. In order to see what can be done on lighter soils of Western Michigan he picked out a strip of ground which is practically pure sand, it being almost in the shadow of the Sleeping Bear which is one of the biggest sand dunes along the Eastern Shore of Lake Michigan. This ground he gave special treatment as regards fertilizers and then planted it to potatoes. His return showed an average of 160 bushels to the acre and in some places the yield was even at a greater rate. A single hill produced twenty marketable tubers. The returns are sufficiently great to insure interest on the capital invested as well as covering the cost of planting, growing and harvesting the crop. It is the belief of Mr. Day that practically all of the Western Michigan country can be made to produce good agricultural returns provided the several soils are given the several kinds of treatment, as regards fertilizers and cultivation required.

BETTER THAN LAST YEAR

Will be Michigan's Exhibit at Chicago Land Show

Which Begins Next Saturday—Plans for Boosting This Section.

The treasury of the Western Michigan Development bureau has been enriched by a check from one of the transportation companies for $1,000 for furthering the work of developing this section of the state.

Darling & Beahan, the Petoskey seed men, have sent a collection of Michigan grown seeds to the land show at Chicago. The assortment includes potatoes, beans, peas and assorted seeds, which altogether made one of the finest collections ever shown at a similar exposition.

W. R. Roach & Co., of Hart, who conduct a large canning plant, will make a much larger display at the land show this year than they did last. All kinds of canned fruit will be placed on display, which is put up at their plant.

Word comes from Chicago that the western Michigan display will be much better than the one shown last year, and also that the booklet is a much finer piece of work than was at first expected. It is very attractive and will be a great help in advertising this region.

It was at first proposed to give a western Michigan farm away at the land show to advertise the country, but the suggestion caused such a furore among the western land boomers that they decided to outdo the bureau even if they had to give away a whole county to keep ahead of the procession. The question of disposing of the farm has been taken under advisement and a decision in the matter will be forthcoming later.

IN PRIME OF LIFE

Emory Baldwin's Illness Proves to be Fatal—Leaves Wife and Child.

Emory Baldwin, whose illness we mentioned last week, died at the hospital at Manitowoc Wisconsin last Friday. The body was brought home Monday and the funeral took place yesterday under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, of which he was a valued member.

Mr. Baldwin was one of the most respected residents of the city, having lived here the greater portion of his life, having been for several seasons engineer of the steamer Cummings, and his death in the prime of life, being only thirty six years of age, is the cause of universal sorrow among his numerous friends and citizens generally.

He leaves a wife and small child

UNPRECEDENTED OPPORTUNITY

Three Great Shows at One Time in Chicago.

One of the most valuable features of the International Live Stock Expositions of Chicago this year, and which takes place on the dates of November 26th to December 3rd, inclusive, is that it occurs at the same time at which the "Land Show" and "Apple Show" are held. These great exhibitions, presented at the same time in the great city, or Chicago, that wonderful metropolis of the West, and the food depot of the world, offers an unprecedented opportunity to everyone who is interested in farming, breeding, the development of land, and the apple growing industry, such as has never occurred before, to pay a visit to Chicago at this time. Apart from the pleasures of the trip, they will be able to kill three birds with one stone, as well do their shopping and domestic purchasing at the most interesting season of the year, when the stores are filled with everything that appeals to everybody, in addition to taking away with them a fund of practical knowledge that will be of incalculable value in after years.

C. H. S. NOTES.

The pupils of the seventh and eight grades have been working on musical operetta "Ou Plymouth Rock." It portrays in song costume, and recitation, the life of the early Pilgrims which is so familiar to the student of history, and which arouses in us a feeling of respect and admiration for those who, to have freedom of worship, came to this country and endured so many hardships. The operetta is especially appropriate for the Thanksgiving season. It will be given in the high school assembly room Wednesday evening November 23, at 8 p. m.

A small admission charge of ten and fifteen cents will be charged, the funds to be used in paying for the costumes and the purchase of pictures for the seventh and eighth grade assembly rooms.

All patrons and friends of the school are especially urged to be present.

ROAD NEGLECT BY GOVERNMENT

Railway Man Shows Money Is Wasted on Highways.

WILL SAVE FARMERS MILLIONS

B. F. Yoakum Talks to National Convention on Development of Country as Proof That Highways Should Be Improved by National Appropriation.

One of the most interesting addresses delivered before the National Good Roads association at Niagara Falls recently was that of B. F. Yoakum, chairman of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad company. The keynote of his address was that the government wastes enough to build all highways and the saving to farmers of millions of dollars. The salient points of his speech were:

"Your organization stands for a duty sadly neglected by the government. Good roads mean more for the people at large than any other public work and add more to the comfort and upbuilding of the country. They are of national importance.

"Government statistics tell us that it costs our farmers 15 cents more to haul one ton one mile in this country than it costs in European countries. The products of the farms of the United States last year amounted to approximately 250,000,000 tons. The government shows the average haul of a ton was nine miles. This difference of 15 cents a ton per mile represents an additional cost of $1.35 a ton for an average haul of nine miles. Estimating that two-thirds of the agricultural products of last year were hauled away from the farms, there would have been a saving to the American farmers of $225,000,000 if our roads had been up to the standard of European roads, not including their back haul of supplies from the stations to the farms. They would also have saved large sums in the cost of replacing and repairing harness, wagons, etc., and in the investment and care of extra draft stock.

"It took three-quarters of a century to build up the American railroads. During the same time little attention has been given to the building up of American country roads. Yet the value of the two to the public goes hand in hand. Food and clothing must be handled between the producers and the consumers over both the country road and the railroad. It is important that the country roads approach the high standard of the railroads.

"The greatest value of good roads will be to the farmers who have not as yet become interested. You have not yet found a way to reach them to properly place your arguments and statistics before them. They need to be shown that the poorest roads are the most expensive roads. They have not been shown that their broken wagons, broken harness and blacksmith bills cost them more than the cost of having good roads. They have not been shown that a four dollar a day team can do twice the work over good roads, which makes that team worth to them $8 a day. The way to get good roads is to make all the people know them and keep them constantly in mind. The transportation system which carries our food and clothing from maker to user is part railroad and part country road. One part is as necessary as the other. Your organization in its support of the betterment of our public highways should talk in millions instead of thousands.

"We have 2,100,000 miles of public roads. From the best information obtainable there are about 44,000 miles, or two miles out of each 100, under a high standard of improvement. There are not more than 175,000 miles, or eight miles out of each 100, under any kind of improvement. In other words, we have 1,925,000 miles of public roads which are in as poor condition now as they were when they were laid out by our early settlers and pioneers.

"If we build 100,000 miles of public highways annually for ten years and give to this country 1,000,000 miles of good public roads at an average cost of $3,000 a mile, or $300,000,000 annually, we will be engaging in a national development the advantages of which in economies, commerce, comforts and enhanced land values none can foretell. We will be accomplishing something worth while. This work of carried on by counties and townships as at present will be very slow. It should be encouraged under a broad, comprehensive plan outlined by the federal government, co-operating with the states. The agricultural department of the government is in sympathy with all things that tend to improve our public road system.

"Your association should have aggressive organizations in every state and have working relations with all commercial, manufacturing and agricultural institutions. While I can speak but for one system of railroads, I feel confident that every railroad of the country will be in sympathy and work in harmony to aid in the development of the country's public highways, with a view of upbuilding and increasing the production of existing cultivated fields and adding new acres that are now lying idle for lack of rail transportation or good cut to encourage their cultivation."

Asphalt Roads in Massachusetts.

It is the expectation of the Massachusetts highway commission to extend the use of asphalt compounds for the coming season in its roadmaking. The general opinion of its engineers last year as the season progressed was that the asphalt products were more reliable and gave better results than the tar products; also that it appeared that the asphalt would wear for a greater length of time. As a result of its experiments the commission treated many miles of macadam surface, which was badly worn, by filling all ruts, holes and depressions with a mixture of asphalt, oil and gravel or a sharp sand or stone and stone screenings, the road being evened up and brought as nearly as possible to a uniform smooth surface. Then the road was coated with from one-fourth to a half gallon of hot asphalt oil to the square yard. The oil was laid on as evenly as possible over the surface, being spread with a broom where necessary. It was then immediately covered with sand, gravel or screenings spread evenly over the road surface in sufficient quantities to absorb all of the oil. If oil appeared it was covered from time to time, so that no oil should come in contact with passing vehicles.

Starters of Good Roads.

If highways are an evolution from the primary paths made by animals and men, the first roadmakers did not make their paths straight certainly, and many a road today is a monument to the leaders in roadmaking of the long ago. Nevertheless it is said that some animals, the buffalo especially, were pretty fair engineers. They had an eye for grade, which cannot be said of some of their successors. In the west engineers hunting pathways for railroads are said to have largely followed buffalo trails.

Good Road Legislators Needed.

"What we need in this country," says a good roads expert, "is legislators who are willing to sacrifice their political future in behalf of good roads. In thus dying politically they will have rendered more service to their country than by living many years. We like the temper of those Alabama folk who are demanding of candidates for office that they speak out plainly for better roads."

Value of Good Highways.

Good roads are the most valuable asset a county can possess. Every farm within their operation is largely increased in value. The farmer is closer to his markets, his church and to the city. The conveniences and pleasures of country life are enhanced tenfold.

First American Macadam Road.

The first road to be built according to the macadam method in the United States was begun in the year 1792. It was called the Lancaster pike and extended from Philadelphia to Lancaster, Pa., a distance of sixty miles.

The Dessert.

A patriotic lady entertained a company of soldiers at dinner one Memorial day. It was a good dinner, and at its end a pretty maidservant entered with a superb dessert.

"Dessert, sergeant?" she said to the stalwart young soldier at the head of the table.

"Dessert?" the sergeant answered. "When I can get eats like this for nothin'? Nixie! Not me!"

Gyroscope Cars.

The lubricating mechanism of a gyroscope car has to be filled with an alcohol to which the engineer if the oil supply is given out. If at should the fluid in the reservoir would get into and through the bearings in an instant.

English and American Footwear.

A pair of English bench (hand) made shoes will wear a long time, but an American wouldn't wear them as a gift.

Heavy, clumsy rubbers like English bench made shoes would no doubt wear longer than the fine rubbers generally worn, but the American people will not wear heavy rubbers. That question has been settled after several ineffectual attempts by the manufacturers to induce their wear.

The nearest approach to an extremely serviceable rubber in use today, are the Ultmax Bear Brand Rubbers manufactured by the Wales Goodyear Company. These rubbers are especially adapted for boys and girls wear and for men and women who must have rubbers that will wear, they are made as strong as it is possible without making them clumsy.

Election resulted about as published last week. A regular Democratic land slide took place in the nation at large. Michigan was true to Republicanism with the exception of the first and fifth congressional districts, both electing democratic congressman.

Lean days are approaching for those who draw a salary from the state treasury. There is only sixty thousand dollars left in the general fund with which to pay the salary account this month and cash will probably be pretty scarce next month, state officials say.

Yesterday the Pere Marquette track laying gang consisting of about fifty men commenced laying the track to the cement factory which will enable the heavy machinery to be shipped to the plant which only awaits its arrival to commence the manufacture of hydrated lime.

At the meeting of the state prison board of control held at Jackson last week, it was decided to recommend the purchase of a farm of five hundred acres to be operated in connection with the prison. The price of binder twine was fixed for next year at a reduction of fifty cents a thousand pounds from last year's price, and the twine plant will be enlarged.

Fred C. Wetmore of Cadillac, formerly state senator and manager of Senator Burrows' Detroit headquarters during the senatorial primary, has received his appointment as United States district attorney for the western Michigan district. He succeeds George E. Covell, who has held the office for nearly thirteen years. Edward J. Bowman, city attorney of Greenville probably will be assistant district attorney.

Benjamin Brown, our hustling harness dealer, takes two entire pages this week in announcing the offerings which he is showing in harnesses, horse furnishing goods, robes, blankets, fur coats, bicycles, trunks, suit cases, stock food and veterinary remedies. This is probably the largest advertisment ever run by a harness dealer in Northern Michigan and is in line with the progressive business policy of Mr. Brown.

AIR MAN SAYS CAT MASCOT GIVES HIM LUCK.

John Moissant, the Chicago air man, who startled the world by flying from Paris across the English channel with a passenger, has a cat for a mascot. The famous air man never travels or makes an ascension without his feline companion. Moissant says he has had the cat for many years, and it has given him all kinds of luck. The cat accompanied him and his mechanician in the flight from Paris to England. He says he would call off an ascension if anything should happen to his feline pet.

Needless Fears.

The debonair young man was patronizing the barber shop manicure. "Don't you know, the thought often strikes me when I'm getting shaved," he chattered, "what a terrible position I'd be in if the barber suddenly became a raving maniac!"

"Oh, don't worry about that," said the lady sweetly. "I don't think anybody will ever go crazy over you."—Argonaut.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

The portieres parted, and Wayne Wayland stood in the opening.

He advanced to shake the young man's hand, his demeanor gracious and hearty. "Welcome home. You have been having quite a vacation, haven't you? Let's see, it's two years, isn't it?"

WAYNE WAYLAND STOOD IN THE OPENING.

"Three years!" Emerson replied.

"Impossible! Dear, dear, how time flies when one is busy!"

"Boyd has been telling me of his adventures," said Mildred. "He is going to dine with us."

"Have you come home to stay?" asked the father.

"No, sir. I shall return in a few weeks."

Mr. Wayland's cordiality seemed to increase in some subtle manner.

"Well, I am sorry you didn't make a fortune, my boy. But, rich or poor, your friends are delighted to see you, and we shall certainly keep you for dinner. I am interested in that northwestern country myself, and I want to ask some questions about it."

It was well on toward midnight when Emerson reached his hotel, and, being too full of his visit with Mildred to sleep, he strolled through the lobby and into the Pompeian room.

"Boyd Emerson! By Jove, I'm glad to see you!" He turned to face an anaemic youth whose colorless gas bleached face was wrinkled into an expansive grin.

"He'o, Alton!"

They shook hands like old friends, while Alton Clyde continued to express his delight.

"So you've been roughing it out in Nebraska, eh?"

"Alaska!"

"So it was. I always get those places mixed. Come over and have a drink. I want to talk to you. Funny thing, I just met a Klondiker myself this evening. Great chap too. I want you to know him; he's himense. His name is Froelich, but he isn't a Dutchman. Come on, you'll like him."

Clyde led his companion toward a table.

Mr. Froelich shoved back his chair and turned, exposing the face of "Fingerless" Fraser, quite expressionless save for the left eyelid, which drooped meaningly.

"'Froelich!'" said Boyd angrily; "good heavens, Fraser, have you picked another? I thought you were going to stick to 'Frobisher.'" Turning to Clyde, he observed: "This man's name is Fraser. One of his peculiarities is a dislike of proper names. He has never found one that suited him."

"I like 'Froelich' pretty well," observed the imperturbable Fraser. "It sounds distinguay and"—

"Don't believe anything he tells you," Boyd broke in, seating himself. "He is the most circumstantial liar in the northwest, and if you don't watch him every minute he will sell you a hydraulic mine or a rubber plantation or a sponge fishery. Underneath his eccentricities, however, he is really a pretty decent fellow, and I am indebted to him for my presence here tonight."

Alton Clyde made his astonishment evident by inquiring incredulously of Fraser, "Then that scheme of yours to establish a gas plant at Nome was all"—

"Certainly," Emerson laughed. "The incandescent lamp travels about as fast as the prospector. Nome is lighted by electricity and has been for years."

"Is it?" demanded Fraser, with an assumption of the supremest surprise. "You know as well as I do."

"H'm! I'd forgotten. Just the same, my plan was a good one. Gas is cheaper." He reached for his glass, at which Clyde's eye, fell upon his thrissing fingers, and the young clubman exploded:

"Well, if that's the kind of pill you are, maybe you didn't lose your mitt in the Boer war either."

Emerson answered for the adventurer: "Hardly! He got blood poisoning from a hangnail."

Clyde began to laugh uncontrollably. "Really, that's great! Oh, that's lovely!"

Clyde said he was in poor health and wanted a chance to regain lost appetite and lost money.

"I'll give you a chance to recoup," said Boyd. "I am here to raise some money on a good proposition."

The younger man leaned forward eagerly. "If you say it's good that's all I want to know. I'll take a chance. I'm in for anything from pitch and toss to manslaughter."

"I'll tell you what it is and you can use your own judgment."

"I haven't a particle," Clyde confessed. "If I had I wouldn't need to invest. Go ahead, however; I'm all ears." The other outlined the plan. To Clyde, Boyd Emerson had ever represented the ultimate type of all that was most desirable, and time had not lessened his admiration.

"It looks as if there might be a jolly rumpus, doesn't it?" he questioned.

"It does."

"Then I've got to see it. I'll put in my share if you'll let me go along."

"You go! Why, you wouldn't like that sort of thing," said Emerson, considerably nonplused.

"Oh, wouldn't I? I'll eat it! It's just what I need. I'd revel in that outdoor life." He threw back his narrow shoulders. "I'm a regular scout when it comes to roughing it. Why, I camped in the Thousand Islands all one summer, and I've been deer hunting in the Adirondacks. We didn't get any—they were too far from the hotel. But I know all about mountain life."

"This is totally different," Boyd objected, but Clyde ran on, his enthusiasm growing as he fluted the mental picture to suit himself.

Clyde was lost in an exposition of his fitness as a fisherman when Fraser burst out:

"Hello! There's George."

CHAPTER VII.

EMERSON turned to behold Balt's huge figure all hat blocking the distant door.

"Call him in," said Clyde quickly. "I want to meet him. He looks just my sort." And accordingly Emerson motioned to the fisherman. Seeing there was no help for it, Big George composed himself and ventured timidly across the portal.

"Gimme a lemonade, quick; I'm all het up," he ordered. "I can't get no foothold on these fancy floors, they're so dang slick."

"Mr. Clyde offers to put $10,000 into the deal if he can go to Kaivik with us and help run the cannery," explained Emerson.

George looked over the chinaman carefully from his curly crown to his slender, high heeled shoes, then smiled broadly.

"It's up to Mr. Emerson. I'm willing if he is." Wherefore, vastly on our guard, Clyde proceeded to expatiate upon his own surpassing qualifications. While he was speaking a party of three men approached and seated themselves at an adjoining table. As they pulled out their chairs Big George chanced to glance in their direction, then put down his lemonade glass carefully.

"What's the matter?" Boyd demanded in a low tone, for the big fellow's face had suddenly gone livid, while his eyes had widened like those of an enraged animal.

"That's him!" George growled. "That's the dirty hound!"

"Sit still!" commanded Emerson. "Don't make a fool of yourself," he cautioned.

"That's him!" repeated George, his eyes glaring redly. "That's Willis Marsh."

"Where?" Emerson whirled curiously, but there was no need for George to point out his enemy, for one of the strangers stood as if frozen, with his hand upon the back of his chair, an expression of the utmost astonishment upon his face. A smile was dying from his lips.

Boyd beheld a plump, thickset man of thirty-eight in evening dress. There was nothing distinctive about him except, perhaps, his hair, which was of a decided reddish hue. He was light of complexion; his mouth was small and of a rather womanish appearance, due to the full red lips. He was well groomed, well fed; in all ways he was a typical city bred man. Raising his brows in recognition, he nodded pleasantly to Balt, then, as if on second thought, excused himself to his companions and stepped toward the other group.

"DON'T OFFER ME YOUR HAND; IT'S DIRTY."

"How do you do, George? What in the name of goodness are you doing here? I hardly recognized you." Marsh's voice was round and musical, his accent eastern. With an assumption of heartiness, he extended a white gloved hand, which the big, uncouth man who faced him refused to take. The other three had risen. George seemed to be groping for a retort. Finally he blurted out hoarsely:

"Don't offer me your hand. It's dirty! It's got blood on it!"

"Nonsense!" Marsh smiled. "Let's be friends again, George. Bygones are bygones."

"You dirty rat!" breathed the fisherman.

"Very well. If you wish to be obstinate"—Willis Marsh shrugged his shoulders carelessly, although in his voice there was a metallic note—"I have nothing to say. Mr. Balt and I had a business misunderstanding," he said smoothly to Emerson, "which I hoped was forgotten. It didn't amount to much"—

At this Balt uttered a choking snarl and stepped forward, only to meet Boyd, who intercepted him.

"Behave yourself!" he ordered. "Don't make a scene." And before the big fellow could prevent it he had linked arms with him and swung him around. The movement was executed so naturally that none of the patrons of the cafe noticed it except perhaps as a preparation for departure. Marsh bowed civilly and returned to his seat. Alton Clyde clamored for enlightenment as to the reason for this eruption.

"That is the fellow we will have to fight," Boyd explained. "He is the head of the cannery combination at Kaivik and a bitter enemy of George's."

Clyde spoke earnestly. "Well, that absolutely settles it as far as I am concerned. This is bound to end in a row."

"You mean you don't want to join us?"

"Don't want to! Why, I've just got to, that's all. The $10,000 is yours."

A month had elapsed when Emerson at last expressed to George the discouragement that had lain silently in both men's minds.

"You've played your string out, eh?"

"Absolutely. I've done everything except burglary, but I can't raise that $100,000. Times are hard, and I've bled my friends of every dollar they can spare."

"It's an awful big piece of money," Balt admitted, with a sigh.

"I never fully realized before how very large," Boyd said. "And yet without that amount the Seattle bank won't back us for the remainder."

"Oh, it's no use to tackle the business on a small scale." Big George pondered. "We'd ought to be on the roast now. We're shy $25,000, eh?"

"Yes."

But the clouds were blown away a few days after when Alton Clyde threw down twenty five $1,000 bills before Boyd—got from a mysterious source which he refused to name.

Emerson later met the bedding suitor aside from himself in Mildred Wayland's hand, a personage whose existence he felt as a continued menace. He was visiting Mildred at her home.

Hearing voices outside the library the young man asked hurriedly: "Give me some time alone with you, my lady. I must leave early."

There was time for no more, for Wayne Wayland entered, followed by another gentleman at the first sight of whom Emerson started, while his mind raced off into a dizzy whirl of incredulity. It could not be! It was too grotesque—too ridiculous! What prank of malicious fate was this? He turned his eyes to the door again to see if by any chance there were a third visitor, but there was not, and he was forced to respond to Mr. Wayland's greeting. The other man had meanwhile stepped directly to Mildred, as if he had eyes for no one else, and was bowing over her hand when her father spoke.

"Mr. Emerson, let me present you to Mr. Marsh. I believe you have never happened to meet here." Marsh turned as if reluctant to release the girl's hand, and not until his own was outstretched did he recognize the other.

The two mumbled the customary salutations.

"You two will get along famously," said Mr. Wayland. "Mr. Marsh is acquainted with your country, Boyd."

"Ah!" Marsh exclaimed quickly. "Are you an Alaskan, Mr. Emerson?"

"Indeed, he is so wedded to the country that he is going back tomorrow," Mildred offered.

Marsh's first look of challenge now changed to one of the liveliest interest, and Boyd imagined the fellow endeavoring to link him, through the affair at the restaurant, with the presence of Big George in Chicago.

"Yes," Boyd answered effusively, "I am a typical Alaskan—disappointed, but not discouraged."

"What business?"

"Mining!"

"Oh!" indifferently.

"Boyd has something far better than mining now," began Mildred. "He was telling me about it as"—

"You interrupted us," interjected Emerson, pale stricken. "I didn't have time to explain the nature of my enterprise."

Finds "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker Indispensable

Money Couldn't Buy it if it could not be Replaced

Crescent News & Hotel Co., Bowling Green, Ky., write "we now have a "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker in operation and frankly admit it could not be bought from us could we not replace it with another."

Why not let the "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker work for you? It will put an instant end to all the disagreeable features of dish-washing and enable you to keep the kitchen, laundry, etc., absolutely free from the slop and slime of soap.

Just turn the faucet and get rich, creamy suds. No special soap required—use any kind you like—whole pieces or scraps. Makes grease and dirt disappear as if by magic. Gives you plenty of spare time. Saves health, strength and money. Think of the bother and time saved when you want any quantity of soap and water—and here it is thoroughly mixed in scientific proportions and always ready to meet your instant need.

The Plumber whose name appears below will upon request let you have a "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker for free trial. Try it ten days—then if you want to go back to the old way simply return it. The trial in no way obligates you. Act to-day.

A Bank for All

We invite you to do your banking business with this Bank. We want you because we are ever ready to help the man who wants to help himself.

We believe this to be one of the most important functions of a bank, and we are never too busy to give personal help and personal attention to every man who wants to have a bank account, no matter how small his deposits are.

This bank has enjoyed remarkable success because it has been a bank for all the people in which the laboring man's dollar is just as big and just as much appreciated as the rich man's thousands. Also because its accomodations, advice and assistance have been for no single class, but for all its depositors alike.

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange No. 1451 met in regular session at the Pleasant Valley schoolhouse on Tuesday evening, November 8. The regular order of business was short. The trade committee were not ready to report but expect to have an interesting report to make at the next meeting. The men's meeting was announced for next week Tuesday evening at the school-house. The ladies this week with Sister Ann P. Newville.

The lecture hour was taken up with a song by the grange, a violin solo by John R. Newville, a humorous reading with a moral by Sister Marcia H. Burdick, and a debate on the question, "Resolved that the United States Senate should be Abolished." The affirmative was led by Bro. W. C. Burdick assisted by Bro. O. D. Willson and Sister Violet Lunks, the negative by Sister Mildred Letrer assisted by Bro. J. A. Newville and Bro. E. D. Willson. The judges were unable to agree as to which side won being two to one in favor of the affirmative.

Worthy Lecturer O. D. Willson appointed Bro. and Sister H. L. Willson to prepare the program for the next meeting which will be held on Tuesday evening, November 22. All members requested to be present.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met in regular session, November 5, with forty-eight members and one visitor present.

After the regular order of business one candidate was instructed in the first and second degrees and two in the third and fourth.

Lecturer's hour was carried out with songs, stories and recitations.

The ladies will hold their contest and auction sale the Tuesday after Thanksgiving as the Tuesday before Thanksgiving is grange meeting.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

The Boy's Clean Security

"Mister, do you lend money here?" asked an earnest young voice at the office door.

The lawyer turned away from his desk, confronted a clear-eyed, poorly dressed lad of twelve years, and studied him keenly for a minute. "Some times we do—on good security," he said gravely.

The little fellow explained that he had a chance "to buy a boy that's crying' papers." He had half the money required, but he needed to borrow the other fifteen cents.

"What security can you offer?" asked the lawyer.

The boy's hand sought his pocket and drew out a paper carefully folded in a bit of calico. It was a cheaply printed pledge against the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco. As respectfully as if it had been a deed to a farm, the lawyer examined it, accepted it, and handed over the required sum.

A friend who had watched the transaction with silent amusement laughed as the young borrower departed.

"You think I know nothing about him?" smiled the lawyer. "I know that he came manfully in what he supposed to be a business way, and tried to negotiate a loan instead of begging the money. I know that he has been under good influence, or he would not have signed that pledge, and that he does not hold it lightly, or he would not have cared for it so carefully. I agree with him that one who keeps himself from such things has a character to offer as security."—Exchange.

Literary Notes

A Word About Taft's Secretary

"The delicacy of the diplomat the strategy of the statesman, the facility of the politician, the courage, keenness and common sense of all successful men of affairs, the patience of Job and herculean ability for work," says the Woman's Home Companion for November "These qualities have been stated as the ordinary requirements for the office of secretary to the President of the United States. Mr. Norton, who a few months ago, took up the the duties of this position, is believed to possess all the qualities set forth above. Mr. Norton has made a rather rapid ascent up the the ladder of fame. He seems to have done this not only by his remarkable combination of gift but by his readiness to forego, in the public service, a large salary. He left a position that paid him fifty thousand dollars a year to become first assistant secretary of the treasury at a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars. He plunged into the details of the work of the White House with such vim that neither he nor any one else noticed until the end of the first day that he had neglected to take the oath of office. One morning later, at Beverly he refused to let the President have his letters because the latter was on a vacation and could not be allowed to do any work until he had had ten days of recreation. Norton is tall, slender, active, cordial, well poised, self-reliant and clean mentally and morally. He is in his fortieth year."

THEATRICAL

Monday night the Petoskey Catholic Club will present at the Charlevoix theater the thrilling frontier drama in four acts entitled "Wah-na-ton,"—or "Way Out West".—Last week the company presented the play twice in Petoskey and the papers of that city pronounce it one of the best home talent plays ever presented in that city.

The lead is played by Wilbur Fochtman who is ably supported by the entire cast, everyone having devoted much study to the characters in which they appear, and a first-class entertainment awaits the patrons of our popular place of amusement.

"A Mis-spent Life"

Will be presented tomorrow night (Thursday) November 17, at the Charlevoix Theater. This play will be one of the heaviest hits ever attempted by local talent.

You will be enabled to witness a dramatization of one of Robert Louis Stevenson's famous novels.

This attraction has never before been staged in Charlevoix and may never be seen here again.

The Charlevoix City Band will give a concert before the show in front of the theater. Specialties will be introduced.

Come to Johnston for bargains in real estate as I have some good farms and city property to trade or sell on easy terms. Also resort lots west of Holy Isle. Joel Johnston. 38tf

Farm and Garden

NORTHERN GRAIN APHIS.

Michigan Authority Believes Its Bark Is Much Worse Than Its Bite.

Probably the most misleading insect on the grains if not on the farm is the common northern grain aphis. It collects during some seasons in great numbers on the heads of wheat, rye, barley, oats, sorghum and other near relatives of the grass family, sometimes fairly packing full the spaces in the heads of these plants and seeming to threaten their very existence. This gathering in great numbers usually occurs just as the grain is in the milk. In all the instances seen by the writer, R. H. Pettit of the Michigan experiment station, the threatened injury has been averted by tiny parasites, which have destroyed the plant lice and reduced the loss to a nominal one.

The northern grain aphis appears very much like other plant lice, both winged and wingless forms being found. The color is green with black markings. The illustration gives an idea of its appearance under a strong lens. Before the grain commences to ripen the parasites usually commence to destroy the lice. These parasites are black for the most part and about one-tenth of an inch in length. They move about with a quick, nervous motion. They lay their eggs in the living bodies of the lice. The grubs or larvae from the eggs feed on the body contents of the living lice, and when full grown each spins a cocoon inside the skin of the dead louse, swelling it to a pear shape and changing the color to a brown or copper tint. After pupation occurs inside this cocoon the parasite cuts a neat circular door in the skin of the louse in order to get out.

The multiplication of the plant lice is rapid indeed, but that of the parasites is still more rapid, so that before the grain is killed the lice are for the most part destroyed. Of course this may not always occur, but so far the writer's experience with them has been that their bark is far worse than their bite.

Cultivating the Corn Crop.

The essential thing in corn cultivation is to keep the ground free from weeds and covered with a soil mulch. The results of fifty-six different tests at seventeen different agricultural experiment stations show an average increase of 12 per cent resulting from shallow cultivation as compared with deep cultivation. In moist years cultivation is of less importance than in dry years.

Agriculture In a High School.

The Stockton (Cal.) board of education proposes to introduce agriculture at the opening of the fall term of its high school and to "teach all the high school sciences from an agricultural standpoint."

Right!

The man who spends much time in his garden or orchard or field won't have to spend much time in the market when he gets ready to sell.

FOR THE THINKING FARMER.

Examine the crowns and roots of peach trees for borers. A mass of gum is an indication of the insects. They can be dug out with a knife and destroyed. A fine wire will also get them out.

When planting large, flat seeds set them in the ground edgewise. Germination is more certain.

Two experiment stations—Kansas and Nebraska—have had satisfactory results from seeding a mixture of alfalfa and brome grass for permanent pastures. The presence of the brome grass so reduces the danger from bloat that the value of alfalfa pastures becomes available.

A good seed, good culture, good crops and good farmers go together. Don't bank on luck.

New land will always raise a crop, but it takes care and labor to keep old fields productive.

The man who plows with a purpose will always beat the man who spurts without planning.

Every farmer should do all he can to make farm life attractive for his children so they will not desire to leave the farm.

Some farmers are too busy in their cornfields to stop and read the papers and miss the item telling how to double the crop. A better way is to rest and read an hour at noon. Such time is never lost.

Don't forget "A Mis-spent Life" Thursday night, November 17.

WESTERN FRUIT GROWERS' ASSO'N

What It has Accomplished for the Growers of Oregon

FEW VARIETIES SHOULD BE RAISED

Extreme Carefulness Should be Exercised in Packing

Country has Gone Crazy Over Fruit—Prices are Much Lower—Interesting Letter From A. R. Strutkers.

Grant's Pass, Oregon, Nov. 9

Editor COURIER:—Well here we are two hundred ionty-five miles south of Portland. We have been here six weeks, and have had lovely weather until today. To-morrow is election day and it is to be decided whether it will be dry or wet, with old dame nature helping the wets. Today is the first rainy day we have had in Grant's Pass in six weeks. It has been a strenuous time for the wets; they have kept high priced orators, including the "Hon. David Rose, ex-mayor, of Milwaukee, the great temperance lecturer" racing up and down Oregon, telling among other things, that Michigan is tired of local option, that the counties that went dry are sure to go wet again next spring; that there is more liquor sold and drank now than when the saloons were running wide open. If this be true why does the wets spend so much money to defeat prohibition; I should think they would be glad to save the license money. They are trying to prove to much.

There is a fruit growers association with headquarters here and they have shipped many hundreds of car loads of apples, pears, peaches, strawberries, etc. There are a few things that fruit growers over there would have to heed and one of them is to plant only two or three varieties. When they ship fruit they try to get only one variety in a car, and all of one grade, the secretary of the association told me that he always has trouble in placing a mixed car lot and always had to take a reduced price. Here in packing, all fruit is packed in boxes 10½x11½x18 inches in size, the box is lined with paper on the sides the apples are taken one by one and culled then rolled in paper then packed in the box until the bottom is covered and wedged in, then a piece of pasteboard is put on top then another tier is packed in the same way until the box is filled heaping, about half the diameter of an apple, then the top boards about two of them two inches apart are sprung down and nailed. When all this is done the box is solid and will stand a lot of banging without bruising the fruit. Then the box is labelled with the name of the association, the name of the grower, this is also entered in a book, the number of the packer (this is also registered), the number of apples in a tier, the number of tiers, the number of apples in the box, and the variety. This looks like a lot of work but it is all done for five cents a box except putting on the head and carrying the apples in and out.

The packing is done by women, the heavy work is done by men. A working man or woman can do pretty well here in the summer time commencing with packing strawberries, raspberries then Logan berries, blackberries, cherries, plums, early peaches, pears, apples, hops then late fruit in the winter there is not much to do except lumbering and there is so much rain that it is disagreeble. The rainy season around Portland starts in October and last till March pretty steady, with occasional showers, until the first of July after that no rain until October, there are some hot days, but as a rule it is pleasant here in the summer.

This ought to be a good place here in Grant's Pass to keep cows and hens. Butter, 45 and 50 cent pound 45 and 50 cents a per dozen for eggs but there is no grass except where they irrigate and alfalfa hay is $25 a ton, wheat to feed hens two and one-half cents per pound There is no grain raised around here, all kinds of feed has to be shipped in so it is correspondingly dear. Everywhere it is fruit, fruit, fruit. Thousands of acres of young orchards were set out here one and two years ago and last spring they just went crazy and this is true all over Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Colorado and northern California, when all these orchard and vineyard comes into bearing what price will fruit bring? They did not get over two-thirds as much for apples and pears as they did last year, and part of the time. Peaches and grapes were very low. Spitzenbury yellow, Newtowns and winter banana apples brought $.50 per box on the tree (net) this year—$2.00 a box packed and f. o. b. the cars was the best they could do, and some mixed lots went for 60c, and here in the pass they were selling for 50c to 70c and number 1 wind falls for 25c a box. This is much lower than last year's prices. I see in the daily papers that you have had three inches of snow already. I suppose you are now enjoying your Indian summer, the finest time of the year. Well you can't have all the good things. November 9, I thought I would wait and hear from the polls. Grant's Pass has been dry for two years. It went dry on a very close vote and the wets have done everything in their power and that money could do, to swing it back into the wet column. As soon as the votes are counted, I will send this off. Pretty much everything went wet by small majorities. The saloons will be on their honor now as they made big promises before election.

BIG GAME THURSDAY

Alumni Will Meet High School Team Determined to Win

Boyne City Victors in Game Last Saturday by Score of Seven to Nothing.

The high school football team met its second defeat last Saturday at the hands of Boyne City. The team did not play as well as they have been this season. With the loss of Hull and Powers the team was greatly weakened. Considering these facts we are satisfied that the score was no worse than 7 to 0. This game ended the season as far as outside teams are concerned. Thanksgiving at 2:30 will be played one of the best games of the season with the alumni. The "Has been'ers" are working hard for a victory and the high school team is determined to repeat their last years 5 to 0 score. Come out and see the game. The proceeds go for purchasing sweaters for the high school team.

This game promises to be the best game which has ever been played on the home grounds, as a study of the line up shows Hull, whose loss was felt in the Boyne City game, will be back in the game and the "Has-been'ers" are determined to show that they can still deliver the goods. The line up follows:

WAS CHARLEVOIX PIONEER

Mrs. Hattie L. West Died in Oregon Sunday Morning.

Mrs. Hattie L. West, widow of the late L. A. West, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Eber D. Kanaga, Hood River, Oregon, Sunday morning, after a long illness.

Mrs. West was one of the pioneers of this city, coming here over a quarter of a century ago, and remaining until a short time ago when she went to Oregon to make her home with her only child, Mrs. Kanaga, and leaves a vast multitude of friends. Mr. West died about sixteen years ago. The body is expected to arrive in this city Friday and will be taken to her old home on the north side. The funeral will probably be held at the Methodist church Saturday morning.

HOLD SUCCESSFUL MEETING

Intermediate Valley Fruit Growers' Association Meets at Bellaire.

Officers are Elected and Plans Laid for Next Season's Work.

At the annual meeting of the Intermediate Valley Fruit Growers' Association held at the court house yesterday the usual excellent dinner was served and at the business meeting held at 1:30 p. m. the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, Robert E. Morrow; Secretary, Charles S. Guile; Treasurer, William J. Dewey; Members of the Executive Committee for two years, Isaac G. Fisher and Elias Burns; Members of the Program Committee, Mrs. A. E. Sage, Mrs. C. S. Guile and Mrs. M. A. Garwood.

The financial report of the secretary showing a cash balance on hand at the end of the year of $101.69 was read and accepted. A committee consisting of T. N. Chapin, C. S. Guile, S. B. Anway, Theodore Guyer, C. L. Bailey and Frank H. Lesher was appointed to see what can be done toward interesting and soliciting the active co operation of the various organizations and citizens generally of the county in building up and sustaining a live Antrim County Agricultural Society and to call a meeting of citizens of the county for that purpose. The committee at a meeting, determined upon and fixed January 3, 1911 at 11 o'clock a. m., at the court house in Bellaire, as the time and place for said meeting, and took appropriate action hoping to interest every live citizen of the county in the project, needed just at this time of extensive advertising of the capabilities and resources of western Michigan. After the business meeting a short program was rendered and plans discussed for the coming year. The member of the association expressed their satisfaction and pride at the progress of the association and a determination to make the work still better during the coming year.

The December meeting of the association was voted to be held in Central Lasse.—Bellaire Independent.

WESTERN MICHIGAN LEADS

At the Great Land and Irrigation Exposition

Which Opened at Chicago Last Saturday—Next Saturday is Michigan Day.

The great land and irrigation exposition opened to the coliseum in Chicago, Saturday, and it is right to state that it was the biggest and best of its kind ever held in this country.

First among the exhibitors is western Michigan, with its products of fruit, grain and vegetables. A year ago western Michigan, through its development bureau, made a showing in Chicago at the United States Land and Irrigation exposition that caused the people of the entire middle west and the "far west" to wake up and take new bearings. The exhibit was the fruit display. This year exceeds that of last.

The Michigan apples have an aroma that permeates the entire corner of the big building. Last year it was apparent from the appearances of the Michigan display that things had been hurriedly brought together and laid out, for none of the elaborate finishing touches which characterized the displays of the western states were apparent at the Michigan booth. Western Michigan had simply brought her apples, her seeds, her canned goods and her pictures, and laid them out for inspection.

It is the aim of those arranging the display to make it clear to all who visit the land show that western Michigan is not only a wonderful fruit country, but that it grows the finest potatoes, garden vegetables, grains and seeds produced by the combined efforts of man and nature.

STATE GRANGE WEEK

At Traverse City Will be a Big One for This Region

Plans are Completed for Display of Agricultural Products.

It is now certain that grange week in Traverse City is going to be a big one. At a joint meeting of the grange committee, of which George L. Crisp is chairman, and the board of trade committee of which O. P. Carver is chairman, held last week, the general program for the week was laid out.

One of the big features of the week will be a monster farm products display in the garage at the corner of State and Cass streets. This building has been promised for the week and the grangers are now at work rounding up fruits, vegetables and grains to make an attractive display and to bear testimony to the great producing power of the Grand Traverse soil and climate. In this building will be displayed the fine collection of fruit which the Peninsula men have produced this season, the display from Charlevoix county, the best of the Benzie county fair, a seed exhibit from Elk Lake, a showing of seventeen kinds of corn, a potato collection, and a display of grains and vegetables from the Northern Michigan Asylum farm.

Robert Barney, a young successful Grand Traverse farmer, has been secured for superintendent of the exposition. He was general superintendent of the great Grand Traverse region fair held a few years since.

Another strong feature for this big week will be the agricultural fair which the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co., has planned. Over $200 in cash is being offered as premiums by this company. This fair and the farm produce exhibit will give the thousand visitors who will be in the city that week, a good idea as to what this part of Michigan can do in an agricultural and horticultural way.

Nat Barnes, chairman of the grange exhibit committee from this county, was in Traverse City last week making arrangements for the Charlevoix display. Mr. Barnes informs us that he has been able to collect a fine display from this county in great variety and ably aided by a host of others we always love the fruit and roots to show.

TO EXPLAIN NEW RATES

Dr. Isabella Holdom, has Good News for the L. O. T. M. M. Members.

A matter of considerable interest to a large number of women of this county, is the visit of Dr. Isabella Holdom, great medical examiner of the Ladies of the Modern Maccabees who will be in Charlevoix, November 23 and 24.

From information gathered among members of the great order it seems that the change in rates made at the Kalamazoo convention last June has not been thoroughly understood by the members, consequently quite a number of them have been automatically "suspended" by reason of not taking advantage of the new arrangement. It has been the experience of Dr. Holdom that as soon as the new change is understood, the members are thoroughly satisfied. It may be stated now if any member is suspended, that she is not entitled to any benefits whatever in case of death or disability. Dr. Holdom will be at the Maccabee hall all day November 23 and 24. It will be to the interest of suspended members to call on her with their old certificates.

Dr. Holdom will be at Charlevoix November 23 and 24 and Petoskey on November 25 and 26.

POMONA GRANGE MEETING

Held With Barnard Grange Thursday a Success in Every Way

John C. Ketchum Delivered a Fine Address—Walter Black and Wife Chosen Delegates.

Thursday, November 17, Charlevoix county Pomona Grange was held under the hospitable auspices of Barnard Grange. A majority of Charlevoix county's seventeen subordinate granges were well represented. In point of entertainment the meeting proved one of the best held for some time.

Through unable to reach the hall before 3:15 p. m., Brother J. C. Ketchum, of Hastings, after a long but agreeable drive immediately proceeded to warm up the delivering a very amusing but forceful address touching upon the principles of the grange, its plan of organization and the necessity of its members living up to its standard. Before his departure, Brother Ketchum gave a short explanation of the plan of the Grange Life Insurance Co.

Brother Walter Black and wife were chosen as Pomona delegates to the state grange; alternates, Brother George Meggison and wife. Three applicants were obligated and instructed in the fifth degree. Brother H. L. Olney, of South Arm grange, was reelected as member of the executive committee.

The executive committee was instructed to fix time and place of next meeting.

LAJOIE'S VICTORY.

How the Mighty Batter Regained His Title and Won an Auto.

One of the most interesting battles of the baseball season just closed has been the contest between Tyrus Cobb and Napoleon Lajoie for the best batting average, and it was only at the last moment that Cleveland's mighty slugger regained his title of "king of batsmen" and incidentally won the automobile offered to the best batter in either league. Up to the recent double header between the Cleveland and St. Louis teams Cobb was tied with Lajoie for premier batting honors. In those games, however, the latter made eight hits in as many times at bat and the struggle was over.

During the season Lajoie has played in 138 league games, has been at bat 588 times and has made 227 hits, making his batting average .384. He is credited with having made ninety-four runs. Cobb has taken part in 140 games, has been at bat 507 times and made 147 hits, giving him an average of .359. He made 106 runs.

This ends one of the closest and hardest fought contests for batting honors in the history of the game. It was watched with deepest interest by the fans of both leagues. The two leaders in the race have been somewhat "managed" for several weeks. Cobb has suffered from an injured eye and Lajoie from a wrenched shoulder. Under the circumstances their showing is considered remarkable.

Last season Cobb led the American batsmen with an average of .357 made in 156 games. He also led in stolen bases with seventy-six. This year Eddie Collins of the Athletics leads the league with eighty steals. Lajoie's batting average last season was .324. At that time he was handicapped by his managerial responsibilities.

He Had Learned It.

Fort Dodge's Famous Orator Fond of Telling Story of Prisoner Who Gained Permission to Hear Him Speak and Remission of Sentence From Witty Democratic Sheriff.

The recent death of Senator Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver of Iowa closed a career widely noted for eloquence, sagacity and other qualities that go to make up a statesman.

It is believed that the primal cause of Senator Dolliver's death was overwork. He had been a student all his life, and he devoted long hours of the night as well as day to books to the neglect of physical exercise. When taken sick Mrs. Dolliver said that the senator had not taken a vacation in thirty-five years and was beginning to show it.

strong characteristic. Of the many stories related of the Iowan the majority last came to light when he told them on himself.

Senator Dolliver was born in that part of Virginia that afterward became West Virginia. He made a speech near his old home in one campaign and, growing reminiscent, said with tears in that famous silver voice of his:

"How well I remember this place! This is where I was born. Over there is the chestnut grove where I have gathered many a bushel of chestnuts. Why, I suppose when I was a boy I gathered fully fifty bushels of chestnuts here."

"Yes," shouted a bull chested man in the rear, "and you have been peddling them out ever since!"

One of his favorite stories was this:

"During my last campaign I had arranged to speak at a large outdoor meeting in a certain town in Iowa. It appears that, hearing of my proposed speech, one of the prisoners in the county jail was for some reason or other extremely desirous of being in the audience that I was to address. This man wrote a note to the sheriff, expressing admiration of my oratorical powers and asking permission to go to the town square where I was to speak and pledging himself to return to jail just as soon as I should have finished my remarks.

"Well, it appears that the sheriff was a Democrat and, what is more, a bit of a humorist, for he indorsed upon the back of the prisoner's note the following:

"'Permission hereby granted. Remainder of the sentence remitted.'"

Comparisons Often Apropos.

Senator Dolliver once was condemning an opponent's argument.

"'In such an argument,' he said, 'the logic is absurdly false. It is like the logic of a young woman of Fort Dodge.

"'This young woman sat plying the needle one spring morning on the piazza of her pretty little house. A coat of her husband's was in her lap.

"'It is too bad, the careless way the tailor put this button on. This is the fifth time I have had to sew it on for you,' she said fretfully."

Apropos of a shameless political grafter he said:

"The man appears to have no moral sense. Accused of some flagrant piece of corruption, he will, 10 to 1, admit his guilt with pride. He reminds me of a waiter in a certain Fort Dodge restaurant.

"A gentleman took a lady there to dinner one night. The dinner began with soup. The waiter was very careless.

"All of a sudden the gentleman roared:

"'Look out there, waiter! Your coat sleeve has dipped into this lady's soup.'

"The waiter looked at his sleeve, showed that it could fall

"'Don't worry, sir; it doesn't matter. It will wash out,' he said."

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, lacking strength and vitality.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and to-day I have two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my life work, careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering mankind. I realize that my time is short, but while I have the power to help my fellow men who are hopeless and seeking relief, I will do it. My efforts have been a great success, even when they thought relief impossible. Let me send you my free prescription, book of private counsel and advice. No charge or obligation whatever. Just write me a letter and tell me your condition, as I understand it, and I will do the rest. You can rely on my honor and secrecy. You better write me to-day.

CHAPTER VII—Continued.

The girl was about to put in a disclaimer when he flashed a look at her which she could not help but heed. "I am very stupid about such things," she offered easily. "I would not have understood it, I am sure." To her father she continued, leaving what she felt to be dangerous ground, "I didn't look for you so early."

"We finished sooner than I expected," Mr. Wayland answered, "so I drove Willis to his hotel and waited for him to dress. I was afraid he might disappoint us if I let him out of my sight. My dear, I have effected a wonderful deal today," went on her father. "With the help of Mr. Marsh I closed the last details of a consolidation which has occupied me for many months."

"Another trust, I suppose."

"Certain people might call it that," chuckled the old man. "Willis was the inspiring genius and did most of the work; the credit is his."

"May I inquire the nature of this merger?" Emerson ventured.

"Certainly," replied Wayne Wayland. "There is no longer any secret about it. I have combined the packing industries of the Pacific coast under the name of the North American Packers' association."

Boyd felt himself growing numb.

"What do you mean by 'packing industries?'" asked Mildred.

"Canneries—salmon fisheries! We own 61 per cent of the plants of the entire coast, including Alaska. That's why I've been so keen about that north country, Boyd. You never guessed it, eh?"

"No, sir," Boyd stammered.

"Well, we control the supply, and we will regulate the market. We will allow only what competition we desire. It was a beautiful transaction."

Was he dreaming? Boyd wondered. His mouth was dry, but he managed to inquire:

"What about the independent canneries?"

Marsh laughed. "There is no sentiment in business! There are about 40 per cent too many plants to suit us. I believe I am capable of attending to them."

"Mr. Marsh is the general manager," Wayland explained. "With the market in our own hands and sufficient capital to operate at a loss for a year or two years, if necessary, I don't think the independent plants will cost us much."

Now for the first time Emerson realized the impropriety of his own present position. He was here in the Wayland home under false pretenses; they had lured to him secrets not rightly his with which he might arm himself. When this, too, became known to the financier he would regard him not only as a presumptuous enemy, but as a traitor. Boyd knew the old tyrant too well to doubt his course of action; thenceforth there would be war to the hilt.

The announcement of dinner interrupted his dismayed reflections, and he walked out in company with Mr. Wayland, who linked arms with him as if to afford Willis Marsh every advantage during their walk. [illegible]

"He is a wonderful fellow," the old gentleman observed softly, indicating Marsh; "one of the keenest business men I ever met."

"Yes?"

"Indeed he is. He is a money maker, too; his associates swear by him. If I were you I'd buy. I would study him; he is a good man to find out."

At the dinner table the talk at first was on a kind of a character appropriate for the occasion, but Miss Wayland, oddly enough, displayed such an unusual thirst for information regarding the North American Packers' association that her father was moved to remark upon it.

"What in the world has come over you, Mildred?" he said. "You never cared to hear about my doings before."

"Please don't discourage me," she urged. "I am really in earnest. I should like to know all about this new trust of yours. Perhaps my little universe is growing a bit tiresome to me."

"So far it has been all hard work," Wayne Wayland at length announced, "but in the future I propose to derive some pleasure from this affair. I am tired out. For a long time I have been planning a trip somewhere, and now I think I shall make a tour of inspection in the spring and visit the various holdings of the North American Packers' association. In that way I can combine recreation and business."

"How far will you go?" questioned Boyd.

"Clear up to Mr. Marsh's station."

"Kalvik?"

"Yes, that is the plan," Marsh chimed in. "You see I am selfish in urging it, Miss Wayland. I expect you to join the party."

"I am sure you would like it, Mildred," the magnate added.

Boyd could scarcely believe his ears. Would they come to Kalvik? Would they all assemble there in that monstrous hook? And, supposing they should, had he the courage to continue his mad enterprise? It was all so unreal. He was torn between the desire to have Mildred agree and fear of the influence Marsh might gain during such a trip. But Miss Wayland evidently had an eye to her own comfort, for she replied:

"No, indeed! The one thing I abhor above land travel is a sea voyage; I am a wretched sailor."

"But this trip on a yacht would be worth while," urged her father. "Why, it will be a regular voyage of discovery. I am as excited over it as a country boy on circus day."

Marsh seconded him with all his powers of persuasion, but the girl, greatly to Emerson's surprise, merely reaffirmed her determination.

"Are there any women in Alaska?" questioned the girl.

"In the mining camps, yes; but we fishermen live lonely lives."

"But the coy, shrinking Indian maidens? I have read about them."

"They are terrible affairs," Marsh declared.

"Not always!" Boyd gave voice to his general annoyance. "I have seen some very attractive squaws, particularly breeds."

"Where?" demanded the other.

"Well, at Kalvik, for instance—your home. You must know Constantawana, the girl they call 'the snowbird?'"

"No."

"Come, come! She knows you well."

"Ah, a mystery! He is concealing something!" cried Miss Wayland.

CHAPTER VIII.

MARSH directed a sharp glance at Boyd before answering. "I presume you refer to Constantine's sister. I was speaking generally. Of course there are exceptions. As a matter of fact I wasn't exactly right when I said we had no white women whatever at Kalvik. Mr. Emerson doubtless has met Cherry Malotte?"

"I have," acknowledged Boyd. "She was very kind to us."

"Oh, delightful!" exclaimed Mildred. "First a beautiful Indian girl, now a mysterious white woman! Why, Kalvik is decidedly interesting."

"There is nothing mysterious about the white woman," said Marsh. "She is quite typical—just a plain mining camp hanger-on who drifted down our way."

"Not at all," Boyd disclaimed angrily. "Miss Malotte is a fine woman," then at Marsh's short laugh, "And her conduct bears favorable comparison with that of the other white people at Kalvik."

"PARTNERS! WHAT DO YOU MEAN?"

Marsh allowed his eyes to waver at this, but to Mildred he apologized: "She is not the sort one cares to discuss."

"How do you know?" demanded Cherry's champion. "Do you know anything against her character?"

"I know she is a disturbing element in Kalvik and has caused us a great deal of trouble."

It was Boyd's turn to laugh. "But surely that has nothing to do with her character."

"My dear fellow"—Marsh shrugged his shoulders apologetically—"if I had dreamed she was a friend of yours I never would have spoken."

The dinner was finished and Mr. Wayland had asked for his favorite cigars, so Mildred rose and Boyd accompanied her, leaving the others to smoke. But, strangely enough, Marsh remained in such a state of preoccupation, even after their departure, that Mr. Wayland's attempts at conversation elicited only the vaguest and shortest of answers.

In the music room Mildred turned upon Boyd. "Why didn't you tell me about this woman before?"

"I didn't think of her."

"And yet she is young, beautiful, refined, lives a romantic sort of existence and entertained you"—She tossed her head, seated herself at the piano and struck a few idle notes, inquiring casually, "Kalvik is the name of the place you are going, isn't it?"

"It is."

"I suppose you will see a great deal of this—Cherry Malotte."

"I probably shall, inasmuch as we are partners."

"Partners!" Mildred ceased playing and swung about. "What do you mean?"

"She is interested in this enterprise. The cannery site is hers."

"I see!" After a moment, "Does this new affair of father's have any particular effect on your plans?"

"Yes and no," he answered, feeling again the weight of his late precaution, forgotten for the moment.

"What do you wish me to do?"

"Nothing, only for the present please don't mention my scheme either to him or to Mr. Marsh. I am a bit uncertain as to my course. You see, it means so much to me that I can't bear to give it up, and yet it may lead to great unpleasantness."

She nodded comprehendingly.

On that very night, in a little snow smothered cabin crouching close against the Kalvik bluffs, another girl was seated at a piano. Her slim, white fingers had strayed upon the notes of a song which Boyd Emerson had sung. In her dream filled eyes was the picture of a rough garbed, silent man at her shoulder, and in her ears was the sound of his voice. Clear to the last melting note she played the air, and then a pitiful sob shook her. She bowed her golden head and hid her face in her arms, for a memory was upon her, a forgotten kiss was hot upon her lips, and she was very lonely.

At the hotel Emerson found Clyde and Fraser in Bait's room awaiting him. They were noisy and excited at the success of the enterprise and at the prospect of immediate action.

Boyd told them little of the news that had startled him earlier in the evening beyond the bare fact that Marsh had floated a packers' trust and that secrecy for the present was now doubly necessary to the success of their undertaking. The full significance of the merger, therefore, did not strike his associates, even when on the train the next day they read the announcement of its formation in the newspapers. Bait alone took notice of it and fell into a furious rage at his employer's success.

No sooner were they fairly under way for the west than Emerson began the definite shaping of his plans. He and Fraser carefully went over the many details of their coming work and sent many messages, with the result that outfitters in a dozen lines were awaiting them when they arrived in Seattle. Without loss of time Boyd installed himself and his friends at a hotel, secured a competent and close mouthed stenographer, and then sought out the banker with whom he had made a tentative agreement before going to Chicago. Mr. Hilliard greeted him cordially.

"I see you have carried out your part of the program," said he, "but before we definitely commit ourselves we should like to know what effect this new trust is going to have on the canning business."

"You mean the N. A. P. A.?"

"Precisely. Our Chicago correspondent can't tell us any more than we have learned from the press—namely, that a combination has been formed. We are naturally somewhat cautious about financing a competitive plant until we know what policy the trust will pursue."

Here was exactly the complication Boyd had feared; therefore it was with some trepidation that he argued:

"The trust is in business for the money, and its very formation ought to be conclusive evidence of your good judgment. However, you have backed so many plants such as mine that you know as well as I do the big profits to be taken."

"That's not the point. Ordinarily we would not waver an instant, but the Wayland-Marsh outfit is apt to upset calculations. If we only knew"—

"I know," boldly declared Boyd. "Mr. Marsh outlined his policy to me before the public knew anything about the trust."

"Indeed! Are you acquainted with Wayne Wayland?" asked Mr. Hilliard, with a new light of curiosity in his eyes.

"I know him well."

"Ah, I congratulate you. Perhaps this is Mr. Wayland money behind you?"

"That I am not at liberty to discuss," the young man replied evasively. "I have taken steps to sell my season's output in advance. The commission men will be in town shortly, and I shall contract for the entire catch at a stipulated price. Is that satisfactory?"

"Entirely so," declared Mr. Hilliard heartily. "Go ahead and order your machinery and supplies. By the way, what do you know about the mineral possibilities of the region back of Kalvik?"

"Not enough, the country is new. There is a woman at Kalvik who has some men out prospecting."

"Cherry Malotte?"

"Do you know her?" asked Boyd with astonishment.

"Very well indeed." Then noting Boyd's evident curiosity, he went on, "You see, I have made a number of mining investments in the north. My operations have turned out so well that I keep several men just to follow new strikes."

"Has Miss Malotte made a strike?"

"Not exactly, but she has uncovered some promising copper prospects."

"H'm! That is news to me."

Three weeks passed quickly in strenuous effort, and then one morning the partners awoke to the realization that there was little more for them to do.

Through it all Clyde had lent them enthusiastic if feeble assistance, and now that the strain was off he gave fitting expression to his delight by getting drunk. Being temperamental to a degree, he envied company and, knowing full well the opposition he would encounter from his friends, he gathered a boisterous following of outcasts whose time being heavy and who were at all times eager to applaud a [illegible] as it was. [illegible] conducted on a loose purse. Howard Fraser, though "Limpy" Fraser cruising in a motorized search for adventure and profit, found him in a somnambulic state, dreaming vaporously to his uncle, and upon catching mention of the Kalvik fisheries snatched him homeward and put him to bed, after which he locked him into his room, threw the key over the transom and stood guard outside until assured that he slept.

At an early hour the adventurer was peremptorily roused to find Emerson hammering at his door in a fine fury.

"What is this?" demanded Boyd through white lips, thrusting a morning paper before Fraser's sleepy eyes.

"It's a newspaper," yawned the other, "a regular newspaper."

"Where did this story come from?" With menacing finger Boyd indicated a front column headed:

NEW ENEMY OF THE SALMON TRUST

FIRST GUN FIRED IN BATTLE FOR FISHERIES

N. A. P. A. Promised Rough Fight For Supremacy of Alaska Waters!

"I don't know."

"You don't know?"

"No, I never read anything but the 'just performances' and the funny page. What does it say?"

"It is the whole story of our enterprise, but ridiculously garbled and exaggerated. It says I have headed a new canning company to buck the trust. It tells about George's feud with Marsh and says we have both been secretly preparing to down him. Good Lord! It's little to queer us with the bank and upset the deal."

"I didn't give it out."

Local Prohibition

The proper thing for temperance people in Michigan at the present time to do is to make local option local prohibition.

They have done this already in forty counties and they can do it forthwith in several more.

No true temperance man likes the local option law except in so far as it can be made a prohibitory law, but whether he likes it or not, he should help to make it prohibitive.

Primarily the present local option law was enacted by the politicians as a tide-over, that is, to pacify the temperance element and prevent the enactment of severer measures.

By enacting a local option law the liquor sympathizers saw a chance to stay the tide of radical prohibition and save many localities to licence.

But the temperance forces in Michigan are strong, and by seizing the dog by the collar they have in many places held the liquor brute in check around their homes.

In other wards, they have turned local option into local prohibition and have defeated the enemy's own tricks.

This is the thing to do every where. Too much praise cannot be given the voters in those counties where local option has been made effective against saloons.

Our warmest sympathy goes out toward those counties, which under the option play, have turned the option feature into a club to drive out liquor dealers.

Let this be done every where.

The Advocate has persistently urged its readers to make the most of their chances for gaining temperance advance through local option where ever submitted.

We do not believe in making wrong subject to option, but we do believe in making option which has been thrust upon us effective against wrong.

What is needed is overwhelming support of every prohibitory feature of any law the saloon chaps may adopt, and just thresh them with their own whips until they are glad to cry enough, and get out of the way.

Just at present the issue is local option. Very well. You may not like it as well as you would state-wide prohibition, but you haven't got the latter, while you have the former.

Pitch in then and by force of numbers and mush and power show the whole people that you are prohibitionists, come how or when or through what source it may.—Christian Advocate.

PUTTING AWAY OF FURS.

How to Protect Them From Moths During Summer Months.

When furs are not in constant use, as in the summer time, they should be kept in air tight cloth or heavy paper bags. Have where they will not be forgotten. They should be examined weekly. Very handsome furs, especially long coats and rugs, should be sent to a professional packer who keeps them in cold storage. See that each piece is well tagged. There are many women who fear to send their furs away lest they do not get the same pieces again. This is unheard of with a reliable firm, but marking will settle all doubt.

If home storing is in order make a study of it. See that all furs are clean before putting away. If much soiled rub warm dry bran into more durable furs, while cornmeal or powdered magnesia may be applied to sable, ermine or chinchilla. When very dirty the meal can be mixed with gasoline. Brush carefully.

In cleaning furs do not be too vigorous. Hanging on a line and beating will usually result in torn skins. If any beating is needed it is better done on a flat surface. In brushing use a thick, not too stiff, brush, parting the hair evenly and getting at the pelt. To remove any cleaning meal a man's bathbrush is excellent.

Sun and air all furs for a week before packing. Comb carefully. Work with the nap of the fur, never across it. Be sure there are no moth eggs in the fur before beginning to pack. Small furs should be wrapped in newspapers. Moths hate printer's ink—then be sewed up in a clean piece of linen or cotton and later put into a heavy paper bag, which is sealed across the top.

With this treatment many successful packers use melted camphor nor moth balls. These preventives should not go near the fur, as they discolor. The fearful may sprinkle them in top and bottom of paper bag as a precaution.

Each set of furs when wrapped should be returned to its own box, which is clearly marked to save trouble if hurried unpacking is necessary. Where one owns an old trunk or chest the various boxes can be stored and locked in it. This lessens possibility of theft.

Fur rugs after careful cleaning should be wrapped first in several layers of newspapers, then covered with bags of brown muslin and an extra covering of heavy brown paper. Stow them on floor of vacant room or where there will be as little creasing as possible.

Fur coats are packed on their hangers. It is a mistake to put them back in their boxes. Don't use a wool padded hanger. A stout wire or wooden one is best. After careful sunning and brushing button the front of coat, then cover the entire garment with three layers of newspaper. Pin up the paper at top and bottom to shut out air. Next cover with a bag or dark muslin and one of heavy brown paper. These bags should be drawn very tight around the neck of clothes hanger. Many have strips of paper pasted on top for extra precaution. Lump camphor, tar balls, cedar shavings or other moth preventives can be slipped in top of bag.

One housekeeper packs her less expensive furs by putting them back in their own boxes and tucking layers of newspaper around them, the last layer soaked in turpentine. Moth balls are put on top of papers, and the lid is sealed with strips of paper.

Lightning Superstitions.

There is a popular tradition that lightning will not kill any one who is asleep. The folklore of lightning is extensive and peculiar. According to one school, the splinters of a tree struck by lightning are an infallible specific for the toothache. But the most pleasing superstition is that which used to be cherished by the boys of a Yorkshire village who believed that if they mentioned the lightning immediately after a dash the seat of their trousers would be torn out. No boy could be induced to make the experiment.—London Chronicle.

Money in Mules.

There may be a lot of big profit against the breeding of mules, but the fancy prices possibly for war developed some might be wipe out that negative.

HIS JOB IS NOT A CINCH.

Customers Often Fail to Understand the Obstacles In the Way of the Man From Whom They Obtain Their Household Supplies.

It is comparatively easy for the small merchant to get in disfavor in his particular community, often through no fault of his own. He frequently finds himself righteously on the defensive against some of his best customers. In the present time of high prices explanations are demanded of him that he isn't able to clear up, at least to the satisfaction of the aggressive customer.

More than this, in these times of sharp trading in so many sections of the country the merchant in dealing with the jobber gets a hard knock in an unexpected manner. One of these devices of the "crookeil" jobber is presented by the salesman stranger who appears with proper credentials from the improper house he represents, says Irwin Ellis in an article in the Chicago Tribune.

This salesman pushes his sales hard. The retailer in the provincial town expresses his fears that such purchases will not be justified by his trade. The salesman is voluble, cheerful and full of promises. He will let the customer lay in his certain lines and if they don't "go" the manufacturing or jobbing house that he represents will agree to "exchange" to full purchase cost of the goods.

Later the wisdom of the retailer is proved. He has his contract and returns these certain lines of goods which he has reason to believe were covered to indemnify him. But the "exchanged" goods when unpacked are discovered to be far below the quality of the goods of first shipment. But such a merchant can do nothing. His contract has left out the whole question of quality. The emphasis has been laid upon the ready exchange.

Among the small business men, whether in towns, villages or neighborhoods in the cities, the small business man has a burden upon him of pleasing which may become a burden indeed. Many of his customers grow to know him by sight and name. He may be Bill or Jack or John to a whole neighborhood.

But, whatever the relationship on a personal basis, he has his customer banking upon that relationship to the advantage of every other house in the neighborhood. He may be a grocer and marketman. He gets his fruits, vegetables and kindred daily supplies in order at 8 o'clock, 9 o'clock or later, as the distance increases from the supply center. These everyday supplies are displayed for sale to the best advantage for the early personal shopper. Most of his telephone orders come later in the day, when his scopes of personal forces, seeing to what they get, have handled the stock more or less.

Nothing is more simple than a statement of truth that fruits and vegetables, even meats and many other kinds of market supplies, cannot be as desirable and fresh and tempting at 4 o'clock in the afternoon as they were at 8 o'clock that morning. Among these fruits and vegetable supplies the shopper, coming in person, has filled boxes, gouged into them, perhaps, peeped into bottom layers and made like inquisitions, all to the detriment of perishable goods. Can the Smith household, which telephones at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, expect to receive such goods as those which Mrs. Jones in person chose at 9 o'clock in the morning and the exhibition of which caused Mrs. Smith to telephone for the goods? Yet if Mrs. Smith gets a chance in the next few days she'll "jump all over the grocer" about the matter, which has been impossible for the grocer to prevent.

Occasionally the honest grocer tells Mrs. Smith over the telephone that really he hasn't just the kind and quality of goods that she wants. This is not enough, often, for the reason that Mrs. Smith is expecting a friend or two to dinner and must have something. The grocer may do his best choosing for her and Mrs. Smith be just as disappointed and sore as she can be.

I should say emphatically that Mrs. Jones, who walks over to the market early and observes the decencies of shopping in not pawing over perishable stuff to the detriment of the shoppers after her, deserved the best that is in the house; that Mrs. Smith's telephone order late in the afternoon takes a distinctly second choice. But you can't get the Smiths to see it that way.

STRIVING FOR PUBLIC GOOD.

Suggestion For Dealing With Gross Violations of Good Taste.

A young man of Freeport, Ill., has a camera and a sense of fitness, a good combination. For some time the young man has been annoyed by the appearance of a building in the business portion of Stephenson street which, besides being ugly through neglect, has recently been covered with circus posters with all their blare and hideousness. The Freeport young man has repeatedly [illegible]

American City. Every day since the posters appeared the owner has been the recipient of a picture postal of his building. The public has been cognizant of the presence of the eyesore. It now knows of the move made by the young man, and there is a general hope that the daily sight of his hideous property may convert the owner to civic decency.

Here is a good suggestion for other places where flagrant violations of good taste occur. The papers could help by publishing such pictures. This has been tried with good results. It was done in Seattle, Wash., small reproductions being used in the first instance. The offenders generally cleaned up. Those who did not were approached by a representative of the paper, to whom they generally said they didn't care. "Well," replied the representative, "if you don't mind that you will not care if we reproduce a half page picture so it will show up better?" To this the usual answer was: "Oh, no; I don't want you to do that. I'll clean it up."

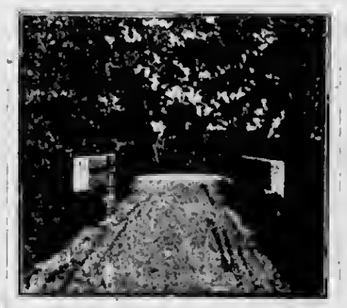
GREAT TRADE STIMULATORS.

Importance of Good Roads to Business Men of Towns.

The following is from a letter written by a Missouri farmer to the editor of the Kansas City Star. While it shows the advantage of good roads to the farmer, it suggests how important it is to the trading town that good roads lead to it:

"A citizen living on a dirt road six miles from Sedalia, Mo., paid $1.90 for a freight shipment of 125 miles by rail to Sedalia. He then paid a teamster $2.50 to haul the goods out to his farm. The weather had been bad, and the road was not in good condition. The wagon got stuck in the mud, and it cost another $2.50 and much strain and wear on good temps to get it out, the relative expense being $1.90 for 125 miles by rail and $5 for six miles by wagon roads."

Any saving in money that the farmer may make because of good roads



A BOON TO ANY COMMUNITY.
(From Good Roads Magazine, New York.)

means so much gained for the community, so much more prosperity and more money with which to buy goods from the local merchants. Not alone this, but good roads are a great trade stimulator. Let there be two towns of equal importance with a rich farming country lying intermediate. That town which has the best roads leading to it is sure to get the greater trade, farmers even driving a few miles farther because they can pass over a good road. One Nebraska city of about 10,000 population within the past few years spent more than $50,000 in improving the highways leading to it. It was a splendid investment and brought trade that its merchants never otherwise would have.

"Have you thought of the expense of living if you marry my daughter? Have you remembered the bills?"

"Bills have no terror for me, sir."

"They haven't? Why not?"

"Nobody would trust me, sir."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

LITTLE GUIDEPOSTS ON THE BUSINESS ROAD.

Make your office match your business, and before long your business will outgrow your office.

One of the things that every human being should learn early is that a promise is a promise and not a white lie.

Every man in business should have a hobby for his leisure hours and stable the hobby at some distance from his office.

The man who fixes up his office with all the goods in the stationer's shop needs to see to it that his head is also up to date.

If you make your own mistakes you learn something; if you make other people's mistakes you don't even learn the lesson they did. It is well to remember this when giving advice.

If you are only keeping a peanut stand it is best to do it a little better than anybody else. But the wise man will not keep a peanut stand if he has to pay too much for the concession.

There are two classes of persons in this world—people who do what they have to and people who do what they want to. And it depends on the kind of brains you have whether you are in the one class or the other.—Book Keeper.

Good Rule In Trading.

Make those dealing with you feel that whatever you offer them is just as represented—not practically as represented, but exactly, says the Agricultural Southwest. There must be no working around a questionable point. The letter of the law does not answer the purpose. It would be a short lived success, one that stepped on the heels of failure, which you would gain by deceiving patrons through keeping silent when they purchased goods unadvantageously.

Indicted For Bad Highways.

Acting at the direction of the Schuylkill court, Pennsylvania, which has begun a campaign against all officials who are negligent in connection with road-making, the grand jury has indicted the members of the St. Clair council for failing to report bad roads conditions near the St. Clair mining operations. The Mine Hill township council was also indicted in the court.

The course will include Governor Hoch of Kansas, one of the foremost men on the lecture platform. The following week's paper will contain full information concerning it.

The Sir Hum made her last trip for the season last Saturday and is now laid up at Charlevoix. Extensive repairs will be made during the winter among them being a new oak hull. As the engines were thoroughly overhauled last winter, the repairs of this winter will make the Hum one of the staunchest and best equipped passenger boats in Northern Michigan waters. East Jordan Herald.

In another column we print the statement of the condition of the State Saving bank at the close of business November 10. This statement is a fine tribute to the management of the bank as it shows a steady and substantial increase in business, and careful management. The bank carries a large reserve fund and at all times has sufficient funds to guarantee its safety to depositors or loan on good security. A careful study of the statement will repay any one.

As we reported last week Van Pelt was here. He has come and he has departed. Whenever Van is here we naturally expect something doing. This trip was a rather a disappointing one as the only thing we hear of his doing is to put a new roof on the COURIER building which he built last year especially for our use. This we appreciate and the fact is Van is a pretty good landlord. He had a grouch on when he landed but we guess the weather had more to do with it than any other cause. He left with a fine smile and promises to return early in the spring.

The members of the Wayne delegation will hold another caucus on the speakership, Tuesday night, when it is probable they will agree on Baker, according to present indications. It is pretty generally understood that Baker would be Chase Osborn's choice if the latter had any say in the matter. Baker was also the first in the field, and seems to have the pole. The Wayne delegation does not propose to get in wrong at the start by supporting a man who cannot win, and this is another reason why the members are favoring the Cheboygan candidate as against Warner, Yaple and Yeo.—Detroit Times.

CLEANSING OF BEDDING.

How Pillows and Comforters May Be Easily Renovated at Home.

Pillows may be renovated by transferring the feathers to a rather light, loose cotton bag and washing first in a tub of hot suds containing borax, then rinsing in a tub of cold water. Wring as dry as possible. Try by laying the bag over parallel sections of the clothes line. It may take two days to complete the drying, and the feathers should be frequently shaken to restore their fluffiness.

Another method is that of treating the feathers to a hot sun bath for a couple of days. They can be spread on a sheet if the day is perfectly still, but a large cheesecloth bag will doubtless save trouble.

Another treatment that comes well recommended is that of hanging the pillows out in a soaking rain, letting them be thoroughly wet. Afterward they must be given a day or two of sunshine in which to dry.

Cotton comfortables if not badly soiled may be cleansed by turning the hose on them after they have been securely pinned to the line. Do not wring, as this mats the cotton, but give them a long sun bath until thoroughly dry and soft. The soiled edges may first be washed with hot soap and water.

It is said that both pillows and down comforters may be washed in the same way. But many people prefer to wash their down quilts in warm borax soapsuds, using as many waters as are needed. The main thing to remember in all these processes is that it is the long, thorough drying in the sun and the shaking and beating of the feathers when nearly dry that are most important. A little salt in the water will help to keep the colors from running in fancy covers.

The novice must not be discouraged by the dejected appearance of the articles in the tub, but must remember that wet feathers are never lightsome objects and that clear, hot sunshine is a wonderful restorer.

CHARITY TO GET GAYNOR ON STAGE

That Is, If He Follows London Ex-Mayor's Advice.

TRELOAR TELLS OF SUCCESS.

Appealed to English Public From Vaudeville Stage For Money to Aid Tubercular Children and Raised $350,000, Together With Land and Hospital Buildings.

Imagine, if you can, Mayor Gaynor rolling up to the door of, say, a theater in the official coach of the city of New York—assuming that there is such a thing—bearing with him whatever insignia of his office may exist.

Then imagine him as being conducted to the stage and between two vaudeville "turns" making a strong appeal to the audience for funds with which to build a long deferred hospital for tubercular children.

Nurses as Adjunct.

Then picture the entrance among the audience of some forty young women clad as nurses, who reenforced the mayor's argumentative appeals by direct and personal solicitation of the audience.

Yet the same thing took place in a city far more conservative than New York. And it is also the advice of Sir William Treloar, former lord mayor of London, to Mayor Gaynor. Sir William, who has been spending some time in America, did it in London with such persistence that between November, 1906, and November, 1907, he raised $350,000 and the lands and buildings for his hospital and college for tubercular children at Alton, Hampshire.

Gaynor Could Do It Easily.

"And if I could do it," said Sir William in the course of a chat over his impressions of America, "Mayor Gaynor surely could. He hasn't the state coach and the robes of office and the jewel which is handed down from one lord mayor of the old city to the other, but he has a far richer public to which to make his appeal.

"If he wants to get action, as you Americans say, on the matter of the building of a proper hospital for tubercular cripples among the children he could get it in no speedier way."

COLLEGE GIRLS TO PLAY BALL

Radcliffe Takes Up Baseball, Hockey and Track Athletics.

Men's colleges will not have any advantages over girls' colleges before long if the athletic policy now in vogue at Radcliffe college is adopted by the other girls' colleges, for Radcliffe students are really going in for baseball as a serious sport. Two nines were formed recently.

This will prove no mere fleeting fancy of the Radcliffe girls—the college authorities will take care of that—for an edict went out that each girl who takes gymnasium work must select some form of outdoor sport to be followed throughout the year. No "squealing" will be allowed, according to the edict.

Field hockey, tennis, track athletics and baseball were the four outdoor recreations given the students for their selection, and immediately there was a rush among a large crowd of girls to enroll under the baseball squad.

The two tennis formed will be no squads of novices, for many of the attendants at the Cambridge institution can outdo some of the players in their brother college, Harvard, at any time.

TAUGHT TO SELL HARDWARE.

Regular School Is Established at Birmingham, England.

A special course has been established at the Birmingham (England) municipal technical school for the instruction of hardware salesmen. Classes are held every Thursday evening during the school term. These classes are intended not so much for traveling salesmen as for the salesmen and clerks in hardware stores. The salesmen attending these lectures are required on the second evening to attend a class in practical sheet metal work or a class in metallurgy.

The lectures deal with arithmetic and drawing and with technical ironmongery. Examinations are to be held at the end of the session, and prizes are offered to the best scholars.

FACE BIG LOSS IN TUNNEL.

Simplon Contractors Fear They Are Out $2,000,000.

Unless they are paid $2,000,000 more than their $4,000,000 agreement calls for the contractors building the second Simplon tunnel in Switzerland say they cannot complete the work. They offered the railway companies concerned $400,000 for a release, but the offer was refused, as the contractors had given their bond for the work.

The tunnel is being bored twenty yards from the first tunnel and parallel with it. At several points there will be connecting passages.

Mark Twain and Aldrich.

Privately Mark Twain enjoyed a frolic, liked a joke, liked to tell a good story and make good talk, loved better to listen to good stories and good talk. He never could hear enough of the vivid wit, the swift turns of speech, of Thomas Bailey Aldrich—Tom Aldrich of beloved memory. Aldrich was always playing tricks on him in talk, but Mark got even for everything by once sending a book to Aldrich with the inscription, "To Thomas Bailey Aldrich from his only friend, Mark Twain."—American Magazine.

While the number of pensioners on the rolls of the United States decreased during the past fiscal year by more than 25,000, the average annual of each pension at the close of the year was slightly more than $2 greater than a year previously, when it was $159.92, according to the annual report of James L. Davenport, commissioner of pensions, just made public. Of the 921,083 persons on the pension rolls at the close of the past year, 80,828, or nearly 10 per cent, reside in Pennsylvania. Ohio was only 1001 behind, followed in order by New York, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Massachusetts and Michigan. Nevada is lowest with only 453 pensioners.

D. E. G. Warner, representative in the legislature from the Benzie-Leelanau district, will be the "wet" candidate for speaker. The first line-up of the members and test of strength will come with the speakership contest, and the leanings of the members will then become a matter of record. Representative Warner did valiant work for the liquor interests in the last legislature, having charge of the "wet" end of the Warner-Cranmon liquor law. It was he who made the fight in the courts for the liquor men and secured a decision knocking out local option in Benzie county.

The stage carrying the mail ceased running on Tuesday between this place and Bellaire, the government having issued orders to that effect. As a fact it has been of little benefit in the mail line for several years. This stage line has been in daily operation for more than 30 years and when it was first established, and before the county seat was located at Bellaire, even before that town was thought of, it ran through to Eastport by way of Central Lake. The stage has had many contractors and drivers, the last ones being E. R. Ruse and Wm. Mawby.—Mancelona Herald.

Saturday, Nov. 26, is to be Michigan day at the United States land and irrigation exposition at Chicago. A special program is being prepared for the occasion by the secretaries of the western Michigan and the Southwestern Michigan development bureaus. It is expected that the program will include a talk by the governor of the state who is to be invited to attend with his full staff. People in all parts of Michigan are being urged to plan to visit the Michigan exhibits on this day, and to participate in the program now being prepared. It is expected that enough loyal citizens can be rounded up at Grand Rapids to justify a special train from that city to Chicago.

L. E. Wood, of Niles, who is a member of the executive committee of the board of control of the Masonic home, gives out a hint that the committee will probably embody in its report to the grand master that the gift of the $200,000 Alma sanitarium be rejected. The committee spent two days at Alma last week and gave the big sanitarium building a thorough inspection. It found that the needed repairs, including the heating and plumbing, would cost close to $40,000, and the permanent cost of maintenance, it is claimed, would be so large as to make it an impractical proposition. Mr. Wright has already executed a deed for the property which provides that if not used for the purpose of a Masonic home, it is to revert to the original owner. If the committee recommends against the acceptance of the gift, as expected, it will throw the whole matter into the grand lodge next year for final settlement.

Grand Rapids Masons appear to be opposed to the Alma proposition and want the home rebuilt there.

COMFORTING WORDS

Many a Charlevoix Household Will Find Them So

To have the pains and aches of a bad back removed; to be relieved from annoying, dangerous urinary disorders is enough to make any kidney sufferer grateful. To tell how this great change can be brought about will prove comforting words to hundreds of Charlevoix readers.

Nelson Burdo, 120 South B St., Cheboygan, Mich., says: "Some twenty five years ago I went to Detroit for an operation but the physician at the hospital told me that he could not take my case on account of the disordered condition of my kidneys. He advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills and I did so. After I had taken the contents of four boxes, I was completely cured and I was then able to have the operation performed. The principal symptoms of my kidney trouble was a dull backache, sometimes accompanied by pains at the kidneys. I could hardly stoop or lift when ever I caught cold, it settled on my kidneys, making me feel worse. The kidney secretions were highly colored and too frequent in passage and my whole system was run down. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me so greatly that I am only too glad to recommend them."

Mr. Burdo gave the above testimonial in August, 1907 and when interviewed in July 1909 he added: "You may continue to publish my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills, for the relief they gave me has been permanent. I have recommended this remedy to other kidney sufferers and in every case benefit has followed its use."

COLEMAN L. BLEASE.

Career of South Carolina's Democratic Nominee For Governor.

Few executives running for office in the south have been more active in politics than Coleman L. Blease, the Democratic nominee for governor of South Carolina. When quite a young man he was chosen to represent his county in the house of representatives and twice reelected to this position. In 1901 he was sent to the state senate by a handsome majority, voluntarily retiring after serving in this capacity for two years, and in 1902 was elected mayor of Newberry, his home town. Furthermore, he was county chairman of the Democratic executive committee for two years, several times in succession a delegate to state conventions and for the past twelve years has represented his county on the state executive committee.

COLEMAN L. BLEASE

Mr. Blease is a native of South Carolina and forty two years old, having been born on a farm in Newberry county in 1868. After graduating from college he took up the study of law, was admitted to the bar in 1887 and soon became one of the leaders in his profession. For the past fifteen years he has been connected with many of the important cases tried in Newberry and other counties and for two years served as city attorney of Newberry. His father, Henry H. Blease and his father's three brothers saw service in the Confederate army and took part in many important battles.

HANGING OF PICTURES.

How to Arrange Them Effectively In a Nursery or Child's Room.

"Pictures should be hung about on the general eye level, and this rule must be remembered and adapted to the eye level of a child when hanging pictures in a child's room or in a nursery," says Lucy Abbot Throop in the Woman's Home Companion. The pictures will not be noticed at all if hung too high. Pictures should be grouped according to the simple rule of balance. Taking a center vertical axis on a wall, pictures of equal size and general standard of color and color values will balance at equal distances from it, or one large picture will balance two pictures of half its size at equal distances from the center. If one has one fairly large picture to balance with several smaller ones the heavy one is to be nearer the center, and this will keep the feeling of balance. If you watch children on a seesaw it will explain this. If a heavy boy is on one end he moves nearer the center, and several smaller boys may be needed to make the balance perfect. A large picture is usually most effective when placed alone in a space with its center coinciding with the center of the space. Two large pictures, one on each side of a mantelpiece, for instance, give a feeling of restfulness and dignity by their perfect balance. Pictures should be grouped in such a way that they have a relation to each other, are balanced on a center and in this way are made to tell as a whole. It is a useful rule to remember that things become distorted when they are divided by a space exceeding the width or length of the objects themselves. For instance, two pictures each 1 by 2 feet when hanging one above the other must not be more than one foot apart and not more than two feet apart when side by side.

"Pictures should be hung from two hooks, and there should never be a triangle formed by the wire and the top of the picture frame. The construction of the room are straight, and the picture wires should also be straight. It is better not to have the support of small pictures show, as it makes too great a complexity of wires. Tacks or small picture nails may be used according to the size and weight of the picture."

The SILVER HORDE

By REX BEACH,

Author of "The Spoilers" and "The Barrier"

Copyright, 1909 by Harper & Brothers

"It is all done in your particularly picturesque style," declared Emerson angrily. "Alton swears he knows nothing about it, so you must have done it. It is too nearly correct to have come from a stranger."

"Well?" inquired Fraser quietly.

"The harm is done, but I want to know who is to blame." When the other made no answer except to stare at him curiously he flamed up, "Why don't you confess?"

For the first time during their acquaintance "Fingerless" Fraser seemed at a loss for words, but whether for shame or some other motive his companion was unable to tell. His nature was so warped that his emotions expressed themselves in ways not always easy to follow, and now he merely remarked, with apparent sullenness:

"I'm certainly a hot favorite with you." He clambered stiffly back into bed and turned his defiant face to the wall, nor would he meet his accuser's eyes or open his lips, even when Boyd flung out of the room, convinced that he was the culprit.

"WHAT IS THIS?" DEMANDED BOYD.

A telephone message summoned him to the bank at 11 o'clock the following morning.

"That means trouble," he told George.

"Maybe not," the big fisherman replied. "If Hilliard took any stock in the story it seems like he'd have jumped you the next day."

"Our machinery is ordered.—You realize what it will mean if he backs water now?"

"Sure! We'll have to go to some other bank."

"Humph! I'll wring Fraser's neck," muttered Emerson. "We have troubles enough without any new ones."

It was with no little anxiety that he asked for the banker at the appointed hour and was shown into an anteroom with the announcement:

"Mr. Hilliard is busy. He wishes you to wait."

Inside the glass partition Boyd heard a woman's voice and Hilliard's laughter. He took some comfort in the thought that the banker was in good humor at least, but being too nervous to sit still he stood at the window, gazing with vacant eyes at the busy street crowds. Facing him across the way was a bulletin in front of a newspaper office, and after a time he noted idly among its various items of information the announcement that the mail steamer Queen had arrived at midnight from Skagway. He wondered why Cherry had not written. Surely she must be anxious to know his progress. He should have advised her of his whereabouts.

The door to Hilliard's office opened, and he heard the rustle of a woman's dress, then his own name spoken. "Come in, Mr. Emerson."

His attention centered on the approaching interview, he did not glance toward the departing visitor until she stopped suddenly at the outer door and came straight toward him with outstretched hands.

"Boyd!"

He checked himself and turned to face Cherry Malotte.

"Why, Cherry," he ejaculated, "what in the world"— He took her two hands in his, and she laughed up into his face. "In the name of heaven, where did you come from?"

"I arrived last night on the Queen," she said. "Oh, I'm glad to see you!"

"But what brings you to the States? I thought you were in Kal"—

"Sh-h!" She laid a finger on her lips, with a glance over her shoulder to the inner office. "I'll tell you about it later."

"Mr. Hilliard will see you now, sir," the attendant announced to Emerson.

"I must talk to you right away," Boyd exclaimed hurriedly. "I won't be long. Can you wait?"

"Certainly. I'll wait right here, only hurry, hurry!"

The pleasure of seeing her was so genuine that he squeezed her hands heartily and entered Hilliard's sanctum with a smile on his lips.

Soon he returned. The smile was gone from his face. Hilliard had been refused to meet the men of Syndicate required for the enterprise. He told Cherry. "We must have the money or we are ruined," said the girl.

"Yes," answered Boyd wearily. He made an engagement to meet Cherry later and went to visit three other bankers, but they all turned his proposition down.

CHAPTER IX.

CHERRY the next day demonstrated her power over all sorts and conditions of men by reducing the blase young clubman to a state of grinning admiration. "Fingerless" Fraser alone had been missing from the coterie. He had discovered them from a distance, to be sure, and came over to exchange greetings with Cherry, but the disastrous result of the fellow's garrulity was still so fresh in Boyd's mind that he could not invite him to join them, and Fraser, with singular modesty, had quickly withdrawn, to wander lonesomely for awhile till sheer ennui drove him to bed. His dejection awakened little sympathy in Boyd, who felt happier for the removal of his irritating presence.

In the morning Boyd was brought sharply back to a realization of his difficult position by a letter from Mildred Wayland.

"Father and I had another scene over you," wrote Mildred. "It was the first quarrel we ever had, and I'm half sick as a result. I simply can't bear that sort of thing, and we have agreed to drop the subject. What roused him to such a sudden fury I'm sure I don't know."

Boyd knew, however, and the knowledge did not add to his comfort.

It seemed, indeed, as if the trust's enmity had marked him in the eyes of the whole financial world. He was again denied assistance at the banks, and this time in a manner to show him the futility of further effort.

In his perplexity he turned naturally to Cherry, who listened to his tale of repeated failure with furrowed brows, pondering the matter as seriously as if the responsibility had been her own.

"The battle has begun sooner than I expected," she said at length. "I never dreamed they could fix the banks so quickly."

"Somehow, I can't believe this is the work of the trust people. I don't see how they could accomplish so much in so short a time. Why, it came like a thunderclap."

"I hope I am wrong," she answered, "but something unexpected must have happened to change Mr. Hilliard's attitude. What could it be except pressure from higher sources?"

"Has he dropped any hint before you?"

"Not a hint. He wouldn't let go of anything. Why, he is too close fisted to drop his r's."

"Will you take dinner with me this evening so that we can talk over any further developments?"

"I am to dine with Mr. Hilliard," said the girl.

"Oh!" Boyd's tone of disappointment seemed disproportionate to the occasion. He endeavored to disguise his feeling by saying lightly: "You are breaking into exclusive circles. He lives in quite a palace, I am told."

"I—I'm not dining at his home," Cherry hesitated, and Boyd flashed a sharp glance at her. A faint color flushed her cheeks as she explained. "He could not see me at the office today, so he arranged for me to take dinner with him."

"I see." Boyd detected a note bitter to strange in his own voice. "I am going to try the Tacoma banks tomorrow. Would you like to run over with me in the morning? The sound trip is beautiful."

"I would love to," she exclaimed. "I may have something to report if I can make Mr. Hilliard talk."

"Out of curiosity, I should like to know what influenced him. I'll call for you in time for the 9 o'clock boat," he added, as he arose to go. "Meanwhile if you get a hint from Hilliard it may be useful."

Cherry had finished her breakfast next morning when he called and was awaiting him, clad in a brown velvet suit which set off her trim figure with all the effectiveness of skillful tailoring. She was as perfect to the eye as the morning itself.

"Well, did Hilliard expose the hidden mysteries of the banking system?" he questioned as they walked down toward the water front.

"He did. It is no mystery at all now."

"Then it was that newspaper story that frightened him."

"Indirectly perhaps. He didn't mention it."

"What did he say?"

"Nothing."

"Nothing! Then how"—

"He informed me that you are engaged to marry Miss Wayland."

"Yes. But what did he say about the loan?"

"Only what I have told you. The rest is easy. Had you been less secretive I would have known instantly when to blame for the trouble. Wayte Wayland and Amos Marsh are working double, and inasmuch as you are persona non grata"—

"Who told you I was persona non grata?"

"You told me yourself without intending to. Please give me credit for some shrewdness. If you had been a welcome suitor you would have had no difficulty in raising the $200,000 in Chicago. Then too, I remember the story you told me at Kalvik, your menial attitude to my house, in fact. Oh, it was very simple."

"Well, what of it? What has all that got to do with my present difficulty?"

"Listen! You want to marry the daughter of the greatest trust builder in the country, and he does not want you for a son-in-law. You undertake an enterprise which threatens his hold on millions, and if successful in that you contemplate his annihilation in the other contest. Now it all goes well until he learns of your plans, then he strikes with his own weapons. A word here and there, a hint to the banks, and your fine castle comes tumbling down about your ears. I thought you had more perception."

"We haven't figured Marsh in at all," he said tentatively.

"He figures nevertheless, as I intend to show you today. To begin with, please notice that unobtrusive man in the gray suit. Not now! Don't look around for a minute. You will see him on the opposite side of the street."

Boyd turned, to observe a rat faced fellow across the way, evidently bound for the Tacoma boat.

"Is he following us?"

"I see him everywhere I go."

Boyd's face clouded angrily, at which Cherry exclaimed, "Now, for heaven's sake, don't mimic Big George or we'll never learn anything."

"I won't stand for a spy," he growled.

Finally the girl said, "You really do care a great deal for Miss Wayland, don't you?"

His only answer was a deep breath and a slow turning of the head, but once she had seen the look in his eyes she needed no other. She could only say: "I hope she is worthy of all she is causing you to suffer, Boyd. So few of us are."

She did not speak again, but in her heart was a great heaviness. They reached the dock and lost sight of the spy, only to have him reappear soon after the boat cleared, and, while neither spoke of it, they felt his presence during the whole trip.

At Tacoma Boyd left her to go about his business, but joined her later at lunch, with the joyful announcement:

"I've had better luck this time. They said there would be no difficulty whatever in handling the matter, and they are to let me know definitely tomorrow."

"Did Hawkshaw hound you to the bank?" she inquired.

"I rather think so."

"Then tomorrow will tell the tale."

"You mean the bank will turn me down?"

"Yes. If I've sized up the situation correctly. I dare say these banks are as cautious as those in Seattle, and a few words over the telephone would do the trick."

"I'm inclined to give that shadow a little personal attention," the young man mused, but when she questioned him he only smiled and assured her of his caution.

Again on the return trip they discovered the fellow among the passengers. Cherry noticed as they reached the dock that while Emerson maintained a flow of conversation his eyes were constantly upon the fellow's back and that he kept a position close to his shoulder, regardless of jostling from the others. She could not tell what this foreboded, nor did she gain a hint of Boyd's purpose until the gangplank was in place and they were out upon it. A narrow space separated the boat from the dock. As they crossed this Boyd slipped and half fell on the slanting planks. He lunged violently against the man in gray, who was next him. It occurred with the suddenness of pure accident, and the next she saw was the stranger plunging downward along the piling, clutching wildly at the vessel's side, while Boyd clung to the guard rope as if about to lose his balance.

The man's cry as he struck the water alarmed the crowd and caused a momentary stampede, in which Cherry and Boyd were thrust sternward, but the confusion quickly subsided as an officer dug a life preserver at the gasping creature beneath. A moment later the hatless spy was dragged to the dock, indignant and spluttering.

"I'M VERY SORRY, SIR."

"I'm very sorry, sir," Boyd apologized profusely. "It was all my fault. The plank was steep, and I was forced off my feet. Whenever I'm followed too closely I lose my head. It's a weakness I have."

The man was still too dumbfounded by his cold immersion to do more than chatter angrily. In the hubbub Emerson led his companion out into the street, where she beheld him shaking with suppressed laughter.

"Boyd," she cried in a shocked voice, "then it was. You you might have killed him! Suppose his head had struck a timber!"

"Yes, that would have been too bad," he declared. Then, at the slight of her face, his chuckle changed to a wolfish snarl. "He'll know enough to keep away from me hereafter."

"I'M VERY SORRY, SIR."

"Don't! Don't! I never saw you look so. Why, it might have been murder."

"Well?" he said at her curiously.

Horton Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay grange met in regular session Friday evening with an attendance of twenty-nine, Worthy Master J. C. Wallace in the chair.

Two applications for membership were received.

Albert Bathka was instructed in the third and fourth degrees.

Worthy Master Mears of Pomona gave a good talk for the good of the order.

John A. Newville of Boyne City instructed the candidates in the unwritten work.

Grange closed in form after which they adjourned to the Long residence for the program and oyster supper.

Literary Notes

Do You Know How to Choose a Table?

"A living-room naturally has a certain livable look and air of homelikeness," says Lucy Abbott Taroopt in Woman's Home Companion for November, "and this in a way determines the style of table which should be used in this room. No unstable gilt affairs are allowed, no imitations of dainty inlay. Instead, mahogany, oak and other durable woods are used, and also wicker and willow. These should, of course, be in styles to harmonize with the rest of the furniture. Be sure to get substantial ones that run on good simple lines and that have a fine mellow finish, not the kind shiny and cheapskating. [illegible]

"The old-fashioned center table yet has a certain well-assured grace, which for one's every need and delight, from an afternoon tea to the evening [illegible] of [illegible] we always [illegible] to have in the center of our room. For most of comfort, and the well-fancy naturally gathers about it to the evenings.

"The chief table in the living-room should be large and correspondingly substantial, giving the greatest amount of use and comfort to the greatest number. A sofa drawn up to it on one side, that several can sit and read in the evening, and comfortable chairs placed near the other sides, is not only a sensible arrangement, but also a well-balanced and attractive one.

"If you do not wish to have a table cover or runner, lamp-mats made of leather, brocade, cretonne or stenciled linen may be used. If you use a table cover, it should be made to fit the top of the table and edged with gimp. Brocade, velours, velvet and heavy silk are edged with drill gold or silver or silk. Cretonne or crash looks well on this sort of table.

"A book-rack, a bowl for flowers, books that are in use, an ornament or two of real merit, are usually all the average table will hold, beside the lamp and desk-set. The table-drawer should be supplied with writing supplies, and if there is a shelf underneath, magazines can be placed on it in orderly piles. Guard against having too many things on the table, for it must never have a catch-all look."

A GOOD POSITION.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or Railway Telegraphy. Since the eight-hour law became effective and since the Wireless Companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $50 to $80 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R. R. and Wireless Officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write them for full details at Cincinnati, O., or Philadelphia, Pa. 38tf

COTTONSEED MEAL FOR WORK HORSES.

The Iowa experiment station recently has done a good deal of experimental work to determine the effects produced by substituting rich concentrated feeds for oats in the rations for work horses. Special attention was given to the effect produced upon the health of the horses and their ability to endure hard work as well as maintain their flesh and condition and also the economy of the ration.

The first experiment included three teams of horses and continued for 100 days. They were started on a ration of corn and oats of equal parts by weight, in which later oilmeal was substituted for oats in a ratio of about 15 to 1. The horses seemed to relish the pea size oilmeal more than the ground product, and so it was fed in this form. When gluten feed was substituted in the ration for comparison with oilmeal it was found that some of the horses did not relish the feed and did not eat it readily. In this case the use was soon discontinued. Such animals as did eat it, however, seemed to endure the work practically as well as those receiving oilmeal. Cottonseed meal gave probably the best results of any of the feeds substituted for oats. It was very readily eaten by the horses and was found efficient in maintaining the health and weight of the horses.

The general conclusion reached from the experiments indicated that the health and endurance of the horses were the same when fed corn with a moderate amount of any of the three feeds tested as when fed corn and oats as a ration.

FEEDING CORN TO CATTLE.

Methods Pursued by a Successful Ohio Stock Raiser.

In this section of the country the feeding of cattle has become quite a general business during the past few years, which has enforced Ohio feeder to the New England States. Therefore, as its cattle feeding [illegible] being established [illegible] our cattle and [illegible] we have [illegible] cattle to advance the [illegible]

The usual method is to purchase stock cattle during the fall and winter. These are then [illegible] and [illegible] the grass and [illegible] in the following fall. The feed for the cattle during the winter is usually [illegible] and hay. If young cattle are [illegible] of hay, [illegible] they will grow [illegible] through the winter in good shape. However, if fed [illegible] corn [illegible] young cattle is that young [illegible] can be pushed through the winter in only fair shape.

As a rule, most of our cattle are fed during the fall and early winter. Hogs or cattle will fatten on less feed during moderate temperatures, as it takes a certain amount of feed to keep up the animal heat.

As to the kinds of feed used, corn is king with us. In starting cattle, to fatten I generally give some corn on grass as early as the 1st of September or as soon as the new corn commences to harden. This is done by going in the corn and cutting as much as is needed, say one, two or three stalks for each steer for a feed. This amount can be increased gradually as the cattle become accustomed to the new corn until they are on full feed.

Shock corn is fed once a day and husked corn once a day. The advantage of feeding husked corn is in saving the fodder or rough feed, and the cattle also will eat the husked corn somewhat better. Those farmers who have clover hay or alfalfa have a great advantage in giving these with the corn.

The feeding period lasts from 90 to 120 days and sometimes longer, but this is about the average period of feeding.

Profit In Mule Raising.

Ever stop to think that the average mule sells for about $10 more than the average horse? Ever think that there is never any difficulty in selling a mule, while the market for horses may be dull? There never has been an overproduction of mules, and there does not seem likely to be in the future. It costs less to raise a mule, and he is always a money maker, whether for work or for sale.

INGENIOUS DEVICES UTILIZED IN FLIGHT FOR EUROPEAN COAST

With the excitement attendant upon Walter Wellman's start for Europe and the successful aerial voyage from Paris to London, public interest—long monopolized by the more spectacular aeroplane—has switched to the dirigible balloon.

Wellman, a veteran newspaper man and long Washington correspondent for a Chicago paper, has been derided because of his several failures to reach the north pole by balloon. Because of this many persons had little faith in the sincerity of his attempt to cross the Atlantic in his big dirigible America.

One of Wellman's greatest factors in interesting influential persons in his proposal was Melvin Vaniman, chief engineer of the America, a close student of all things pertaining to aerial navigation. To his inventive mind are due many ingenious devices on the big dirigible.

Vaniman's Fertile Mind.

For instance, on the second day out of Atlantic City the motors were shut down while the America was running before the wind. Wellman explaining it by wireless by saying:

"The equilibrator is jerking on the airship as it leaps from wave to wave, but no damage has been done."

The equilibrator is the line of iron gasoline tanks strung on a steel cable and reaching down to the sea, where its rising and falling with the expansion and contraction of the hydrogen in the great gas bag, due to differences of day and night temperatures, are supposed to keep the airship within a narrow range of altitude and to avoid the necessity of letting gas out of the bag when the heat of the midday sun would carry it to too great a height.

WELCOMING AIRSHIP AMERICA

This device was Vaniman's, and it was his idea to fill the iron tanks of the equilibrators with gasoline that as the buoyancy of the airship grew less the tanks could be hauled up and their contents used in the motors, thus gradually lessening the weight to be carried. The equilibrator was one of the chief problems of the venture, and it was not surprising that it made trouble. With the fall of the equilibrator dragging over the tops of the waves at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour it would not be safe to run the engines of the airship and thus increase its "jerking."

Polar Ship Used.

The America is the same airship that failed in its polar trips in 1907 and 1909, but considerably enlarged. It is second in size to the largest Zeppelin. It is 228 feet over all in length, with an extreme diameter of 52 feet. The gas bag volume is 345,000 cubic feet, giving a total lifting capacity of slightly more than 24,000 pounds—more than twelve tons. The nacelle, or car in which the crew, instruments, motor and supplies are carried, is 150 feet long and weighs 4,500 pounds. It is made of steel tubing, steel cross members and steel guy wires. Steel cables having a tensile strength of 30,000 pounds hold it in place, with complete steel suspension from the balloon proper.

The gas bag itself is made of three layers of cotton and silk impregnated with three layers of rubber and weighs another 4,500 pounds. Three gasoline motors—one of 80, one of 200 and another small one of but 10 horsepower—other machinery, instruments for nautical and astronomical observations, lifeboat, wireless apparatus, repair materials, tools, food and water supplies for six men for thirty days and the crew of six men add another 5,000 pounds to the weight which the hydrogen bag will have to support. Fourteen thousand pounds of the lifting capacity of the balloon are thus utilized, leaving about 10,000 pounds of gasoline and lubricating oil.

Of the three gasoline motors with which the America is equipped only two are intended for propelling purposes. One of these is a four cylinder, 70-80 horsepower, heavy duty engine on which the brunt of propulsion other than that afforded by taking advantage of the winds, if they are easterly in direction, will fall.

One Motor In Reserve.

An eight cylinder 200 horsepower motor is held in reserve, not to be used unless the smaller engine is unable to cope with the head resistance that may be occasioned by adverse or baffling breezes. Then there is an auxiliary ten horsepower motor, which is intended to drive the air pump and maintain pressure within the air bag at a constant level, and to this small engine is attached a tiny dynamo intended to supply electric light to the car and his passengers.

The America is propelled by two pairs of twin laminated wood screws eleven feet in diameter, with a pitch of about five and one-half feet and a thrust of 780 pounds. Each pair is direct-connected to the crank shaft of one of the duty motors, the forward set being turned by the 70-80 horsepower engine. A few feet aft of these propellers is the second pair of screws, which will not be used except when occasion demands it.

As it is not designed to use those two sets of propellers at the same time, except under extraordinary circumstances, the breakdown of one pair will not disable the ship. Extra crank shafts, propeller shafts and propellers are carried, and repairs or substitutes of broken parts may be made without stopping one or the other of the motors.

How Airship Is Stocked.

The America carried food enough to last for thirty days, water enough for forty, gas enough in the giant envelope to keep her in the air for fifty days, gasoline to run her ten and emergency rations in her nonsinkable lifeboat to carry the crew for several weeks in case of its being forced into the sea. The lifeboat can be cut away with a single thrust of a knife.

The experiences of Count Zeppelin with dirigible balloons had been of the greatest assistance to Engineer Vaniman. The first Zeppelin airship was blown by a storm from the control of those who held her and was destroyed. To prevent such a catastrophe Vaniman placed at two vital spots of the America sharp ripping knives connected by cords to the airship's car. A single pull at either of the cords will rip the main seams across the gas envelope, emptying it, as his tests have shown, in a single minute. The engineer planned to use the knives on the first bag of the airship's keel against the ground should it be forced, dying low, into a woody or rocky territory. Such a use of the knives in a former experience in Spitzbergen saved the crew from serious hurt after being dragged in a wind.

Count Zeppelin was disposed to be conservative in his construction of the first Zeppelin airship. As soon as Vaniman learned of the Zeppelin he began to [illegible] the America's surrounding envelope with a [illegible] cotton canvas. It withstood the test of a gasoline torch. Even the paint of the car was protected. Provision is also being made between the roof and the bottom of the gas envelope.

Profit by French Accident.

The accident which sent a French dirigible tumbling out of the air, killing its entire crew, happened because of a splintered propeller. A flying wedge of wood, hurled upward, tore a long rent through the gas envelope. Vaniman noted that accident also, and when he was choosing propellers for the America he chose a model composed of finely jointed layers of wood, selected for the perfection of their grains, and alternating between two different kinds, a French walnut and a French mahogany.

Then, to add still more certainty of escape from harm from that source, a strong linen envelope was woven to fit the whole blade, the envelope being slipped on like a glove and then glued down, the glue being forced through the cloth after its adjustment by compressed air.

The explosion of gas bags in the air has been a constant source of trouble to balloonists, both of the dirigible and drifting kinds. Wellman made a special study of envelope materials.

He refused to follow Zeppelin in the use of an aluminium casing over interior balloons, because he said it gave an initial weight which cut very seriously into the net lifting power. The ordinary balloon cloth of rubber and silk allowed too much filtration of gas for anything like a transatlantic cruise. Wellman tried two layers of rubber and one of cotton and one of silk. Finally his perfected material, in use on the America, is, so he asserted before sailing, at once the lightest and the most air tight covering in use anywhere in the world, giving him twice the net lifting force, with half the balloon area of any of the Zeppelin models.

Pan-American Rails Advance.

The total length of the Pan-American railroad will be 11,500 miles, from New York to Buenos Aires. Of this distance over 1,000 miles are now completed. The rest, it is predicted, will be finished within ten years.

SIMPLE CORN CURES.

How to Relieve Oneself of Troublesome Affections by Simple Methods.

With proper attention and suitable footwear children should not be afflicted either with callous spots or corns. Nevertheless children often do suffer with both. In such case one of these three sure, safe and simple remedies will be found satisfactory:

Peel and chop very fine two small white onions and apply directly to the afflicted part by means of a firm bandage. Leave on overnight and next morning bathe the foot in very soapy warm water. Repeat for three nights.

Bind half a prune from which the pit has been removed with the soft inner side upon the corn and leave overnight. Repeat three or four nights.

Thoroughly soak a thick slice of white bread in strong, undiluted vinegar, tie this poultice firmly over the callous place for the night and in the morning bathe the foot in sudsy warm water. Repeat one or two nights.

How to Make Yorkshire Pudding.

Take three eggs, one pint of milk, one cup of flour and one teaspoonful of salt. Beat the eggs very light, add the milk, pour over the flour and salt and beat well. Bake in hissing hot gem pans, basting with drippings from the beef, or place the roast on a rack and pour the pudding batter in the pan under it.

CHARLEVOIX CO. FRUIT GROWERS

Meeting of Association is Called to Meet at East Jordan, Saturday

FULL ATTENDANCE IS EXPECTED

It Will be Decided Whether Organization is to be Made Permanent

Delegate to Meeting of State Society to be Elected—Organization of Great Value to Charlevoix County.

Secretary Milford of the Charlevoix County Fruit Growers' Association, is sending out the following letter to the members:

"Members of Charlevoix County Fruit Growers Association:

A meeting of our association has been called for Saturday, December 3, 1910, at 1:30 p. m., at the town hall in East Jordan.

The Michigan State Horticultural Society will hold their fortieth annual meeting at Benton Harbor, on December 5-7-9, and our association is urged to send a delegation to this meeting.

Our association meetings during the summer, with one or two exceptions, have not roused much interest and the purpose of the meeting now called, will be to discuss the advisability of continuing the meetings during the winter months.

We fully realize that the average farmer and fruit grower has more time to attend such meetings in winter than in summer and that he does most of his reading and planning during that time.

Secretary Bassett has offered to be with us at one of our winter meetings, and before we can correspond with him it is necessary that we know whether we are to continue our organization, and that the organization be made permanent if continued.

The matter of sending a delegation to the state meeting must also be considered at this meeting.

We hope that all members who can will attend this meeting, and, if it is impossible for you to attend, will you not drop Mr. W. P. Sqnier, of East Jordan, the president of the association, a line and express your opinion as to the value of these meetings during the wioter."

It is most earnestly hoped that every member of the association, and all who are interested in the development of what is destined to be our leading industry, will make an effort to be present at East Jordan, or, if that is impossible, send in your membership fee and a word of encouragement. Nothing is needed but organized effort and the education which comes from meeting together and talking over the different problems which daily arise in fruit culture, to follow up the good work which has been done, and is now going on, in making known, that if you want "fruit with flavor," the Charlevoix county product fills that desire. The market has been made, it is now up to Charlevoix county growers to furnish the best goods, and regular meetings, good attendance and active discussions at the association meetings, will enable them to do so.

ANOTHER CITY

For Charlevoix County is Ambition of East Jordan

Has Commenced Working to Secure Incorporation

A special meeting of our Board of Trade was held last Monday evening at the Odd Fellow's hall over Hoosinger's store, the purpose being to talk over the matter of making East Jordan a city. The meeting was attended by a goodly representation of our business men and citizens, and the cousensus of opinion of the gentlemen present was that our town has long outgrown her village garb. Both our neighboring towns of Boyne City and Charlevoix are now working under city charters and find the city plan of government far more acceptable than that of the village system.

The "bone of contention" will be a matter of boundaries, but we believe our citizens will exercise the spirit of fairness in this question and that such lines can be drawn to the satisfaction of all.

The board of trade appointed two committees—one on "Petition"—consisting of Messrs H. I. McMillan, W. A. Stroebel and George G. Glean. The petition, which is laid before the board of supervisors must include the boudaries and carry the names of at least two hundred taxpayers.

The second committee, consisting of Attorney D. H. Fitch, C. H. Whittington and R. L. Lorraine, were appointed to arrange with the board of supervisors for placing of the petition before them at the January meeting.

Arrangements were made by the board of trade to pay the necessary expenses of the committees, and the meeting was ajourned until next Tuesday evening, November 29.—East Jordan Herald.

ROBERT MILLER DEAD

Was One of the Builders of the City of Charlevoix

Second President of the Village—Lived Here Since 1864.

Robert Miller, one of the best known residents of Charlevoix county, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Agnes Jarvis, Tuesday night.

Mr. Miller was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, over eighty years ago and came to Charlevoix in 1864.

Mr. Miller followed the trade of blacksmithing for several years, afterward engaging in the hotel business he having built the Bridge street house, a part of which is now Bakers Inn, in 1868. He was justice of the peace for several terms and was elected a member of the council at the incorporation of the village in 1879. The next year he was elected village president and served one term.

His wife died several years ago and he leaves one daughter, Mrs. Jarvis. One son, R. W. Miller, died about three years ago.

Mr. Miller was a veteran of the Civil War, having enlisted in Co. C, 106, New York Infantry, in 1862 and served nearly two years. He became a member of Baxter post G. A. R., upon its organization, and served it in many official positions.

During the past few years "Uncle Robert", as he was familiarly known, has been confined to a wheel chair but he still was interested in the affairs of the city and took an active interest in its welfare, and will be much missed.

The funeral will be held at the house Friday at one o'clock in the afternoon, under the auspices of the Charlevoix Old Soldiers Association. The body will lie in state at the home from ten to twelve o'clock in the forenoon to give all a chance to take a last look at one who was universally respected.

DEATH OF JAMES HOWEY

Was a Pioneer of Charlevoix County Coming Here in 1882.

James Howey one of the pioneers of Charlevoix county, died at his home in East Jordan, Sunday, November 20, after a long illness.

Mr. Howey was born October 26, 1852, near Cookill Ireland, and came with his parents, to this state when nineteen years old, settling first in Milford Michigan and afterward at Kalkaska. Mr. Howey came to East Jordan in 1882 and settled on a farm where he lived until his death.

Mr. Howey was an enthusiastic worker and state official of the Farmers' Society of Equity. He leaves a wife and two children.

The funeral was held Wednesday, Rev. A. D. Grigsbey officiating assisted by Rev. J. Hackett.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE

In Session at Atlantic City Passes Important Resolutions

Federal Aid For Road Improvement—Sweeping Changes in Payne-Aldrich Traffic Law Asked For.

Resolutions calling for the drastic regulation of all the railroads of the country and the giving to the commerce commission the power to nullify freight and passenger rates that are proved to be extortionate, were adopted by the National Grange. Radical changes in the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and the physical valuation of all railroad trunk lines were also urged by the farmers.

Federal aid for road improvements, a parcels post law, the conservation of the national resources, a national income tax, the direct election of senators, agricultural extension and a non-partisan tariff commission were included in the report of the resolutions committee, which became the progressive platform of the agriculturists. The speedy construction of a ship canal connecting the Mississippi with the great lakes and the Atlantic ocean; canal lines and the dredging of all great arteries of commerce, to cheapen the marketing of produce, were also declared for in the report. The report reaffirmed the action of the grange at Des Moines, Iowa, last year, in asking for federal aid to promote the sale of farm products in foreign lands.

A centralized United States bank and ship subsidies were opposed, as was a federal bureau of public health.

The proposal of the insurgent members to expend $60,000 of the $118,000 surplus in grange extension during 1911 was defeated, but plans for an energetic campaign were adopted. The resolutions for a committee of universal peace, proposed by State Master Creasey of Pennsylvania was defeated along with a move for proportionate representation of the state membership.

The state executive committee, which demanded an explanation of the expenditure of grange funds during 1910, was referred to the grange records.

HELD SUCCESSFUL FAIR

Norwood Grange did Tuesday, November Twenty-Second

Attendance was Good—Prize Essays Were Read by School Children.

The fair held by Norwood Grange November 22, was a success in every way, a fine display being made by the farmers and fruit growers at that section. The following were the prize winners: Vegetables; onions and punpkins, Geo. A. Dennis; cabbage, Mae Bugbee; Grain: corn, George Parsons; oats, Amiblon Stafford. Fruits: apples, William Knight; pears, William Seymour. Canned fruit, Mrs. William Seymour.

Miss Kathleen Bogbee took the girl's prize for essay on "The Origin of Thanksgiving Day." Carl Hallicheck won the boy's prize, subject, "History of His Town," the judges were Mrs. Biery, Miss Valentine and William Ityers, they found the essays well written and a credit to their writers.

Those present from out of town were George A. Dennis and wife, William Knight and family, William Ityers and Nat Burns. The receipts from the fair was twenty-two dollars. Norwood Grange extends its thanks to all for their patronage and especially to the boys and girls who did so well.

ARE BUILDING ROADS

Counties in Western Michigan Improving Highways

Ten Counties Have Adopted the County Road System in This Region.

Considerable is being done by the counties of western Michigan toward securing better wagon roads. In round numbers a quarter of a million dollars will be expended in 1911 for better highways. About half of the twenty counties in the western Michigan region are under the county road system and are making improvement according to definite programs.

The fifteen townships of Charlevoix county are raising better than $20,000 for substantial highways for the coming year.

Grand Traverse is under the county system and its supervisors at their annual meeting held in October, voted a tax of two and one-half mills on each dollar of assessed valuation. This tax will yield approximately $18,000. During the year ending October first, five miles of main highways were graded and given roadbeds of gravel.

Several of the townships of Kent county, along with the cities Graud Rapids and East Grand Rapids have formed a "Good Roads" district and are raising $47,843.93 for the purpose of betteriag the highways.

Manistee county has been working under the county road system for a great many years, and has better than fifty miles of improved gravel highways. Its tax for the coming year is in round numbers $23,000.

Over six miles of gravel road were built in Mecosta county during the year ending with the last of September at a cost of $8,533.66. The supervisors voted a tax of two mills on the dollar, which will give the county commissioners $10,121.86 for further improvements.

There is a good milage of macadam road work in Mason county, but the work of making through main highways is to continue. A tax of three mills on the dollar is being raised. This means that the county commissioners will have $20,808.27 with which to work. This county has a good equipment of road building material.

The county road system was adopted in Muskegon county in 1895, and since that time the county commissioners have expended for improvements and maintenance up to December 31, 1909, $321,288.25. The Muskegon board of supervisors in October ordered the spreading of a tax of two and one-half mills on a dollar for the coming season. This will give $42,720.80 for the use of the commissioners. During 1910 eight miles of macadam highway was built and a reward of $1,000 a mile reward from the state.

Most of the Criminal Cases are Continued—Eichler vs. Hill Mistrial.

Circuit Court convened in regular session Monday forenoon. On arrangement of the calendar most of the criminal cases were put over.

A motion for change of venue was made in the Swift cases but was over ruled by the court.

The first case tried before a jury was the case of Reed Brown & Co. vs. Emory, assumpsit, wherin a claim was made for $106. By direction of the court a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for sixty-five dollars.

The next case taken up was trespass case of Pearl Eichler vs Charles Gill. Tuesday afternoon being taken up in securing a jury. This is the second trial of this case and is being hardly contested. M. F. Gunior of Petoskey and A. H. Nicholas Jr. of East Jordan appearing for the plaintiff while W. S. Misick of Petoskey and J. M. Harris of Boyne City are for the defense. This afternoon it was found that a juror was disqualified and the case was put over until next term.

All the petitions for naturalization were granted.

W. C. T. U. ANNUAL RECEPTION

Held Recently Was a Success in Every Way—Prize Winners.

The recent reception given by the W. C. T. U. at the home of Mrs. N. A. Shores, to the teachers, normal class, pastors and school board was a successful event.

The program was in charge of Miss Hilmea, who had taken much time and pains with it and was fine, it being the result of the "Clipping Contest" in the school, on "the evil effects of alcohol and tobacco from a scientific standpoint". Out of the sixty entering the contest, the three who were awarded the prizes gave their readings. Marian Saunders receiving the first prize, Florence Milner, second prize, Hilda Cooper third prize. Honorable mention made of two others entering the contest, John Clark, and Irma Cowan.

The normal class sang "The Crusade Glory Song", which was followed by a talk by Rev. F. M. Taylor, who rendered the decision of the judges and awarded the prizes, in a happy manner. This was followed by addresses by Rev. Putnam, H. L. Iddings and F. J. Meech. Mrs. A. J. Davison sang beautifully a "Lullaby Song"

About sixty people were at this meeting and enjoyed the dainty refreshments of sandwiches, coffee and cake which were served.

SOCIALIST MADE GAINS

In Charlevoix County at November Election

Total Vote in Charlevoix County a Remarkable Small One.

One of the interesting things to be found in a study of the election returns is the growth of the Socialist party in Charlevoix county.

While the other parties without exception were showing a decrease of 40 to 50 per cent or more the Socialist party was showing an increase of about the same figures in the last two years. The following table showing the vote on secretary of state in 1908 and 1910 shows this:

	1908	1910
Republican	2300	1418
Democrats	848	351
Prohibition	140	62
Socialist*	171	243
Total	3459	2074

*Includes Socialist Labor vote.

The Socialist vote was very largely a straight one, too though 40 or 50 switched over to vote for those candidates of the Labor party who were unopposed by Socialists.

All over the country the Socialists are reporting great increases in their vote as compared with two years ago. Considering the increase in this county, which being largely an agricultural community is free from those causes that tend to produce Socialists, it is no wonder that for the first time in history they are to be represented in the halls of congress by a Socialist, Victor Berger of a Milwaukee district.

The above is taken from the Boyne Citizen. To our mind the most remarkable thing about the election returns this year is the light vote cast, nearly sixteen hundred votes less being cast in Charlevoix county than were cast two years ago.

MICHIGAN APPLES THE FAVORITES

At the Great Laod Exposition in Chicago

WESTERN APPLES ARE ON DISPLAY

Michigan Product is Arranged so Visitors Can Handle Them

Western Michigan Display is Twice as Large as Last Year—Section is Always Crowded With Visitors.

L. F. Perkett is back from the Chicago land show, and reports that the display of western Michigan fruits is at least twice as good as the one made last year. There is more to it, and the quality is much better than that of the first display.

At all times the bulk of the crowd can be found in the western Michigan section, as they feel more at home there than they do in the sections where the western fruits are on display. Display is a good word because the men who are pushing the irrigated lands have their fruits so arranged that the people can only look at and admire it from a distance, while that from this state is out for the inspection of the public who are at liberty to handle and smell of it, and see for themselves that it is really the rare kind that it is advertised to be in the literature that is being distributed.

This personal contact with the fruit is a great help toward proving the great superiority of the Michigan article, to that grown on the irrigated lands of the western states. When the people are allowed to handle the actual fruit they can see for themselves that it is all that it is represented to be as to size, weight and general perfection.

One characteristic of the Michigan grown apple is its great weight when compared with the western article. The article of the west is of a spongy nature, while the product from this state is solid, which characteristic readily distinguishes it from its competitors.

The Michigan display is put up in boxes this year, with three layers in each box, while the apples from the west are exhibited with one layer in the box, and the boxes are placed far out of reach of the people, so all that they know about the good qualities of the product is gained from the distance, which is not considered an ideal way in which to prove that the fruit is the best, in any way except color.

All the western apples are carefully polished and when placed on the shelves are carefully guarded lest someone get hold of them and make a face to face comparison with the Michigan product.

Among the visitors the western Michigan display rules favorite, because those in charge are not afraid to show their colors, and offer the actual proof for every statement that is made in connection with the display. This being shown pleases the people, and this kind of advertising is bound to bring results in the future for the Grand Traverse region.

The lectures that are being given in connection with the show are a feature that is taking well, and in this manner many facts are brought to the attention of the visitors that would not be brought out in the usual conversations that are carried out around the exhibit.

The attendance at the show this year is larger than last year, and the people are coming to realize that it is a permanent feature and one that is bound to bring results to all sections that have displayed. —Traverse City Record-Eagle.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and perfected two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in ably suffering mankind. Realize that my time is short, but will do all in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. In all there has been a great many disappointed when they thought relief in their grasp. Let me send you my free prescription booklet of private lectures so that in the quiet of study after I began my scientific classes, way back in '73 that time I have cured many thousands who have acted on recommendations.

LECTURE AND ENTERTAINMENT COURSE!

The Lecture and Entertainment Course which has been arranged for Charlevoix this season will prove to be one of the best and most popular which has ever been booked in this section. . . . . .

It Will Open on December 14th With a Musical and this number will be followed by two lectures and another concert.

One of the lectures will be given by Ex-Gov. Hoch, of Kansas, one of America's foremost public men. The entire course is booked through the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, the Bureau which began its long career of more than forty years with such men as John B. Gough, Henry Ward Beecher and Wendell Phillips and which has been the booking center for great attractions from that day to this.

...The Opening Number...

The Nellie Peck Saunders Concert Company

which comes as the opening number on this notable course is a trio composed of Mrs. Saunders, a reader of rare ability; Mr. Milton Bertodi, a young singer with a rich baritone voice; and Miss Barney, a soprano. After three years of teaching in one of the great conservatories of the Middle West, Nellie Peck Saunders has again taken her place upon the platform. For several years she has borne the reputation of being one of the few really great readers and impersonators of the country. In the program which is to be presented here, some of her readings will be given with musical accompaniments. Also some artistic and high class playlets will be presented by Mrs. Saunders and Mr. Bertoli.

Concerning Bertoli as a baritone, the Detroit Evening News had this to say: "Mr. Bertodi, baritone, so captivated the audience that he was re-called several times."

Concerning Miss Barney, the Detroit Journal said: "Miss Barney's voice is vibrant and above all of the sweetest timbre. She sings with heart and soul and her stage presence is very winning."

Hon. George D. Alden.

Judge George D. Alden, one of the two lecturers on this year's course, holds the unique distinction of being the only man in the country with whom the Redpath Bureau has made a five year contract. This of itself, of course, shows the assurance which the bureau that he is one of the most successful popular lecturers on the platform. His lectures are different, not only in material but in their general make-up from those of any other man. For example, he is a poet and he weaves into his lectures, to the great delight of his audiences original poems which fairly sparkle with both humor and keen logic.

He was first a lawyer and then a judge and therefore his lectures have back of them a splendid experience. He is a vigorous champion of human rights, and honest living. One of his lectures is entitled, "The Needs of the Hour" and this has been given in nearly every state in the union. His latest lecture is entitled, "The Powder and the Match" and these are but two of a series of very strong messages which he is carrying to the American people.

Mr. Alden will appear at Charlevoix on the evening of January 27th.

Governor Hoch.

Gov. Hoch is truly a man of the people. Unlike some of the big lecturers of the present day it has always seemed to be a delight for him to grasp the hand of each member of his audience when they have crowded about him in their enthusiasm at the close of his lecture.

Very few men, indeed, in America have accomplished during their administration as governor as much as Gov. Hoch did in Kansas. There is not space here to mention all the things which he championed and which crystalized into law during his administration but a few of them are deserving of especial mention. Oil legislation, for example, was passed which made possible in three years the establishment of nineteen independent oil refineries and an annual saving of one million dollars to the consumers of coal oil alone in Kansas.

An entire change of management was brought about in state institutions putting them on a civil service business basis, resulting in a wonderful increase in their efficiency. A code of railroad laws unequaled in number perhaps, and far reaching effect even for the laws of any other state, were enacted during his administration. Two cent railroad fare was secured, an anti-pass law enacted, also a duplicate pure food law, a state-wide primary election law, a juvenile court law, and a judicial pay roll law which will restore many adult offenders to good citizenship. A depository law for state funds was passed which is yielding nearly two thousand dollars a month to the state. The enforcement of state prohibition was also a notable feature of his Administration.

The Topeka Herald says of Gov. Hoch, that he is one of the few men in Kansas who can prepare an address while the audience waits. The Worthington, Minn., Herald says: "The Zenith of the Chautauqua was reached when Gov. Hoch was introduced." The Tama, Ia., News says: "He spoke to the largest audience of the Assembly up to the time this was written." He is in the class with LaFollette of Wisconsin, Cummins of Iowa, Folk of Missouri and Hanley of Indiana. Gov. Hoch comes to Charlevoix on February 9th.

Music Makers..

The next number on this notable course will be the Music Makers, who will appear at Charlevoix on April 7th. The Music Makers comprise not only a good quartet, but there is plenty of novelty in the program as well and the evening's entertainment of nearly two hours passes all too quickly.

The Music Makers carry with them the largest marimbaphone ever built for the Lyceum. This instrument is new to the lyceum and moreover in its present state, it may be said to be new to the world, although the principle of producing tone from different lengths of the hardwood is one with the earliest forms of music making. The modern application of the principle, that of connecting powerful resonators with each key and striking the tones with felt covered hammers, is a wonderful development, the resonators creating the volume and the soft hammers beautifying the quality. The effect might be said to suggest that of a powerful harp. On the marimbaphone this quartet renders such selections as the "Poet and Peasant" overture, "The American Patrol," or the "Light Cavalry" overture. The vocal quartet work of this company, their vocal solos, and the readings which are given by one member of the company, are all features of the evening worthy of special comment.

The Music Makers appear at Charlevoix on April 7th.

The lecture and entertainment course is under the management of the lecture course committee, consisting of Chairman Rev. H. A. Putnam, Secretary I. M. DeVoe, A. F. Bridge, Rev. F. M. Taylor, Raymond Bentley, R. W. Kane and A. L. Fitch with an additional charge of ten cents for reserved seats for each entertainment.

Tickets For The Four Numbers Will Be Sold For $1.00

The seats will be reserved before each entertainment.

The committee are planning on taking advantage of any unexpected open date for a fifth entertainment. In this way they hope to give the patrons of the course an especially fine entertainment for a small additional cost. Ticket holders will be given the privilege of the fifth number at twenty-five cents, or one-fourth the price of the course ticket. A personal canvas will be made for the sale of tickets. No one can afford to miss any number of the course. Two single admission tickets will cost as much as the full course ticket. Everyone is urged to buy a course ticket. The committee deserves your support, and are giving you the best course of entertainments that you have had the privilege of attending.

For any information concerning the course, inquire of Supt. I. M. DeVoe or any member of the committee

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

"I—I didn't think it of you." She shuddered weakly, but he only shrugged his shoulders and said, with a finality that cut off further discussion: "He's a spy. I won't be spied upon."

When Boyd entered his room at the hotel, whither he had gone after leaving Cherry at Hilliard's bank, Big George greeted him excitedly.

"There's the dickens to pay. We can't get that barkentine."

"The Margaret? Why not? The charter was all arranged."

"The agent telephoned that we could not have her."

"What reasons did he offer?"

"None. We can't have her, that's all."

"She's the only available ship on the sound. Our stuff will be here in a fortnight."

"Same of it will."

"What do you"—

"Bollers held up."

"Bollers?"

"Yes. Read that." Bait tossed him a telegram.

"'Shipment delayed,'" read Boyd. "Well, this is growing interesting. Thank heaven, other people handle machinery." He reached for a blank and hurriedly wrote a message canceling his order. "I guess Cherry was right. Marsh is fighting to delay us." He began a recital of the morning's occurrence, but before he had finished he was called to the telephone.

"More bad news," he exclaimed as he re-entered the room. "The Jackson-Nelson company say they can't make delivery of their order. I wonder what next."

"We don't need anything more to cripple us," George declared blankly. "Any one of these blows is a knockout."

It was perhaps an hour later that Cherry entered unannounced.

"I just ran in for a minute to tell you something new. When I came up from the bank the elevator boy at the hotel made a mistake and carried me past my floor. Without noticing the difference, I went down the hall, and whom should I run right in to coming out of a room, but our detective! As he opened the door I heard him say, 'Very well, sir. I'll report tomorrow.'"

"To whom was he reporting?"

"I don't know. A few minutes later I called you up to tell you about it, but while I was waiting for my number the operator evidently got the wires crossed or left a switch open, for I heard this much of a conversation:

"'Our contract covers 250,000 cases at $5. We thought that was at least 20 cents under the market.'

"I was about to ring off when I remembered that you had sold your output of 50,000 cases to Bliss & Co. for $5 a case, so I listened on a chance and heard another voice reply"—

"Whose voice?"

"I don't know. It said, 'We'll undersell that by $1.'

"'Good Lord!' said the first speaker. 'That means a loss of'— And then I was cut off. I thought I'd better come over in person instead of trusting to the wire."

"And you didn't recognize either speaker?"

"No. But I discovered at the office that rooms 610 and 612—the suit I saw that detective coming out of—are occupied by a Mr. Jones of New York, who arrived three days ago. I'll bet anything you please that you'll hear from Bliss & Co. within twenty-four hours and that the occupant of those rooms at the Hotel Butler is Willis Marsh."

Big George began to mutter profanely. "It looks like they had us, and all because Fraser's tongue is hung in the middle."

"All the same, we'll fight it out," said Emerson grimly. "If I can raise that money in Tacoma"— Again the telephone bell buzzed noisily.

"Bliss & Co.," predicted Cherry, but for once she was wrong.

"A call from Tacoma," said Boyd, the receiver to his ear; "it's must be the Second National. They were not to let me know till tomorrow." Through the open door of the adjoining room his words came distinctly, while the others listened in tense silence.

"Hello! Yes! This is Boyd Emerson." Then followed a pause, during which the thin, rasping voice of the distant speaker murmured unintelligibly.

"Why not? Can't you give me a reason? I thought you said— Very well. Goodby."

Emerson hung up the receiver carefully and with the same deliberation turned to face his companions. He nodded and spread his hands outward in an unmistakable gesture.

"What, already?" queried the girl.

"They must have been reached by phone."

"That detective may have called Marsh up from there."

"That means it won't do any good to try further in Tacoma. The other banks have undoubtedly been fixed, or they soon will be. If I can slip away undiscovered I'll try Vancouver next, but I haven't much hope."

"It looks bad, doesn't it?" said Cherry.

"As we stand at present," Boyd acknowledged, "we are the owners of a hundred thousand dollars' worth of useless machinery and unsalable supplies."

"And all," mused the girl, "because of a loose tongue and a little type."

CHAPTER X.

CLYDE next day suggested that Cherry could prevail on Hilliard to advance the money.

"Cherry?" asked Boyd. "How can she help?"

"She can do anything she wants with him."

"What do you mean?"

"I may be a heavy autumn frost as a financier," the younger man remarked, "but when it comes to women I'm as wise as a wharf rat. I've been watching her work, and it's great. People have begun to talk about it. Every night it's a dinner and a theater party. Every day orchids and other extortionate bouquets, with jewel boxes tied on with blue ribbons. His motor is at her disposal at all times, and she treats his chauffeur with open contempt. If that doesn't signify"—

"Nonsense!" exclaimed the other with disgust. "She is too nice a girl for that. You have misconstrued Hilliard's politeness."

Finding his worldly wisdom at issue, Clyde defended himself stoutly. "I tell you, he has gone off his blooming balance. I know the symptoms. Leave it to old Dr. Clyde."

"You say other people have noticed it?"

"I do. Everybody in town except you and the newsdealer at the corner—he's blind."

Emerson rose from his chair and began to pace about slowly. "If Hilliard has turned that girl's head with his attentions I'll"—

Clyde threw back his head and laughed in open derision. "Don't worry about her—he is the one to be pitied. She's taking him on a seeing Seattle trip of the most approved and expensive character."

"She isn't that kind," Emerson hotly denied.

"Now, don't be a boy until your beard trips you up. That girl is about to break into Hilliard's vault, and while she's in there, with the gas lighted and a suit case to lug off the banknotes, why not tell her to toss in a few bundles for us?"

"If I can't get along without taking money from a woman I'll throw up the whole deal."

The curious look which Boyd had noted once before came into Clyde's eyes, and this time, to judge by the young fellow's manner, he might have translated it into words; but for the entrance at that moment of Cherry herself, accompanied by "Fingerless" Fraser.

"What luck in Vancouver?" she inquired.

"None whatever. The banks won't listen to me, and I can't interest any private parties."

"See here," volunteered Fraser, "why don't you let me sell some of your stock? I'm there with the big talk."

Emerson turned on him suddenly. "You have demonstrated that. If you had kept your mouth shut we'd have been at sea by now."

The fellow's face paled slightly as he replied, "I told you once that I didn't like your nibs."

"Don't keep that up!" cried Boyd, his much tried temper ready to give way. "I can put up with anything but a lie."

Noting the signs of a rising storm, Clyde scrambled out of his chair, saying, "Well, I think I'll be going." He picked up his hat and stick and hurriedly left the room, followed in every movement by the angry eyes of Fraser, who seemed on the point of an explosion.

"You are tired and overwrought," said Cherry quietly to Boyd. "The success of this enterprise, with any happiness it may bring you, isn't worth a human life, nor is it worth what you are suffering."

"Perhaps not, from your point of view," he said roughly, then struck his palm with his closed fist. "What an idiot I was to begin all this—to think I could win with no weapons and no aid except a half mad fisherman, an addle brained imbecile, a confidence man"—

"And a woman," supplemented Cherry. "I'm the one to blame."

"No; I blame no one but myself. Whatever you're responsible for there's only one person you've harmed—yourself."

"What do you mean?" asked Cherry. Her surprise left him unimpressed.

"Let's be frank," he said. "It is best to have such things out. I traded my friendship for money, and I am ruined. You are staking your honor against Hilliard's banknotes." Her silence only made him the more fiercely determined to force an explanation. "Oh, I'm in no mood to speak gently," he said; then added, with a sting of contempt in his tone: "I didn't think you would pay quite that price for your copper mine."

Cherry Malotte paled to her lips. "Kindly be more explicit; I don't know what you are talking about."

"Then, for your own good, you'd better understand. According to accepted standards, there is one thing no woman should trade upon. You have set yourself to trap Hilliard, and from what I hear you are succeeding. He is a married man. He is notorious, and yet you have deliberately yielded yourself to him for a price."

Suddenly he found the girl standing over him with burning eyes and quivering body.

"What right have you to say such things to me?" she cried. "A moment ago you acknowledged yourself a murderer—at least in thought. You said you would sacrifice anything or everything to gain your ends. Do you think I'm like that too? Are my methods to be called shameful because your own are criminal? And suppose they were? Do you think that you and your love for that unfeeling woman, who sent you out to toil and suffer and sweat your soul dry in the solitude of that horrible country, are the only issues in the world?"

"We won't speak of her," he broke in sharply.

"Oh, yes, we will. You say I have set a price on myself. Well, she can set a price on herself, but you can't see it. Her price was your honor, that has crumbled; your conscience, that has rotted. You have paid it, and you would pay double if she exacted it. But one thing you shall not do; you shall not judge of my bargains nor decide what I have paid to any man."

Never before had Boyd seen a woman so transformed by the passion of anger. She was the picture of defiant fury. The mask had slipped, and he caught a glimpse of the naked, passionate soul, upheaved to its depths.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "You are your own mistress, and you have the right to make any bargain you choose."

He saw that her eyes were misty with tears. "I want you to know," she said, "that I understand your position perfectly. If you don't succeed you not only lose the girl, but ruin yourself, for you can never repay the men who trusted you. That is a very big thing to a man, I know, yet there must be a way out—there always is. Perhaps it will present itself when you least expect it." She gave him a tired little smile before lowering her veil.

He rose and laid his hand on her arm. "Forgive my brutal bluntness.

"WHAT RIGHT HAVE YOU TO SAY SUCH THINGS TO ME?"

I'm not clever at such things, but I would have said as much to my sister if I had one."

It was an honest attempt to comfort her, but it failed. "Goodby," she said; "you mustn't give up."

All the way back to her hotel her mind dwelt bitterly upon his parting words. "His sister! His sister!" she kept repeating. "God! Can't he see?"

Dusk was falling when the girl, with set, defiant face, went to the telephone to call up Hilliard at the Rainier club.

"I have thought over your proposition, and I have changed my mind," she said. "Yes, you may send the car for me at 7." Then, in reply to some request, she laughed back through white lips. "Very well, if you wish it, the blue dress—yes, the blue decollete dress." She hung up the receiver, then stood with hands clinched while a shiver ran through her slender body. She stepped to a closet and flung open the door to stare at the array of gowns.

"So this is the end of my good resolutions," she laughed and snatched a garment recklessly from its hook. "Now for all the miserable tricks of the trade!"

* * * * * * *

George Bait, Clyde and Fraser formed a glum trio as they sat in a nook of the hotel cafe, sipping moodily at their glasses, when on the following afternoon Emerson joined them. But they sensed some untoward happening even before he spoke, for his face wore a look of dazed incredulity, and his manner was so extraordinary that they questioned in chorus:

"What's the matter? Are you sick?"

"No," said he, "but I—I must have lost my mind."

"What is it?"

"The trick is turned."

"The trick?"

"I have raised the money."

With a shout that startled the other occupants of the room Bait and Clyde jumped to their feet and began to caper about in frenzy. Even "Fingerless" Fraser's expressionless face cracked in a wide grin of the blankest amazement.

"About noon I was called on the phone by Hilliard. He asked me to come down to the bank at once, and I went. He said he had reconsidered and wanted to put up the money. It's up. He'll back us. I've got it in writing. It's all cinched—$100,000, and more if we need it."

"You must have made a great talk," declared Clyde.

"I said nothing. He offered it himself as a personal loan. It has nothing to do with the bank. I'm going to tell Cherry now."

Alton Clyde interposed. "I told you she could pull it off," he said.

"This was Hilliard's own notion," Boyd returned coldly. "He merely reconsidered his decision, and"—

"Turn over! You're on your back."

"It was only yesterday afternoon that I talked with Cherry. I dare say she hasn't seen him since."

"Well, I happen to know that she has. As I came home last night I saw them together. They came out of that French cafe across the street and got into Hilliard's car. She was dressed up like a pony."

"What's that got to do with it?" demanded "Fingerless" Fraser.

"She pulled the old fellow's leg, that's all," explained Alton.

"If I thought she had done that," said Emerson slowly, "I wouldn't touch a penny of the money."

"I don't care where the money came from or how it got there," rumbled Bait. "It's here; that's enough."

But Boyd clung to his point with a stubbornness which he himself found it difficult to explain. The arguments of the others only annoyed him. The walk to Cherry's home afforded him time for reflection, which, while it deepened his doubt, somewhat lessened his impatience, and when he was shown into her presence he did not begin in the impetuous manner he had designed.

"What makes you think I had anything to do with it?" she asked after he had spoken.

"You were with Hilliard last night."

She nodded slightly. "We closed our negotiations for the copper mine last night."

"How did you come out?"

"He takes it over and does the development work," she answered.

"That means that you can go independ

No More Blue Mondays For This Housewife

"RICHMOND" Suds-Maker Cuts the Work in Half

Mrs. George S. Briggs, New York City, writes, "I want to thank you in the strongest terms possible for having sold me the "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker. It is certainly a little wonder and as you say does away with all the disagreeable work of dishwashing. I find too, that on wash-day it cuts down the work about one-half. The clothes need less rubbing and are cleaner and sweeter. No more blue Mondays for mine."

The "RICHMOND" Suds-Maker attaches to any faucet. Simply turn the faucet and you get rich, creamy suds that instantly dissolves grease and dirt. Place dishes silverware, iron cooking utensils, under, these suds for a moment, then simply rinse and wipe. Uses any kind of soap—either whole pieces or scraps. Does away with sloppy sinks, smeary soap dishes, cracked hands. Saves time, labor, health and money.

Get one for free trial from the plumber whose name appears below. Use it ten days, then if you're willing to part with it, simply return it. The trial in no way obligates you. Call to-day.

ent; that you can leave the north country and do all the things you want to do?" This time her smile was puzzling. "You don't seem very glad."

"No! Realization discounts anticipation about 90 per cent. But don't let's talk about me. I—I'm unstrung today."

"I'm sorry you aren't going back to Kaivik," he said with genuine regret.

"But I am," she declared quickly. "I'm going back with you and George if you will let me. I want to see the finish of our enterprise."

"See here, Cherry; I hope you didn't influence Hilliard in this affair."

"Why probe the matter?"

"Because I haven't lost all my manhood," he answered roughly. "Yesterday you assumed the blame for this trouble and spoke of sacrifices, and—well, I don't know much about women, but for all I know you may have some ridiculous, quixotic strain in your makeup. I hope you didn't"—

"What?"

"Well, do anything you may be sorry for." At last he detected a gleam of spirit in her eyes.

"Suppose I did What difference to you would that make?" He shifted uncomfortably under the girl's scrutiny.

"Suppose that Mr. Hilliard had called on me for some great sacrifice before he gave up that money. Would you allow it to affect you?"

"Of course," he answered. Then, unable to sit still under her searching gaze, he arose with flushed face to meet further discomfiture as she continued:

"Even if it meant your own ruin, the loss of the fortune you have raised among your friends—money that is intrusted to you—and—and the relinquishment of Miss Wayland? Honestly, now"—her voice had softened and dropped to a lower key—"would it make any difference?"

"Certainly!"

"How much difference?"

"I'm in a very embarrassing position," he said slowly. "You must realize that with others depending on me I'm not free to follow my own inclinations."

She uttered a little mocking laugh. "Pardon me. It was not a fair question, and I shouldn't have asked it, but your hesitation was sufficient answer." Then as he broke into a heated denial she went on:

"Like most men, you think a woman has but one asset upon which to trade. However, if I felt responsible for your difficulties that was my affair, and if I determined to help extricate you that also concerned me alone." He stepped forward as if to protest, but she silenced his speech with an imperious little stamp of her foot.

In spite of the cheering turn his fortunes had taken, it was in no very amiable mood that he left her at last no whit the wiser for all his questioning. In the hotel lobby below he encountered the newspaper reporter who had fallen under Fraser's spell upon their first arrival from the north. The man greeted him eagerly.

"How d' y' do, Mr. Emerson? Can you give me any news about the fisheries?"

"No."

"I thought there might be something new bearing on my story."

"Indeed! So you are the chap who wrote that article some time ago, eh?"

"Yes, sir. Good, wasn't it?"

"Doubtless, from the newspaper point of view. Where did you get it?"

"From Mr. Clyde."

CHAPTER XI.

"CLYDE! You mean Fraser—Frobisher, I should say," gasped Boyd to the reporter.

"No, sir. Alton Clyde! He was pretty talkative the night I saw him." The reporter laughed meaningly.

"Drunk, do you mean?"

"Oh, not exactly drunk, but pretty wet. He knew what he was saying, however. Can't you give me something more?"

"Nothing." Boyd hurried to his hotel, a prey to mingled anger and contrition. So Fraser had told the truth, after all, and with a kind of sullen loyalty had chosen to remain under a cloud himself rather than inform on a friend. It was quite in keeping with the fellow's peculiar temperament. As it happened, Boyd found the two men together and lost no time in acquainting them with his discovery.

"I've come to apologize to you," he said to Fraser, who grinned broadly and was seized with a sudden abashment which stilled his tongue. Emerson turned to Clyde. "Why did you permit me to do this injustice?"

"I—I didn't mean to give out any secrets—I don't remember doing it," Alton apologized lamely. "You know I can't drink much. I don't remember a thing about it, honestly." Boyd regarded him coldly, but the young man's penitence seemed so genuine, he looked so weak, so pitifully incompetent, that the other lacked heart to chastise him. It requires resistance to develop heat, and against the absence of character it is impossible to create any sort of emotion.

"When you got drunk that night you not only worked a great hardship on all of us, but afterward you allowed me to misjudge a very faithful man," declared Boyd. "If you can't keep a close mouth and do as you are told you'd better go back to Chicago."

"Don't climb any higher," admonished "Fingerless" Fraser. "He's all fluffed up now. I'll lay you 8 to 1 he don't make another break of the kind."

"No; I was so con-cussed-pletely pickled that I forgot I even spoke about the salmon canning business. I'll break my corkscrew and seal my flask, and from this moment until we come out next fall the demon rum and I are divorced. Is that good news?"

"Everything is a joke to you, isn't it?" said Boyd. "If this trip doesn't make a man of you, you'll never grow up."

As if Hilliard's conversion had marked the turning point of their luck, the partners now entered upon a period of almost uninterrupted success. Boyd signed his charter, securing a tramp steamer then discharging at Tacoma; Bait closed his contracts for Chinese labor, and the scattered carloads of material which had been lost en route or mysteriously laid out on sidings began to come in as if of their own accord.

A brigade of orientals and a miniature army of fishermen had appeared as if by magic and were quartered in the lower part of the city awaiting shipment. At the dock one throbbing April evening the Bedford Castle berthed, ready to receive her cargo, and the two men made their way toward their hotel, weary, but glowing with the grateful sense of an arduous duty well performed. The following morning would find the wharf swarming with stevedores and echoing to the rattle of trucks, the clank of hoists and the shrill whistles of the signalmen.

"Looks like they couldn't stop us now," said Bait.

"It does," agreed Emerson. "We ought to clear in four days—that'll be the 15th."

"It smells like an early spring, too," the fisherman observed, sniffing the air. "If it is we'll be in Kaivik the first week in May."

"I'm off to tell Cherry," said Boyd.

His course took him past Hilliard's bank, and when abreast of it he nearly collided with a man who came hurrying forth. In the well groomed, fiery haired, plump figured man Emerson recognized the manager of the North American Packers' association.

"Good evening, Mr Marsh."

Marsh whirled about. "Eh? Ah! Why, yes. It's Emerson."

Marsh informed Boyd of the anger of Mildred's father at his canning enterprise and also that Mildred and Mr. Wayland were to visit Kaivik on a yachting tour. Emerson was greatly amazed at this information; also he realized that Marsh had arrived on the spot because Hilliard had granted his opponents their needed loan. The men separated.

The next morning Bait rushed in on Emerson with news that the laborers loading the Bedford Castle had gone on a strike because the captain, Peasley, rightly refused a demand of $2,000 by the union.

"It's Marsh again," said Big George.

"Yes," Emerson answered; "it's a holdup pure and simple." A look of intense anxiety came into his eyes.

When Boyd returned some two hours later he found the dock deserted save for Big George, who prowled watchfully about the freight piles.

"Well, did you fix it up?" the fisherman inquired.

"No," exclaimed Boyd. "It's a rank frame-up, and I refused to be bled."

"Good for you."

"There are some things a fellow's manhood won't stand for. I'll carry that freight aboard with my own hands before I'll be robbed by a labor union at the bidding of Willis Marsh."

"Say, will you let me load this ship my way?" George asked.

"Can you do it?"

Bait's thick lips drew back from his yellow teeth in that smile which Emerson had come to recognize as a harbinger of the violent acts that rejoiced his lawless soul.

"Listen," said he, with a chuckle. "[illegible] hundred fishermen; half of them are drunk at this minute and the rest are half drunk."

"Then they are of no use to us."

"I don't reckon you ever seen a herd of Kaivik fishermen out of a job, did you? Well, there's just two things they know, fishing and fighting, and this ain't the fishing season. When they hit Seattle the police force goes up into the residence section and stuffs cotton in its ears, because the only thing that is strong enough to stand between a uniform and a fisherman is a hill."

"Can you induce them to work?"

"I can. All I'm afraid of is that I can't induce them to quit. They're liable to put his freight aboard the Bedford Castle and then pull down the dock in a spirit of playfulness and pile it in Captain Peasley's cabin. There ain't no convulsion of nature that's equal to a gang of idle fishermen."

"When can they begin?"

"Well, it will take me all night to round them up, and I'll have to lick four or five, but there ought to be a dozen or two on hand in the morning." George cast a roving eye over the warehouse from the heavy planking underfoot to the wide spanning rafters above. "Yes," he concluded, "I don't see nothing breakable, so I guess it's safe."

"Would you like me to go with you?"

The giant considered him speculatively. "I don't think so. I ain't never seen you in action. No, you better stay here and arrange to guard this stuff till morning. I'll do the rest."

The following morning, true to his word, the big fellow marched into the warehouse followed by a score or more of burly fishermen.

Bait bore signs of strife. The big man's lips were cut, while back of one ear a knot had sprung up overnight like a fungus.

They fell to work quickly, stripping themselves to their undershirts; they foamed the hoists, seized trucks and bale hooks and began their tasks with a thoroughly methodical energy. Some of them were still so drunk that they staggered, their awkwardness affording huge sport to their companions, yet even in their intoxication they were surprisingly capable. George sought out Boyd and proudly inquired:

"What do you think of them, eh?"

"They are splendid. But where are the others?"

"Well, there are two or three that won't be able to get around at all." He meditatively stroked the knuckles of his right hand, which were badly bruised. "But the balance will be here tomorrow. These are just the mildest mannered ones—the family men, you might say. The others will show up gradual."

The work had not continued many hours before a stranger made his way in upon the dock and began to argue with the first fisherman he met. Boyd, approaching him, demanded:

"What do you want?"

"Nothing," said the newcomer.

"Then get out."

"What for? I'm just talking to this man."

"Will you go?"

"Say, you can't load that cargo this way," the man began threateningly. "And you can't make me go"—

At which Emerson seized him by the collar and quickly disproved the assertion, to the great delight of the fishermen. He thrust him out into the street.

"I'm a union man, and you can't load that ship with 'scabs.'" The stranger swore as he slunk off.

The first actual violence, however, occurred when the fishermen knocked off for the noon hour. Boyd called up the police department, then summoned Big George. It was with considerable difficulty that the nonunion crew fought its way back to resume work at 1 o'clock.

During the afternoon the strikers made several attempts to enter the dock shed, and it required a firm stand by the guards to restrain them.

The next morning found the nonunion men out in such force that they were divided into a night and a day crew, half of them being sent back to report later, while among the mountains of freight the work went forward faster than ever. But in time the city awoke to the realization that a serious conflict was in progress. The handful of fishermen, outnumbered twenty to one and guarded only by a thin line of pickets, became a center of general interest.

It was on the fourth day that Boyd espied the man in the gray suit among the strikers and pointed him out to his three companions, Clyde and Fraser having joined him and George in a spirit of curiosity.

Late in the afternoon, without a moment's warning, the strikers rushed in a body, bearing down the guards like reeds.

Emerson and his companions found themselves carried away before the onslaught, like chips in the surf, then sucked into a maelstrom where the first duty was self preservation. Boyd succeeded in keeping his footing and eventually fought his way to a backing of crated machinery, where he stooped and ripped a cleat loose. Then, laying about him with this weapon, he cleared a space.

At the first alarm the fishermen had armed themselves with bale hooks and bludgeons and for a time worked havoc among their assailants.

Seeing Clyde in a helpless condition, Emerson shouted:

"Come on; I'll help you aboard the ship." He found a hardwood club beneath his feet and with it cleared a pathway for Clyde and himself. He suddenly spied the man in the gray suit, who had climbed upon one of the freight piles, whence he was scanning the crowd. The man recognized Emerson and pointed him out. The next instant Boyd saw him approaching, followed by several others. Then, though Boyd fell back farther, the others rushed in and he found himself hard beset. What happened thereafter neither he nor Alton Clyde, who was half dazed to begin with, ever clearly remembered.

How to Make Your Skin Rosy.

The girl who is persistently pale in spite of dieting and exercise will find a pleasant way of making her skin rosy by the following simple method: Dip the finger tips into warm honey, massage this well into the face, massaging the lips also, but gently; wipe off the sticky feeling with a clean damp cloth and dash cold salt and water, a teaspoonful of salt to a pint of water, over the face for ten minutes, then dry well. This acts as a tonic to the skin, giving it color and freshness. The skin, however, should be well protected from cold winds immediately after such a bath.

Fred A. Diggins, as administrator of the estate of the late Wellington W. Cranmer, has paid $9,503.62, the inheritance tax due the state from the Cranmer estate. That sum is the largest ever paid in Wexford county as an inheritance tax.

Following the clamping down of the lid on the saloons at Traverse City, Mayor Wilhelm has instructed the police to have all slot machines in cigar stores and saloons removed forthwith. Slot machines have been running during the last year extensively in spite of an ordinance prohibiting them. Now the mayor proposes to enforce the ordinance to the letter.

Michigan has lost its former rank as a wheat state. It does not produce enough for the consumption of its own people. Its old-time annual yield of 35,000,000 bushels have shrunk to one-third of that quantity, or even less in some years. This has come about from the exhaustion of the wheat producing properties of the soil, namely the nitrogen and the clearing off of so large a proportion of the protective forests. Of course there are farmers who raise wheat to sell, but if shipped out of the state the product of other states has to be shipped in, usually in the form of flour, to supply the demand.

The proposition of giving the upper peninsula 2-cent fares will be pressed with vigor at the session of the state legislature the coming winter. It is one of the planks of the platforms on which a number of the north country representatives recently have been elected. Just why the railroads should be permitted to charge higher passenger fares in the upper peninsula than in the territory below the straits is not readily seen, and naturally the idea of putting the two portions of the state on an equality in this connection is popular with the upper Michigan people. Both Representatives-elect Symonds of Menominee county and Knight of Dickinson county are committed to the proposition, and it has the support of others of the north country delegation. An effort will also be made to obtain the freight rates in force in the lower peninsula, the upper part of the state being discriminated against in this particular also.

The students' short course, which runs from November 28 to the last of March, opens up within a short time at the Menominee County Agricultural school. This course is for the accommodation of the students who are unable to start the first of the year on account of the great amount of work to be done on the farms. By the aid of these short courses boys who are forced to work on the farms as long as there is warm weather are enabled to attend school when it is impossible to do work at home. As a usual thing, many farmers take advantage of this offer, and are to be found at work in the school during the short course. The work in this course will be largely along practical lines, but those students who are prepared can also take an amount of academic work in addition to the regular work in that course.

The deal that has been pending for sometime past, whereby the Escanaba Lumber company purchases that portion of the Manistique Railway from Seney south to Wilman, together with two locomotives, one coach, way-car, twenty flats and four box cars, machine and car shops and all equipment between the two points named has been closed and the new owners have taken possession of the property. Little if anything will be done with it this winter. The Escanaba Lumber company will connect the newly purchased link of railway with their logging road, which now runs north from Pine Lake on the Soo Line to within a few miles of the Manistique railway near Germfask. It is said that eventually they will build through to Masonville, where they operate mills, thus enabling them to handle their logs direct from the stump to the mill, instead of over a foreign line, as is the case now. The machine and car shops will be moved from Grand Marais to Cutler, which it is said will be the present headquarters for the road. Superintendent Green, Train-Dispatcher O'Connor, Mechanic Cut Smith, Passenger Conductor Williams and many other employes of the Manistique Railway will go with the Escanaba Lumber company when they begin operations. Superintendent Green will look after the property in Grand Marais during the present winter. The closing up of the deal leaves the Manistique Lumber company; the recent purchasers of the Manistique Railway, the possessors of the track between Seney and Grand Marais and locomotive No. 1. It is believed that this portion of the road will be taken up and sold for junk. However, this will not be done before next spring, and residents are hoping against hope that something may turn up whereby the road may again be operated. The sale to the Escanaba Lumber company has made the outlook less promising than ever, insofar as future rail facilities are concerned.

Rubber Questions Answered.

No article in general use during at least six months of each year is so little understood as is rubber.

The process of getting out the crude rubber is most primitive and the work is performed by the half wild natives who penetrate the rubber forests of tropical South America and Africa. The crude rubber is extracted from the trees much as maple sap is secured and moulded into large biscuits by dipping a paddle into the rubber sap and holding it over a smoking fire until it congeals or hardens. The crude rubber as it comes from the forest factories often full of sticks or dirt that must be extracted by a complex and expensive method of grinding, washing and refining before it is ready for commercial uses.

All rubbers are made by a hand process—that is, the rubber is run into sheets by powerful calendaring machines that press the special markings and corrugations into the parts which form the soles, but the essential work of fitting the rubber together is performed entirely by hand, the parts composing a rubber made up of small strips, are fitted over a form (the shape of a shoe) after rubber cement has been applied and are made fast much as you would seal a letter by moistening the mucilage. After a rubber is formed it is then subjected to several interesting processes such as finishing, vulcanizing (toughening), seasoning and inspection, and a rubber to pass as a first grade rubber must be perfect in every detail before it is forwarded to the packing room for shipment to the retailer.

Year by year the increasing demand for rubber products, automobile tires, hose, toilet articles, etc., has made it increasingly difficult to secure the rubber, the price of the crude rubber at Para has gone up steadily over the bidding of a world-wide market, but the advancing price of crude rubber has had less effect on the price of rubber footwear than on any other articles made of rubber.

The farmer or sporting man who buys a pair of boots, gets almost as much pure gum rubber in his boots as go into the making of an auto tire and at about one-tenth the cost.

A rubber strong enough to withstand severe service would be so heavy and clumsy that the American lady would refuse to wear it, and because her rubbers are light weight, notwithstanding the fact that only the finest grade of rubber is used in making her rubbers, the advance in the prices has been the smallest on her stormrubbers or sandals.

Down to date there is but one method that provides absolute damp-proof protection for the feet—the wearing of rubber boots or a rubber for covering the shoes—and until some genius discovers a material that supplants the article now in use, because of its superiority in some respect, it is wise economy to insist on securing the best that the market affords, Bear Brand Wales Goodyear Rubbers, the standard for quality in American rubber footwear. They are made by a firm that have steadily resisted every attempt to introduce the use of inferior substitutes for pure gum rubber.

NEW COINS FOR CANADA.

Silver Dollar and Five Dollar Gold Piece Among Them.

Never in the history of Canada has there been a silver piece larger than a half dollar. Never has there been any gold coin.

But Canada is to have two new mediums of exchange in the near future. Heretofore the fifty cent piece has been the largest silver coin. Now a silver dollar much like the American dollar in bullion value and size is being coined; also a five dollar gold piece after the standard of the United States. This is an improvement on the English gold five dollar coin, which standard is fractionally less in intrinsic value.

Up to the present time the only gold money used in Canada has been American. The five dollar American gold piece has been used at full value. The new Canadian five dollar gold piece will no doubt be used at its full value in the United States.

LOOK for the Wooltex label--then all you have to do is to choose your color and styles.

We alone sell Wooltex garments in Charlevoix. We chose them because we know they are of the high quality that we like to offer to our customers.

The label is an absolute guarantee of correct style, pure wool or silk materials and the best grade of tailoring.

That is true of all Wooltex garments. In this coat pictured, there is an added note of individual grace and charm.

In fine silky broadcloth, it is dressy enough for any occasion.

The reasonable price, $20.00, is an added attraction. We are showing other styles from $10 to $30.

The Thanksgiving number of the Christian Science Monitor consisted of ninety-six pages and was probably, considering the high class reading matter and advertisements, the best daily paper ever published.

The authorities at Washington reports that in Michigan the average yield of corn was 32.4 bushels per acre, and the production 65,318,000 bushels. The average yield of potatoes for the state was 104 bushels, and the total production 34,424,000 bushels.

George Glados and Miss Mande Williams of this city, were married at Traverse City, Monday, November 21. Both are well known in this city, Mr. Glados being one of our most popular business men. They arrived home Monday night and are receiving the congratulations of a host of friends.

George W. Priest received word Monday morning of the death of his father, Henry Priest at the home of his daughter in Harbor Springs. Mr. Priest was eighty-five years old and leaves nine children, two sons and seven daughters. Mr. Priest left for Harbor Springs Monday night. He expects to be back Thursday.

We have received a copy of the Western Michigan booklet for this season. It is much superior to the book issued last year and is full of information in regard to the twenty counties in the bureau. The book is well illustrated with pictures taken in different parts of Western Michigan territory. One hundred and fifty copies will be distributed throughout the country.

One of the features of the Farm Products Exposition to be held at Traverse City December 13 to 17 will be a showing of fruit picking and packing outfits. This display is being arranged by Frank Smith, a Grand Traverse farmer who is making a success of fruit raising. The exhibit will be largely of an educational nature as it will show what should be done by the fruit man if he desires to get his products from the trees to the markets so as to bring him the largest cash returns.

The organized Gleaner farmers of this state have adopted for their slogan: "More Pay or No Beets;" and they are going into the campaign in earnest. Meetings are being held in all counties where sugar beets are raised, and it is said that the Holland Company has already raised the price to $5.25 per ton for twelve per cent beets and 40 cents cents for each percentage above. We have not looked into the merits of this demand on the part of the farmers, but those interested can get the farmers' idea of the question by reading the advertisement in this issue.

How to Clean a Wool Sweater.

To clean a wool sweater prepare a tub of water which shall be just pleasantly warm to the hand—tepid or lukewarm. Pour into it some unelted soap, working the water up with the hand until it forms a good lather. Knead and punch the sweater well, but do not rub it. Rubbing will flatten all the soft, woolly surface of the material and make it hard. If very soiled the sweater may need two soap lathers to clean it.—When clean wring it lightly and shake well to remove water and raise soft fiber. Hang at once outdoors, if fine and breezy; but, if not, hang in front of but not too near a fire and dry quickly to prevent shrinking. Pull into shape while drying.

How to Remove Grease Spots.

To remove grease spots from wall paper sprinkle baking soda over blotting paper and place over the spot and press with a moderately warm iron for a few minutes. The blotting paper will absorb the grease and the paper on the wall will be free from spots. To clean silk and woolen clothes of grease spots they may be gently rubbed with a cake of magnesia laid away for several days and then shaken out. It will not hurt to press the magnesia in with a hot iron first covering the fabric with brown paper.

Courier Grange Column

Harmony Grange No. 1451.

Harmony Grange held another very successful meeting on Tuesday evening, November 22, at the Pleasant Valley school house. One member was obligated in the third and fourth degrees; action taken towards incorporation and towards taking advantage of our trade contracts. The Woman's Work committee announced their next meeting for Wednesday, November 30, with Sister Myrtle Willson. Worthy Master J. A. Newville reported that he attended a very successful meeting of the Pomona Grange and also a meeting of Ironton's Bay Grange both of which were well attended and enthusiastic. Our next meeting will be held on the Saturday evening before the regular time of meeting as at least three of our members expect to be in attendance at the state grange at Traverse City at the time we usually hold our meeting. Election of officers for the ensuing year will take place at the next meeting.

Business being disposed of the members listened to a very good program of music, instrumental and vocal, reading, recitations and three members talked on the subject of "Why I am a Farmer," making altogether a very complete program. Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Willson who were given charge of the program for this meeting by the worthy lecturer were much pleased at the manner in which they responded and feel that the success of the grange is assured so long as each member is willing to do his part.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular form, November 22, 1910, with thirty-two members and one visitor from Manistee county.

After regular order of business the grange was turned over to the lecturer.

Lecturer's program consisted of recitations, stories, songs and speeches. The visitor from Manistee gave a very interesting talk on what their grange was doing. She also told the young members of Ironton Grange to help and take more part in the lecturer's program as it would help them as well as others.

For the good of the order one of the ladies reported that on Tuesday, November 29, they would give a program and then auctioneer off aprons, holders and fancy work, and serve a chicken pie supper.

The captains of the hunting supper said they postponed the hunting match until nearer Christmas.

The grange was then closed in regular form to meet again in two weeks.

SHOCKING HUNTING ACCIDENT

Old Subscriber Writes of Fatal Mistake in Chippewa County.

Camp Independence,
Dell, Chippewa County, Michigan

To the Editor of the COURIER:

I take the privilege of an old subscriber to send an item for publication. We came up here about the first of November to keep boarding camp and here we are four miles from any inhabitants and in the midst of the hunters' region. There has been a lot of deer killed around here and two bear that we know of.

An awful accident happened about five miles from here, Will and True Smith, cousins, with some other friends wounded a deer and drove him to a thicket of underbrush. After a few moments, True said "I see our deer", and fired. When they went to the place they found his cousin shot. True went frantic and said he would shoot himself. His companions tried to take his gun away but he lurched away from them and run about two miles and blew the top of his head off. He was still breathing when his companions came up.

State Treasury Low Again.

By the end of this year there will be a deficit in the state treasury of from $500,000 to $750,000, according to State Treasurer Sleeper. For general purposes only $37,000 is available at the present time and the money on hand is being held for for the purpose of paying salaries. The state's obligations to its institutions remains unsatisfied.

According to Treasurer Sleeper the state can borrow $250,000, but he considers this only a drop in the bucket and says the tension only will be relieved when the taxes begin to come in. He predicts that the same condition will prevail at this time next year and that it may even be worse.

Literary Notes

The American Family

"Doctor Parkhurst went abroad last summer as usual to inspect the people of the other nations," says Edward Sandford Martin in Woman's Home Companion for December. "When he came home he said it was easy to tell them all at sight. Italians, Irishmen, Freuchmen, Germans—an eye, he thought, did not need to be very carefully trained to identify any of them. 'And as for the native-born, full-blooded American,' he said, 'there is no human creature anywhere on earth that is like him or, as I should say, that is the equal of him.' It is certainly true that the American of the United States has come to have a distinct national identity. I hope Doctor Parkhurst's opinion of his superior quality is also true. There are reasons why it ought to be—reasons connected with breadth of opportunity and relief from various inherited handicaps that effect all of Europe.

"But the greatest of all agencies to make it true and keep it true is the American family. Out of the family comes government; out of the family comes education, and all the magnificent apparatus for spreading and bettering it. The indispensable product of a country that would be great is neither gold nor iron, copper, cotton nor corn, but effectual men and woman, who know what is worth trying for and are fit to attain it. And this indispensable product is a family product. Only as families exist and are worthy can it be forthcoming. We see and are impressed by enormous mills, astonishing city structures, tremendous examples of the power of the minds and hands of men, but these things are no more than the passing fruit of the trees whose roots are in the family. These things do not make men. Education itself does not make men. The family makes men; and given men of the right quality in the right place and time, all these other things will be added unto them."

$8.00 Per ton ..for.. Sugar Beets

The Sugar Companies could have paid farmers Eight Dollars per ton for their beets, had they been satisfied with reasonable profits. LISTEN:

ON October 28th the Michigan Sugar Company declared a stock dividend on Common stock of 35 per cent. This in addition to the regular quarterly dividends.

THE St. Louis Sugar Co. has paid stock dividends amounting to 62 per cent and is now paying an annual dividend to stockholders of 15 per cent.

THE Holland Sugar Co. has paid stock dividends amounting to 39 per cent and annual dividends of 11 per cent.

And the Farmers Get the Same Old Price

The organized Gleaner farmers want "MORE PAY OR NO BEETS." The cost of living is higher, the cost of labor is higher, and sugar is higher.

WILL YOU STAND BY YOUR BROTHERS?

SENDS MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

President Taft Makes Important Recomendations

WOULD RESTRICT FRANKING PRIVILEGE

Favors Parcels Post on Rural Delivery Rontes

Urges General Conservation Legislation—Would Restrict Legislation Against Corporations Until Present Laws are Tried Out.

The following are the main features in President Taft's message:

The unrestricted manner in which the franking privilege is now being used by the several federal services and by congress has laid it open to serious abuses.

If we are furnishing to the owners of magazines services worth millions more than they pay for it then justice requires that the rate should be increased.

With respect to the parcels post system, I recommend that its adoption on all rural delivery rontes and that 11 pounds—the international limit—be made the limit of carriage.

I recommend fitting recognition by congress for the great achievement of Robert E. Peary.

The secretary of the interior thinks there are difficulties in the way of leasing public coal lands. . . . . After a full consideration I favor a leasing system and recommend it.

The coal deposits of the government should be leased for terms not exceeding fifty years.

Power sites should be leased by the federal government for not exceeding fifty years upon a proper rental with suitable provisions against assignment to prevent monopolistic combinations.

I earnestly urge upon congress that general conservation legislation be adopted. . . . . I have exercised the full power of withdrawal with the hope that the action of congress would follow promptly and prevent the tying up of resources of the country in the western and less settled portions of Alaska, which means stagnation and retrogression.

Proper protection against fires in the forests necessitates the expenditure of a good deal of money in the development of roads and trails and the establishmeat of lookont stations and telephone connections between them.

The investigation made by the commissioner of corporations into the timber situation shows there is extensive ownership of stock as well as other circumstances which might lead to a combination for the maiotenaunce of a price that would be detrimental to the public interest.

I recommend that the present eight-hour law for government employes be enlarged by providing that public works shall be construed to include uot only public buildings and work upon public ground, but also ships, armor and large guns when manufactured in private yards or factories.

I renew my recommeudation for the creation of a bnreau of health.

The increase in the annual expenditures of the federal government has been so rapid and so great that the time has come to check the expansiou of government activities in new directions.

There has not been time to test the benefit and utility of the amendments to the interstate commerce law contained in the act approved Jaunary 18, 1910.

It seems to me that the existing legislation with reference to the regulation of corporations and the restraint of their business has reached a point where we can stop for a while and witness the effect of the vigorous execution of the laws on the statute books.

The conferences between representatives of the United States and Canadian governments have been adjourned to be resumed in Washington in January, when it is hoped that the aspiration of both governments for a mutually advantageous measure of reciprocity will be realized.

The halt in business and the shock to business, due to the announcement that a new tariff bill is to be prepared and put in operation, will be avoided by framing the schedules one by one by a commission composed of men of long training and accurate knowledge. It is not likely the board will be able to make a report of any schedules during the present session of congress. The carrying out of this plan involves the full co-operation of congress.

I strongly favor fortification of the Panama canal. My own impression is that the tolls for using the canal should not exceed one dollar per net ton.

Business on Great Lakes.

Commercial movements on the Great Lakes during October, as measured by the volume of shipments between domestic lake ports, reported to the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor, totaled 10,649,287 short tons, compared with 12,018,212 short tons shipped during October, 1909.

Owing to the earlier start in lake navigation during the present season and the heavier shipments during the earlier summer months, the season record for the ten months of 78,844,640 short tons shipped, exceeds by far the corresponding 1909 figures of 69,978,365 short tons, as well as the earlier record figures for 1907 of 73,113,000 short tons. If the shipments of the coming two months reach a total of only 8,000,000 tons, as against 11,900,000 tons shipped during the corresponding period last year, the total shipments for the season will be in the neighborhood of 87,000,000 tons, or about 3,500,000 tons in excess of the 1907 record total.

COST OF LIVING.

Has Directed Attentinn to Tax on Oleomargarine

Which is Simply Legislation in the Interest of Pure Food.

The discussion given to the subject of cost of living has directed more or less attention to the federal oleomargarine tax and the price of butter. People who are in favor of repealing the present oleomargarine law have taken advantage of the situation to loudly condemn as "undemocratic and un-American" this "burdensome tax on a pure, wholesome and nutritious food product".

They conveniently forget to explain that over 97 per cent of the oleomargarine put upon the market is taxed at only one-fourth cent per pound. They do not explain that only that oleomargarine that is artificially colored is taxed at ten cents per pound.

Even if it all were taxed at ten cents per pound it would have absolutely nothing to do with the price of butter after the latter reaches thirty cents a pound retail. It costs about fourteen cents a pound to produce the very best grade of oleomargarine. Add to this a ten cent tax and the cost of production would be twenty-four cents. The production could be retailed at thirty cents at a handsome profit to manufacturer and retailer.

Looking at the question from any view point it is clearly seen that the oleomargarine law has absolutely nothing to do with the price of butter.

The dairy interests of the country are not enjoying any benefit through oleomargarine legislation except as the integrity of the industry is maintained. In this every honest citizen should feel a keen interest. He should understand that the effort put forth by the manufacturers of oleomargarine to secure legislation which will make it easy for men to commit fraud in selling oleomargarine is not inspired by love of the "poor man who wants a cheap substitute for butter."

The whole proposition may be thus summed up: oleomargarine is now made to taste and smell something like butter. The manufacturers and a few retail dealers want the privilege of puting it upon the market so that it will look like butter, thus making it easy to commit fraud.

Every good citizen should be interested in effective pure food legislation and the oleomargarine law is just such legislation, no more nor less.

WHAT VAN PELT SAW AT LAND SHOW

Michigan Came in For Full Share of Glory

ROWE AND PAYTON WERE MISSED

Ford Robbins was Right on Deck for Charlevoix

Michigan Day was Great—Twenty-thousand Boosters Were Present Booming the State.

The Fruit and Land Show was a howling success, and as usual, Michigan came in for its full share of glory, and I feel that we people who live along the shore line of Michigan, beginning in the vicinity of Traverse City, and so on up to the straits of Mackinaw, are particularly blessed, and that we can most truly say that we are IT, and that our fruit has better flavor than any grown elsewhere in the United States, not excepting that grown in the western part of New York State.

It seemed to me, however, that we—I mean the extreme northern countries, Grand Traverse, Leelanau, Antrim, Emmet and Charlevoix—did not get a fair show, because of the fact that several men representing real estate farms south of us monopolized the attention of many visitors to the booth of the Western Michigan Bureau, ignoring the claims of our northern counties.

Everyone who knows Western Michigan knows, or ought to know, that when it come to good fruit land, and land for diversified farming, that there is no better land, if as good, in our state than we have in Charlevoix county, and as proof, I refer to the fact that Mr. Taft of the Michigan Agricultural college, at Lansing has selected this county as his home, and bought a large farm on Pine Lake. He might have done better had he bought on Lake Michigan, near Norwood, but we will forgive him that, and welcome him to the county.

The fact that he has made Charlevoix county his home will have its influence on others. We missed the familiar faces of Messrs. Rowe and Payton, but our new secretary, Mr. John I. Gibson, represented us in a fine way, and gave the northern counties a fair and honest representation. Our own Ford Robbins was always at the bat. He landed his side winders and left handers in fine shape, and to those who met and conversed with him, he gave a strong and favorable account of our county.

Michigan day was great. It was estimated that fully twenty thousand boosters were there. The song, "Michigan, my Michigan" was distributed among the crowd, and whenever the band struck up the the air, the entire crowd joined in the singing.

DEATH'S TOLL IS 45

Forty-five Hurt and Nineteen Killed

Casualties and Injuries Said To Be Greater Than Any Previous Year.

During the deer hunting season which opened November 10 and which closed December 1, forty-five hunting accidents have occurred, of which nineteen were fatal or have resulted fatally. More deaths are expected as a number are believed to be fatally wounded

Practically all of the accidents were due to carelessness due principally to the efforts of persons unaccustomed to the use of firearms to hunt for the fleet-footed animals which inhabit the forests of the northern peninsula.

In four cases in which hunters have been mortally wounded in the woods, having been mistaken for a deer by others, they have been left to die where they fell, the parties who did the shooting preferring to let them thus die instead of revealing their identity.

Of all the accidents twenty-eight were due to the hunter being mistaken for a deer. Nine of these were fatal, while some of the others will die. One Houghton man was mistaken for a bear and was killed by his friend.

Another hunter was killed by a woman who mistook him for game. Two women were also injured by the accidental discharge of firearms. Tetanus caused two deaths, the prime cause of which were gunshot wounds.

More deer and more hunters were killed this year in northern Michigan than in any year since the slaughter of deer began. It is estimated that 5,000 deer have been killed and that 20,000 hunters engaged in the chase.

The following are the names of those who have met death:

Joe Goulah of Standish, Rodney Stage, Menominee; Lawrence English, Vanderbilt; William Hughes, Mellen; Walter Danielson, aged eight years, Hermansville; Peter Thieg, Cheboygan; George Ganser, Grand Rapids, died of gangrene; True Smith, killed himself after shooting his cousin, Daniel Smith, aged 15, near Soo; Lawrence Williams, Pembine; John Richardson, Bessemer, drowned; Joseph Weigle, killed by thirteen-year-old son near Soo; William Oman's little girl of Point killed by Annette Clements, school teacher; William Pantow, Menominee, killed by mistake for wildcat; Eli Peltola, Crystal Falls; John Headman, Pequaming; John Gap, Crystal Falls; Alphonsee Thier, Peisonville; John Carlson, Houghton county, mistaken for bear.

MICHIGAN HIS CHOICE

Returns to This State After Trying the West

Former Resident Prefers Western Michigan for Fruit Raising.

D. D. Hood has arrived in Traverse City last week from Araphoe county, Colorado, where he was interested in fruit growing.

Four years ago Mr. Hood was a fruit grower near Manistique, upper Michigan, but was induced to go west and try his luck. He bought ten acres in Arapahoe county at $250 an acre and bargained for water for irrigation at the rate of $1.75 an acre, a year. He then spent $800 in setting out cherry and plum trees, only to have two hard hail storms come and practically destroy the trees.

In speaking of the irrigation proposition he said that water was available but one day out of the week and it failed to come on those days when the reservoir was empty. He made money growing fruit before going to Colorado and is going to buy a fruit farm in western Michigan and make money in years to come.

In comparing Michigan with Colorado he said that alfalfa was supposed to grow well in the western state, but that he knows an alfalfa fields in western Michigan that beat those in Colorado. He proposes to specialize on cherries and apples in the future, taking a small acreage and applying intensive methods

PLANS BEAUTIFUL HOME

Former Charlevoix Citizen Well Located in the West

The following item from the Los Angeles Times of November 27, will interest the many friends of Don Jerrne, who is well and favorably known in this city:

"Fred C. Short has sold a twenty-four acre place on Mission road at the junction of the Pasadena Short Line to D. Jerrne. The consideration is reported to be $21,000. This piece of acreage will be improved at once by Mr. Jerrne for a home. Landscape gardeners have been employed to make this one of the show places on Huntington drive. There are a great many beautiful trees on the place, and the new owner will spend about $25,000 in improvements.

W. C. T. U. Meeting.

The W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. B. F. Wilkinson, Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. After devotionals by Mrs. H. A. Putnam and the business is gone, there will be given "Conventions' Echoes" from the late national meeting which was held in Baltimore. There will also be music and recitations. Everybody is welcome, especially every member is urged to attend.

NELLIE PECK SAUNDERS

First Number of This Season's Lecture Course

Will be Given Wednesday Evening, December 14 at the Opera House.

The first number of the Citizens Lecture course will be given next Wednesday evening at the opera house. The Nellie Peck Saunders company being the opening attraction. For years Mrs. Saunders has borne the reputation of being one of the really great readers and impersonators of the country. She is without a superior in her line of work. Mrs. Saunders has so cultivated her art until she is able to make you forget she is impersonating another and think of her as the real character she potrays. Possessed of magnetism, a strong mind, a wide imagination, she is sure to be appreciated by all lovers of good litrature.

The other members of the company are artists of high order and a program of great variety will be given, including baritone, soprano, and piano solos, pinaologues, duets by baritone and soprano, readings and impersonations, including the new art form readings with musical accompaniment and some delightful artistic and high class playlets rendered by Mrs. Saunders nd Mr. Bertoli.

"Nellie Peck Saunders appeared for the first time in Passadena last evening at the fifth number in the Star Course given by the Y. M. C. A. Unusually attractive in appearance and possessing a charmingly vivacious personality, Mrs. Saunders was evidently "born to be what she is," and having fanned the spark of genius that was her birthright into an irresistible flame, she now stands without a peer as a reader and impersonator. With a perfectly modulated voice and unequalled dramatic art Mrs. Saunders imbues her selections with realism and pathos, swaying her audience at will and transforming her severest critics into ardent admirers.—Eaton T. Sauss, General Secy. Y. M. C. A., Pasadena, Cal.

The Concert last evening was successful in every detail. Miss Marie Barney outdid herself in her rendition of piano solos, vocal solos and pianologues. She is indeed a most clever and versatile artist. Her grace of manner adds much to the effectiveness of her work.—The State Republican, Lansing, Mich."

Single admission tickets including reserved seats, will be sold at fifty cents. Reserved seat sale begins at Chapel's at 7 p m Tuesday December 13.

BAXTER POST NO MORE

After an Existence of Over Twenty-six Years

OLD SOLDIERS ARE RAPIDLY PASSING

Ten of Twenty-seven Charter Members Still Living.

Old Soldiers and Sailors Association of Charlevoix County Takes Its Place for Soldiers and Families.

Baxter Post G. A. R. No. 119 was organized March 28, 1883, with twenty seven charter members.

One hundred and forty-two soldiers have joined the organization, from fifteen different states, representing eighty-seven regiments of infantry, twenty-two regiments of cavalry, and thirteen regiments of artillery. There were ten from the navy, five sharp shooters and three from the regular army.

Of the charter members ten are known to be now living, seven of whom are still residing in Charlevoix county. Of the present membership, ten reside in the city of Charlevoix, three of whom make their winter residence elsewhere and some, owing to infirmities, are unable to attend the meetings of the post.

Owing to these conditions and the difficulty to assemble a quorum to transact business, a resolution was passed, unanimously to disband the post.

In accordance therewith the charter has been surrendered and the soldiers cemetery has, by request, been turned over to the Woman's Relief Corps. There is not a member of the post who does not regret the necessity of this action, but they all recognize and bow to the inevitable. However, the mutual feeling of respect and confidence that obtains no where so deep and lasting, incidental to the sharing of mutual hardship and dangers of the battle field, still pervades their diminishing numbers. A more elastic, and, as is believed, one better adapted to present conditions, has taken the place of the old organization. This is called, the Old Soldiers and Sailors Association of Charlevoix county, in which the soldiers of any of our wars and their widows, sons and daughters are elligible to membership.

Constitution and bylaws have been formulated and adopted and so long as two remain for duty, the old guards will remain at their post. They have laid aside the cumbrous insignia of the G. A. R. and have prepared for lighter action with diminished numbers with the same associations and under the old flag. How long this later organization may be perpetuated, cannot be definitely known. In ever increasing ratio, the old guard is passing beyond our boundaries and enrolling with their final Commander, under the great white banner of eternal peace.

There will always be a quorum at the cemetery on the hill.

"On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread;
And glory guards with solem rounds
The bivouac of the dead."

CORRESPONDENCE

HORTON'S BAY

Mr. F. W. Dilworth made a shipment of beans to Chicago, last Tuesday, for Saulow & Deitmeyer.

Fresh eggs which have been so scarce for some time are again coming into market which sounds hopeful.

Everybody seems to be enjoying the sleighing, after enduring so much mud, or at least is making good use of it.

Several Boyne City men passed through Horton's Bay enroute for Charlevoix, this week, presumably to attend circuit court.

Hartley White is hauling his supply of winter wood this week. Ed. and Andy Wetherd and James Barkley also delivered some.

Charles Friend completed his season with Velau Kahler last Wednesday, November 23, and is at the home of his parents at present.

F. W. Dilworth was in Bay Shore on Thursday for the purpose of closing his potato business there, having loaded a car at that place.

The new chapel organ for the Methodist church has been ordered and is expected soon which we hope may be an incentive to more choir practice.

Ye reporter, made a business trip to Boyne City last Friday and found the sleighing more than fair and with a little more snow, travel, would be excellent.

Several of our citizens are reported as "gripites" among which the following are noticeably ailing: Mr. L. S. Call, Charles Friend, Mrs. Mary West and Mrs. Dilworth while Mrs. Call is still troubled with a "bad heart."

Gilbert Farmer recently purchased the forty acres of land between Charles Farmer's and L. S. Call's and bordering on Horton creek and will take off some of the timber, furnishing employment for some of the men who need it.

A good many of our citizens who were expecting the corn shredders this year had their corn left in the field, the snow having come on so suddenly after such constantly rainy season, left no season open suitable for shredding.

Frank Leist made his return trip with the threshing machine last Thursday, Nov. 22, and laid the same up for the winter, having closed the season's work. This has been an unusually lengthy season, the enterprise having commenced in July.

W. H. Hansen of Milwaukee made a business trip to our town last Thursday to make a final settlement on his potato deal at this place. This makes a second boat load that he bought here this year. Mr. Hansen is well known in this vicinity, having dealt with our people several years.

Frank Fox who contracted to take off the timber on the Conrad Voelker place, began the work about two weeks ago. Several of our Horton's Bay men availed themselves of a winter's job with him. These odd enterprises which seem to turn up from somewhere each year are a benefit to many who need employment and get it so near at home.

The Thanksgiving dinner that was served by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Evangelical church, at the spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Hartley White, proved to be a success socially and financially, although the weather was inclement. These ladies never do things by halves and certainly not when it comes to getting up a dinner as this was sumptious both in variety and cooking.

Three Christmas entertainments are planned for Horton's Bay for this year. The first will be given by the day school pupils at the school house on Friday night the second by the Methodist Sunday school on Saturday night and and the third and last by the Evangelical Sunday school on Sunday evening at the Evangelical church. Do you suppose that Santa Claus may appreciate what good people we are.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist church met at the home of Mrs. Fred Sneathen and Mrs. Arthur Sneathen last Thursday afternoon, on the Charlevoix road. A good attendance was present considering the condition of the weather and the roads and the distance that some had to go. At the suggestion of the president, Mrs. A. A. Stevens, the society adopted a "Ways and Means" committee, to be alert for opportunities to benefit the society either financially or by entertainment. Mrs. Dilworth was chosen as chairman with Mrs. Arthur Sneathen, Mrs. Floyd Bartholomew, Mrs. Arthur Van Amburg and Miss Fannie A. Bewell as helpers. This society which was organized about sixteen years ago has been in almost unbroken service and has been of much benefit to the church both socially and financially and proves what a compact of ladies of a community can accomplish.

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 52 years' experience in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, regain your strength and vigor.

So great was my sympathy for weak men in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and formulated two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as strong and vigorous as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering mankind. I realize that my time is short, but will do as much as in my power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief. In my practice there has been a great many disappointed men who thought relief impossible, but when they thought relief impossible, let me send you my free prescription and booklet of private lectures to show you the result of study since I began my experimental classes, way back in '57. In that time I have cured many cases that were pronounced by other doctors incurable. Let me send you my prescription and booklet. Don't suffer another day. Write to-day.

YOU NEED ME. Let me send you my prescription and booklet. You are suffering from the effects of youthful indiscretion, lost vitality, nervousness, lack of energy, nervous debility, lack of ambition, unfitness to marry, sexual weakness, impotency, varicocele, stricture, blood poison, kidney and bladder troubles, rupture, piles, fistula and other rectal troubles. LET ME SEND YOU MY PRESCRIPTION AND BOOKLET FREE. Take advantage of this offer NOW. Don't delay. Address to-day

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

Before he had recognized the personal nature of the assault Emerson found himself engaged in a furious hand to hand struggle. Then a sudden blackness swallowed him up, after which he found himself upon his knees, his arms loosely encircling a pair of legs. As he struggled upward something smote him in the side with sickening force, and he went to his knees again.

He could only raise his shoulder and fling an arm weakly above his head in anticipation of the crushing blow he thought was coming. But it did not descend. Instead he heard a gunshot. A weight sank across his calves. Then, with a final effort, he pulled himself free and staggered to his feet, his head rocking, his knees sagging. He saw a man's figure facing him and lunged at it to bring up in the arms of "Fingerless" Fraser.

HE COULD ONLY FLING AN ARM WEAKLY ABOVE HIS HEAD.

Boyd turned and beheld the body of a man stretched face downward on the floor. Beyond the fellow in the gray suit was disappearing into the crowd. Then he saw a gleam of blue metal in Fraser's hands.

"Give me that gun!" he panted.

"I may need it myself, and I ain't got but the one here. Let's get Clyde out of this."

Fraser lifted the young Chilcoman, who was huddled in a formless heap as if he had fallen from a great height, and together the two dragged him toward the Bedford Castle.

That night under glaring headlines the evening papers told the story, reporting one fisherman fatally hurt, one striker dead of a gunshot wound and many others injured.

CHAPTER XII.

A HALF mile from Captain Peasley's ship the rival company tenders were loading rapidly with union labor. The next day Emerson and Clyde drove down to the dock with Cherry in a closed carriage, experiencing no annoyance beyond some jeers and insults as they passed through the picket line. Boyd had barely seen them comfortably established aboard when up the ship's gangway came "Fingerless" Fraser radiantly attired, three heavily laden hotel porters groaning at his back, the customary thick waisted cigar between his teeth.

"Are you going with us?" Boyd inquired.

"Sure."

"See here! Is Pete one long succession of surprise parties with you?"

"Why, I've figgered on this right along."

"But the ship is jammed now. There is no room."

"Oh, I fixed that up long ago. I am going to bunk with the steward."

"Well, why in the world didn't you let us know you were coming?"

"Say, don't kid yourself. You know I couldn't stay behind." Fraser blew a cloud of smoke airily. "I never start anything I can't finish. I keep telling you, and I'm going to put this deal through now that I've got it started." With a half embarrassed laugh and a complete change of manner, he laid his hand upon Boyd's shoulder, saying: "Pal, I ain't much good to myself or anybody else, but I like you and I want to stick around. Maybe I'll come in useful yet—you can't tell."

Emerson had never glimpsed this side of the man's nature, and it rather surprised him.

"Of course you can come along, old man," he responded heartily. "We're glad to have you."

The decks of the big, low lying tramp steamer were piled high with gear of every description. Ready now to sail, Boyd went out to the dock office to wire Mildred of his success.

"Fingerless" Fraser soon ran in upon him. "They've come to grab you for killing that striker," he began breathlessly. "There's a couple of 'square toes' on the dock now. Better take it on the lam—quick."

"God!" So Marsh had withheld this stroke until the last moment.

"You'd better beat it, quick."

"How? I couldn't get through that crowd. They know me. Listen!" Outside the street broke into a roar at some taunt of the fishermen high up in the rigging. "I can't run away, and if those detectives get me I'm ruined."

Boyd clinched his hands in desperation. "I guess they've got me," he said bitterly. "There's no way out."

"From what they said I don't think they know you." Fraser continued. "Anyhow, they wanted Peasley to point you out. When they come off maybe you can slip 'em."

Boyd seized eagerly upon the suggestion. "The wharf is empty—see! I'll have to cross it in plain sight."

Through the rear door of the office that opened upon the dock proper they beheld the great floor almost entirely clear. Save for a few tons of freight at which Big George's men were working it was as unobstructed as a lawn, and, although it was nearly the size of a city block, it afforded no more means of concealment than did the little office itself, with its glass doors, its counter and its long desk, at the farther end of which a bill clerk was poring over his task.

They saw at the foot of the gangplank two men talking with Big George. They saw Hall point the strangers carelessly to the office, whence he had seen Boyd disappearing a few moments before, and turn back to his stevedores. Then they saw the plain clothes men approaching.

"Here! Glimpse your coat and hat, quick!" cried Fraser in a low voice, his eyes blazing at a sudden thought. He stripped his own garments from his back with feverish haste. "Put mine on. There! I'll stall for you. When they grab me, take it on the run. Understand?"

"That won't do. Everybody knows me." Boyd cast an apprehensive glance at the arched back of the bill clerk, but Fraser, quick of resource in such a situation, forced him swiftly to make the change, saying:

"Nix. It's yours only 'out.' Stand here, see?" He indicated a position beside the rear door. "I'll step out the other way where they can see me," he continued, pointing to the wagon way at the right. "Savvy? When they grab me you beat it and don't wait for nothing."

"But you"

Already they could hear the footsteps of the officers.

"I'll take a chance. Goodby."

There was no time even for a handshake. Fraser stepped swiftly to the door, then strolled quietly out into the view of the two men, who an instant later accosted him.

"Are you Mr. Boyd Emerson?"

The adventurer answered brusquely. "Yes, but I can't talk to you now."

"You are under arrest, Mr. Emerson."

Boyd waited to hear no more. The glass door swung open noiselessly under his hand, and he stepped out just as the bill clerk looked up from his work, staring out through the other entrance.

"Fingerless" Fraser's voice was louder now, as if for a signal. "Arrest me? What do you mean? Get out of my way."

"You'd better come peaceably."

Boyd heard a sharp exclamation—"Get him, Bill!" and then the sound of men struggling. He ran, followed by a roar from the strikers, in whose full view Fraser's encounter with the plain clothes men was taking place. A backward glance showed him that Fraser had drawn his pursuers to the street.

Scarcely had Boyd reached Big George when a wing of the besieging army swept in through the unguarded entrance and down the dock like an avalanche, leaving behind them the hurrying officers and the hungry pack clamoring for the prisoner.

"Drop that freight and get aboard the best way you can!" Boyd yelled at the fishermen, and, with a bound, was out into the open, crying to Captain Peasley on the bridge:

"Here they come! Cast off, for God's sake!"

The dozen men who had been slinging freight on the dock hastened up the gangplank or climbed the fenders, while the signalman clung to the lifting tackle and, at the piping cry of his whistle, was swung aloft out of the very arms of the rioters.

Above, on the flying bridge, Captain Peasley was bellowing orders. At last the Bedford Castle was under way.

* * * * * * *

Even after they were miles down the sound Boyd remained at his post, sweeping the waters astern in an anxious search for some swift harbor craft, the appearance of which would signal that his escape had been discovered.

"I won't feel safe until we are past Port Townsend," he confessed to Cherry, who maintained a position at his side. "The police can wire on from Seattle to stop us and take me off at that point."

"If they find out their mistake."

"They must have found it out long ago. That's why I've got Peasley forcing this old tub. She's doing 10 knots, and that's a breakneck speed for her. Once we're through the straits I'll be satisfied."

"What will happen to Fraser?" she queried.

"Nothing serious, I am sure. You see, they wanted me and nobody else. Once they land they have the wrong man I rather believe they will free him in disgust."

A moment later he went on: "But the sense of it makes me feel degraded and guilty to leave him. I—I would not desert a comrade for anything if he clung by with me."

"You did quite right," Cherry warmly assured him.

"You see, I am not working for myself. I am doing this for another."

It was the girl's turn to sigh softly, while the eyes she turned toward the west were strangely sad and dreamy.

"Two hours more," he told her as the ship's bell sounded, "then I can eat and sleep—and sing."

Captain Peasley was pacing the bridge when later they breasted the glare of Port Townsend and saw in the distance the flashing searchlights of the forts that guard the straits. They saw him stop suddenly and raise his night glasses. Boyd laid his hand on Cherry's arm. Presently the captain crossed to them and said.

"Yonder seems to be a launch making out. See? I wonder what's up. By Jove! They're signalling."

The two boats were drawing together rapidly, and soon those on the bridge heard the faint but increasing putter of a gasoline exhaust. Carrying the same speed as the Bedford Castle, the launch shortly came within hailing distance. The cyclopean eye of the ship's searchlight blazed up, and the next instant out from the gloom leaped a little craft, on the deck of which a man stood waving a lantern. She held steadfastly to her course, and a voice floated up to them:

"Ahoy! What ship?"

"The Bedford Castle, cannery tender, for Bristol bay." Peasley shouted back.

The men on the launch relinquished his lantern and, using both palms for a trumpet, cried more clearly now:

"[illegible] to? We want to come aboard."

With an exclamation of impatience, the commanding officer stepped to the telegraph, but Emerson forestalled him.

"Wait. They're after me, captain; it's the Port Townsend police, and if you let them aboard they'll take me off."

Turning, the skipper bellowed:

"Who are you?"

"Police."

"What did I tell you?" cried Emerson.

"What do you want?"

"One of your passengers—Emerson. Heave to. You're passing us."

"That's bloody hard luck, Mr. Emerson; I can't help myself," the captain declared. But again Boyd blocked him as he started for the telegraph.

"I won't stand it, sir. It's a conspiracy to ruin me."

"But, my dear young man"—

"Don't touch that instrument!"

From the launch came cries of growing vehemence, and a startled murmur of voices rose from somewhere in the darkness of the deck beneath.

"Stand aside!" Peasley ordered gruffly. But the other held his ground, saying quietly:

"I warn you. I am desperate."

"Shall I stop her, sir?" the quartermaster asked from the shadows of the wheelhouse.

"No!" Emerson commanded sharply, and in the glow from the binnacle light they saw he had drawn his revolver, while on the instant up from the void beneath heaved the massive figure of Big George Hall, a behemoth, more colossal and threatening than ever in the dim light. He wrenched open the door and with one sweep of his hairy paw flung the helmsman from his post, panting.

"Keep her going, cap, or I'll run them down!"

The launch was abreast of them now and skimming along so close that one could have tossed a biscuit aboard of her. The sputter of the craft alongside was now punctuated by a volley of curses.

The police launch sheered off, and the sound of her exhaust grew rapidly fainter and fainter. But not until it had wholly ceased did Big George give over his post at the wheel. Even then he went down the ladder reluctantly and without a word of thanks, of explanation or of apology. With him this had been but a part of the day's work. He saw neither sentiment nor humor in the episode.

* * * * * * *

From the crow's nest of the Bedford Castle a week later the lookout stared down upon a white expanse that stretched beyond the horizon. At dawn they began their careful search, feeling their way eastward through the open lanes and tortuous passages that separated the floes, now laying to for the northward set of the fields to clear a path before them, now steadling through some narrow lead that opened into freer waters.

Captain Peasley did all the navigating in person, but eventually they were hemmed in so closely that for a day and a night they could do nothing but drift with the pack. In time, however, the winds opened a crevice through which they retreated to follow the outer limits farther eastward until they were balked again.

Late one evening they discerned smoke on the horizon, and the next morning's light showed a three masted steamship fast in the ice a few miles to the westward.

"That's the 'Juliet,'" Big George informed his companions, "one of the North American Packers' association tenders."

"She was loading when we left Seattle," Boyd remarked.

"It is Willis Marsh's ship, so he must be aboard," supplemented Cherry. "She's a wooden ship and built for this business. If we don't look out he'll beat us in after all."

"What good will that do him?" Clyde questioned. "The fish don't bite—I mean run for sixty days yet."

Emerson and Bait merely shrugged. To Cherry Malotte this had been a voyage of dreams, for once away from land Boyd had become his real self again that genial, irrepressible self she had seen but rarely, and his manner had lost the restraint and coldness which recently had disturbed their relations. Of necessity their cramped environment had thrown them much together, and their companionship had been most pleasant.

Two days after sighting the Juliet they raised another ship, one of the sailing fleet which they knew to be hovering in the offing, and then on the 5th of the month the capricious current opened a way for them. Slowly at first they pushed on between the floes into a vast area of slush ice, thence to a stretch as open and placid as a country mill pond. The lookout pointed a path out of this, into which they steamed, coming at length to clear water, with the low shores of the mainland twenty miles away.

At sundown they anchored in the wide estuary of the Kaivik river, the noisy rumble of their chains breaking the silence that for months had lain like a smother upon the port.

CHAPTER XIII.

NEVER did men have more willing hands to do their bidding than did Boyd and George, and when a week later the Juliet, with Willis Marsh on board, came to anchor the bank houses were up and peopled, while the new site had become a beehive of activity.

The mouth of the Kaivik river is several miles wide, yet it contains but a small anchorage suitable for deep draft ships, the rest of the harbor being underlaid with mud bars and tide flats over which none but small boats

AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

D. A. Perkins of Harbor Springs Dies in This City.

Was Prominent Contractor Well Known in Michigan.

D. A. Perkins of Harbor Springs died suddenly, Saturday at the Hotel Elston after a short illness.

Mr. Perkins, was a member of the contracting firm of Perkins & Walters, of Harbor Springs, was in the city looking after a job of work for which his firm had the contract. Friday night he became suddenly ill and a physician was called and temporary relief was given so it was thought he could return home on the Saturday afternoon train but he suddenly grew worse and passed away.

Mr. Perkins was born in 1837 and the most of his life had been spent as a contractor, several of the finest buildings in the state having been under his charge. In 1896 he moved to Harbor Springs from Grand Rapids. He was a veteran of the Civil war and a member of the Masonic fraternity. He leaves one child, Judge Willis B. Perkins of Grand Rapids.

WOMEN RULE THIS ISLAND.

Control of Bering Sea Colony Affects Birth Rate.

A suffragist paradise has been discovered in a famed Alaskan isle. Here the wife and mother rules the household, according to L. L. Bales, old time hunter and guide, who learned the facts while taking the census of the isle.

Nunivak Island, a low, marshy bit of land lying in Bering sea just off the Alaska coast, between the mouths of the Yukon and the Kuskokwim rivers, is the home of the female rulers.

The population of the island is 170 souls. The men outnumber the women. Children are a rarity. This low birth rate is believed to be caused by the powerful command the women have over all domestic matters, which seems to have the effect of disturbing the functions of the mother. In the last ten years, according to the enumerator, there have been but twenty weddings, and but seven children have been born in that time.

He predicts that in another ten years the last trace of the older generations of this and many other native tribes in Alaska will be wiped out from degeneration and race suicide brought about by the predominating influence the women have over the men.

WEST RICH IN PHOSPHATE.

Wyoming, Idaho and Utah Lands Withdrawn From Entry.

A recent report of the geological survey shows that in the northwest country of Idaho, Wyoming and Utah the United States possesses probably the largest and richest phosphate deposits in the world. From surveys recently cast up in totals these deposits show evidences of 267,000,000 tons of high grade phosphate rock, while the claims are that millions more tons may be added to this total before the pay rock is exhausted.

These deposits show the rock in pebble formation, closely cemented in masses and containing some calcite. These round particles vary from a microscopic size to pebbles half an inch in diameter. In color the phosphate rock ranges from a gray to a jet black, the black probably due to carboniferous matter.

All public lands suspected of containing valuable deposits of phosphate now are withdrawn from public entry until such time as the value of the deposits is tested, preserving the status of the land until congress shall take action.

DANGER IN KEROSENE

State Oil Inspector Neal Sends Out a Warning

To People Who Use it for Kindling—When it is Unsafe.

State Oil Inspector Frank Neal is sending out another official appeal to the people of Michigan to bear in mind the danger of using kerosene to kindle and hurry up fires in stoves, furnaces, etc.

He calls attention to the fact that a number of deaths already have occured from this dangerous practice since the stove season opened and he expects there will be others. He says it is a popular fallacy that kerosene is safe for this purpose.

"Most people don't seem to understand," said Mr. Neal, "that at a heat of 121 degrees kerosene gives off practically the same explosive vapor that comes from gasoline at 50 degrees. The only difference is that gasoline evaporizes at a lower temperature. But kerosene introduced into the firepot of the cooking stove or furnace may be just as deadly because the heat is here to vaporize it.

"Thrown in a hot stove, whether containing a fire or not, kerosene will—almost—immediately—produce the explosive vapor and then when the lighted match comes in contact the doings commence. Unless death is sought kerosene should under no circumstances be poured into a stove from a can. The taking of strychnine or looking down the barrel of an 'unloaded' gun is much safer."

A limited parcels post for free delivery routes will be recommended by Postmaster-general Hitchcock in forthcoming annual report. In announcing the general foresees the establishment of a general parcels post throughout the country as soon as the postal saving system is thoroughly organized.

As a preliminary step in the development of such a service Mr. Hitchcock will ask congress to authorize the delivery on rural routes for parcels weighing as high as eleven pounds, which is the weight of limit for international parcels post. This form of service can be conducted with little if any additional expense of the government. It will not require the appointment of more carriers. For those already employed have the necessary equipments in the way of horses and wagons to distribute the parcles as well as the ordinary mails.

A queer compact has come to light through the story of A. W. Peck, traveling salesman for the Hazelton & Perkins Drug company of Grand Rapids. Mr. Peck and Rev. D. Cochlin of Traverse City, pastor of the Congregational church there for nineteen years, have this year completed their fourteenth year of hunting together. They remain under the tent for a fortnight. The compact is that when the drug man is taken from this world Rev. Mr. Cochlin is to deliver a five-minute sermon over the remains of his friend, tell one of Mr. Peck's comical stories and then follow the remains to the grave. Both of the gentlemen are serious about the matter despite the solemnity.

Recent occurrances in Clinton county proves conclusively, declare physicians, that scarlet fever germs will live for at least twenty years and remain as dangerous at the end of that time as they were in the first place.

In 1888 there was several deaths in the house standing on Matthew Behan's farm, near North Plains, from scarlet fever. Since that time the house has been unoccupied most of the time and few repairs have been made. Three weeks ago Charles T. Lowe and his family moved into the house and tore off the paper from the walls, preparatory to repapering. Within a few days there were three critical cases of scarlet fever in the house, and this week the second of the two children of the family died, the first death having occurred within a very short time.

Mrs. Lowe, the third patient, is not expected to recover. Physicians say the germs were given ejeculation by tearing off the infected paper.

The freight and passenger steamer Fannie C. Hart, 260 net tons, recently purchased by the Merchants and Miners Transportation Company, to ply between Jacksonville and Miami in the freight and passenger business, will reach port today and will be moored at the company's pier, foot of Newman street.

The Fannie C. Hart formerly plied on the great lakes, having come South from Manitowoc, Wis., at which point she was purchased for this line. The ship will after taking on a few cases of goods and several passengers, some of whom will arrive via the Merchants and Miner line today, proceed to Miami this afternoon, where her first cargo will be discharged.

The vessel stopped via New York on the way South, where she took on a cargo of cafe goods for Miami merchants. She is 154 feet long, thirty foot beam, and is equipped to carry sixty-eight first class passengers and seventy five second class.

The vessel will ply regularly between Jacksonville and Miami bringing fruits and vegetables to Jacksonville and taking general merchandise from here for Miami.—Florida Times Union.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. FALL RIVER TO CELEBRATE SPINNING ANNIVERSARY.

Massachusetts City Now Second In World's Cotton Manufactures.

The one hundredth anniversary of cotton manufacturing in Fall River, Mass., is approaching, and the occasion will probably be celebrated by some demonstration befitting the largest cotton manufacturing center in this country and the second largest in the world.

It was in 1811 that Colonel Joseph Durfee promoted the first cotton mill in what is now Fall River, then the town of Troy. The original mill is standing, somewhat remodeled as the result of fire in 1843, and is used as a storehouse.

The mill was in operation as a cotton mill for about fourteen years and was afterward used as a printing mill. Just how many processes were carried on in this old mill 100 years ago cannot be said, but probably the yarn was spun on the crude frames then in operation to a very limited extent.

It is said that the cotton, which came from the south in sailing packets, was distributed around the neighborhood and hackheard and taken to the mill for weaving. Then the yarn was sent out to people near by who owned hand looms and was there woven into cloth and returned to the mill for sale and distribution.

The first Durfee mill was not much of a financial success, but it set the ball rolling and helped to build up a spindle city noted for its strong financial position and its able organizations of manufacturers of cotton.

Since the first Durfee mill was finished in 1811 fifteen additional mills have been added to the list, and Fall River investors have been liberal supporters of cotton manufacturing enterprises, and today thirty nine corporations operate 3,500,000 spindles capitalized at about $31,000,000.

PEOPLE WE KNOW

They are Charlevoix People, and What They Say is of Local Interest.

When an incident like the following occurs right here at home, it is bound to carry weight with our readers. So many strange occurrances go the rounds of the press; are published as facts, people become skeptical. On one subject skepticism is rapidly disappearing. This is due to the actual experience of our citizens, and their public utterances regarding them. The doubter must doubt no more in the face of such evidence as this. The public statement of a reputable citizen living right at home, one whom you can see every day, leaves no grounds for the skeptic to stand on.

The SILVER HORDE

many pass, and as the canneries are distributed up and down the stream for a considerable distance it is necessary to transport all supplies to and from the ships by means of tugs and lighters. Owing to the narrowness of the channel the Juliet came to her moorings not far from the Bedford Castle

To Marsh, already furious at the trick the ice had played him, this forced proximity to his rival brought home with added irony the fact that he had been forestalled, while it emphasized his knowledge that henceforth the conflict would be carried on at closer quarters. It would be a contest between two men, both determined to win by fair means or foul

It was on the afternoon following his arrival that Marsh after a tour of inspection landed from his launch and strolled up to where Boyd Emerson was at work He was greeted courteously, if a bit coolly, and found, as on their last meeting, that his own bearing was reflected exactly in that of Boyd.

"I see you have a number of my old fishermen," Marsh observed.

"Yes; we were fortunate."

"You are very lucky."

"Indeed! How?"

"Well, don't you think you were lucky to beat that strike?"

"It wasn't altogether luck. However, I do consider myself fortunate in escaping at the last moment," Boyd laughed easily. "By the way, what happened to the man they mistook for me?"

"Let him go. I believe I didn't pay much attention to the matter I rather think you will have a lot to explain one of these days," he said, with deliberate menace.

"With 50,000 cases of salmon aboard the Bedford Castle I will explain anything. Meanwhile the police may go to the devil!"

"You got away from Seattle, but there is a commissioner at Dutch Harbor, also a deputy marshal, who may have better success with a warrant than those policemen had." The trust's manager could not keep down the angry tremor in his voice, and the other, perceiving it, replied in a manner designed to inflame him still more:

"Yes, I have heard of those officers. I understand they are both in your employ."

"What!"

"I hear you have bought them."

"Do you mean to insinuate"

"I don't mean to insinuate anything Listen! We are where we can talk plainly, Marsh, and I am tired of all this subterfuge You did what you could to stop me, you even tried to have me killed"—

"You dare to"—

"But I guess it never occurred to you that I may be just as desperate as you are. I broke through in spite of you, and I'm on the job If you want to cry quits, I'm willing, but I won't be balked, and if any of your hired marshals try to take me before I put up my catch I'll put you away. Understand?"

Willis Marsh recoiled involuntarily.

"You are insane!" he cried.

"Am I?" Emerson laughed harshly. "Well, I'm just crazy enough to do what I say. Don't come back here until I send for you. Something might fall on you."

"Then it is to be war, eh?"

"Suit yourself." Boyd pointed to the shore.

As Marsh made his way to the water's edge he stumbled like a blind man; his lips were bleeding where his small, sharp teeth had bitten them, and he panted like an hysterical woman.

During the next fortnight the sailing ships began to assemble, standing in under a great spread of canvas to berth close alongside the two steamships.

On the morning after the arrival of the last ship Emerson and his companions were treated to a genuine surprise. Cherry had come down to the site as usual—she could not let a day go by without visiting the place—and Clyde after a tardy breakfast had just come ashore. They were watching Big George direct the launching of a scow when all of a sudden they heard a familiar voice behind them cry cheerfully:

"Hello, white folks! Here we are all together again."

They turned to behold a villainous looking man beaming benignly upon them. He was dirty, his clothes were in rags, and through a riotous bristle of beard that hid his thin features a mangy patch showed on either cheek It was undeniably "Fingerless" Fraser, but how changed, how altered, from that radiant flower of indolence they had known! He was pallid, emaciated and bedraggled.

"Fraser!" they cried in chorus, then fell upon him noisily

Fraser drew himself up with injured dignity, then spoke in dramatic accents "I worked my way!"

"How? Where?"

"On that rhoaty whal jammer"

"But the police?" queried Boyd

"Oh, I squared them easy. It's you they want. Yes, sir, I worked."

"Tell us about it," urged Cherry.

"What's the use?" he demanded, with a glare at Clyde. "That bonehead wouldn't understand."

"Go ahead," Boyd seconded, with twitching lips. "You look as if you had worked, and worked hard."

"Well, there ain't any Pullmans running to this resort, so I stow away on a coal burner, but somebody flags me. Then I try to hire out as a fisherman, but I ain't there with the gang talk and my stuff drags, so I fix it for a hide-away on the Blessed Isle—that's her name. Can you beat that for a monaker? This sailor of mine goes good to grub me, but he never shows for forty-eight hours—or years, I forget which. Anyhow, I stand it as long as I can, then I dig my way up to a hatch and mew like a house cat. It seems they were hep from the start, and battened me down on purpose, then made book on how long I'd stay hid. Oh, it's a funny joke, and they all get a stomach laugh when I show When I offer to pay my way they're insulted. Nix! that ain't their graft. They wouldn't take money from a stranger Oh, no! They permit me to work my way The scullion has quit, see? So they promote me to his job."

"FRASER!" THEY CRIED IN CHORUS.

"You deserted this morning, eh?"

"I did. I want a bath and some clean clothes and a whole lot of sleep."

He was granted his desires.

The Bedford Castle having discharged her cargo steamed away to return in August.

The middle of June brought the first king salmon, scouts sent on ahead of the "sockeyes;" but Boyd made no effort to take advantage of this run, laboring manfully to prepare for the advance of the main army, that terrific horde that was soon to come from the mysterious depths either to make or ruin him. Once the run proper started there would be no more opportunity for building or for setting up machinery He must be ready and waiting by the first of July.

For some time his tin machines had been busy night and day turning out great heaps of gleaming cans, while the carpenters and machinists completed their tasks The gill netters were overhauling their gear; the beach was lined with fishing boats. On their dock great piles of seines and drift nets were being inspected Three miles below Big George with a picked crew and a pile driver was building the fishtrap. It consisted of half mile "leads," or rows of piling, capped with stringers upon which netting was hung and terminated in "hearts," "corrals" and "spillers," the intricate arrangements of webbing and timbers out of which the fish were to be taken.

As for Boyd the fever in his veins mounted daily as he saw his dream assuming concrete form. Always he found Cherry at his shoulder, unobtrusive and silent for the most part, yet intensely observant and keenly alive to every action She seemed to have the faculty of divination, knowing when to be silent and when to join her mood with his, and she gave him valuable help, for she possessed a practical mind. One day when their preparations were nearly completed a foreman came to Boyd and said excitedly:

"Boss, I'd like you to look at the Iron Chinks right away."

"What's up?"

"I don't know, but something is wrong" A hurried examination showed the machines to be cunningly crippled; certain parts were entirely missing while others were broken.

The Iron Chink, or mechanical cleaner, is perhaps the most ingenious of the many labor saving devices used in the salmon fisheries It is an awkward looking, yet very effective contrivance of revolving knives and conveyors which seizes the fish whole and delivers it cleaned, clipped, cut and ready to be washed. With superhuman dexterity it does the work of twenty lightning like butchers Without the aid of these Iron Chinks Boyd knew that his fish would spoil before they could be handled He hastened straightway to George Bait. A half hour's run down the bay and he clambered from his launch to the pile driver, where, amid the confusion and noise, he made known his things. The big fellow's calmness dismayed him.

"What are you going to do now?"

"Butcher by hand," said the fisherman.

"But how? That takes skilled labor—lots of it."

George grinned "I'm too old a bird to be caught like this I figured on accidents from the start, and when I hired my Chinamen I included a crew of cutters. Willis Marsh will have to try again."

MANAGEMENT OF THE HEAD OF THE HERD

By the time the bull has reached the age of one year he should have been given a number of lessons in leading, writes F. M. Twining in the Farm Journal. If you have not taught him to follow you in going to and returning from the pasture, begin now, using at first a head halter and gradually changing to the nose ring, above all things being gentle, patient and firm. Don't unnecessarily irritate his sensitive nose by violent jerks, as it quickly teaches him to become cross. When he is unruly give him a smart rap with your hand until he realizes that you are master.

From this time on he may be used for light service. Now comes the time when it is no longer safe to allow him to run loose in the pasture. Some develop the tendency to challenge all living and inanimate things in a much more violent degree than others, but none is to be trusted, and the farsecing breeder who is striving for the best will conserve that masculine vigor that would go to break down his fences, destroy his cornfield and jeopardize the lives of all who traverse "green pastures" by providing special quarters for his bullship. It is impossible also to tell when the cows are due to calve if the bull is allowed to run with them—an item well worth every up to date business man's attention.

The proper place for the bull is certainly in a good sized box stall with a concrete or plank floor of concrete two or three layers of tarred paper should be laid beneath the surface when constructing to keep out the cold) covered with enough clean bedding to insure comfort. It should be well lighted and well ventilated without the light coming in through a leaky roof and the fresh air in a draft through a crack in the wall. He should be tied to a post with his left side toward the door by which you enter. A good stout chain or cotton rope (a hemp rope will irritate his neck) should be fastened around his neck and attached to the post, with a lighter chain fastened to his nose ring a little more slack than the first.

The dairy Shorthorn bull Knight is an unusually fine specimen of his breed. He is five years old and won the championship at the Vermont state fair last year.

The bull must be fed liberally, enough to keep him in a good, thrifty condition without being fat. The grain should be of a light, nutritious nature, the amount varying with the individual and with the work he has to do. Give him plenty of bright clover or alfalfa hay and also plenty of pure, clean water.

Late Fattener For Hogs.

Nothing for fattening hogs in the fall is preferable to field corn. In the northwestern part of the state, says the Minnesota experiment station, the flint or other early ripening varieties should be planted for this purpose. In southern Minnesota the regular field varieties may be used successfully. The experiment station has found that hogs given free access to the field do better than when corn is snapped and fed to them.

Treatment For Cracked Heels.

For cracked heels in horses clip off the hair, cleanse parts and poultice with warm linseed meal for a week. Smear some vaseline on the surface of poultice to keep it from sticking. After discontinuing the poultices wash the parts again and dry them thoroughly; then apply twice daily an ointment composed of two parts flowers of sulphur, one part ichthyol and one part calomel to eight parts lard or lanolin.

Dairy Wisdom.

It is not always the cow that gives the largest amount of milk that is making the most money for you. Test her and be certain.

The care given the heifer calves during their first year has much to do with their future usefulness. Keep them sleek and growing and give enough clover or alfalfa hay to develop a capacity for handling food.

Fresh air has an actual money value to the dairy farmer. Without fresh air the cow cannot digest as much food, and without plenty of food she cannot make so much nor as good milk.

Save enough straw to give your cows good, comfortable beds during the winter Selling straw is "saving at the spigot and leaking at the bung-hole."

Barb wire has ruined many a good dairy cow. It doesn't take many losses to pay for the price of a pasture fence.

Courier Grange Column

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met in regular session Saturday evening November 26, 1910.

After vacant offices were filled the grange proceeded with the regular order of business.

The wood being nearly gone, the grange was instructed to procure a a new supply.

Caroline Hellman, Didi Chamberlain, Ruben Liskum and Milton Lanway were initiated in the third and fourth degrees.

Lecturer's hour was then carried out with songs, recitations and roll call answered by "What the Grange Has Done for Me." Many different answers were given which left no doubt that the grange has been a benefit to its members and the community at large.

Lawrence Isaman and Claude Johnson were then chosen captains of the opposing sides of the hunt, to be held November 30.

Grange closed in form.

The hunt supper was held Friday evening December 2. There was a good though not extra large crowd.

The supper consisted of game prepared in different ways known to the sisters. The program which was in charge of six brothers, was conducted in the following manner: Lots were drawn to determine the order of the selections. These consisted of songs, readings etc. Several responded to encores. The company then dispersed feeling sure they would not spend so pleasant an evening for days to come.

Horton Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay grange met in regular session Friday evening December 2, with fifteen members present. Meeting called to order by Worthy Master C. C. Wallace. Minutes read and approved. Two candidates were elected to membership. They then proceded to elect the following officers for the ensuing year:

CROPS AMONG TREES?

Arguments For and Against Planting In the Orchard.

The large majority of California fruit growers do not grow marketable crops between the trees, says a recent bulletin of the United States department of agriculture. They believe in clean culture, except where leguminous crops are used to renovate and fertilize the soil. From the standpoint of the large commercial orchard and the well to do proprietor this practice has much to recommend it. The planting of such an orchard is regarded as a long time investment. Little if any returns are expected for the first few years, but when the trees approach maturity and are in full bearing the anticipated profits are supposed to compensate the owner for all the lean years. Any treatment, therefore, which tends to rob the soil of its plant food when the trees are young or to retard their growth is pretty certain to lessen the yields and the consequent profits in later years. Professor E. J. Wickson, director of the California experiment station, says:

"All intercultures are a loan made by the trees to the orchardist. The term may be long and the rate of interest low, but sooner or later the trees will need restitution to the soil of the plant food removed by intercropping."

Notwithstanding all this, the poor man must needs make the loan or his children may starve, says the bulletin. The settler on a small tract set out to young trees cannot afford, if his means are limited, to wait four or five years for the first returns. He must produce crops between the rows, and the question for him to consider is how this can be done with the least possible injury to the trees. A plentiful supply of water and a deep, rich soil are the essentials of intercropping. In districts that depend on a meager rainfall of 15 to 20 inches per annum, or where irrigation water is both scarce and costly, the practice becomes of doubtful value under any circumstances. In most of the fruit districts of the west water for irrigation is still reasonably low in price, and the extra amount required for intercropping represents but a small part of the net gains from such crops.

HAVANA AND HALLADAY LEAF

Letter Proving Profitable For Those Able to Prime Their Tobacco Crops.

The illustration reproduced from the New England Homestead shows two types of tobacco grown on F. M. Arnold's farm in Southwick, Mass. One is the Halladay tobacco; the other is Havana. The Halladay type of tobacco, which was originated only a few years ago, is holding true to type and proving a profitable tobacco for those who are in position to prime their crop.

It will be remembered that the Halladay type of tobacco was first found on Edmond Halladay's farm in Suffield, Conn. The presence of this sport or new variety was due to the breaking up in the third generation of a cross between Havana and Sumatra tobacco. The plant was saved, self pollinated and quarried.

HAVANA AND HALLADAY LEAF.

The result of several years' selection is as pictured here, a broad, rather short, round, pointed leaf, which is closely set on the stalk. The veins are rather small, and the tobacco is pronounced by those who are growing it this year to be a marked success.

Depth to Cultivate.

At the Wisconsin experiment station cultivation three inches deep left the ground more moist below the cultivated layer than cultivation one and one-half inches deep, and these results have in the main been confirmed by similar experiments at the Utah station.

MEN'S WEAR FOR CHRISTMAS GIFTS--WHY NOT? OR RATHER, WHY SO!!

Time was when only ornamental things were considered appropriate Christmas gifts. In recent years the pendulum has swung the other way, and men's wearables are established as acceptable gifts. Within the family circle it brings positive joy to father, brother or son to give him a suit, overcoat or lesser articles of apparel. But beyond, it is now quite correct to give Neckwear, Suspenders, Belts, Shirts, Suits of Clothes or an Overcoat, Hats, Suit Cases and Bags, Hose in all qualities, Handkerchiefs and the like, to those for whom we even have sentimental regard. READY FOR THE HOLIDAY TRADE

Charlevoix Merchants Have Made Special Preparations

JOURNEY THRU ADVERTISING COLUMNS

Conrier Forced to Dooble in Size This Week

To Accomodate the Increased Advertising—Special Bargains Offered in all Lines Trade in Charlevoix.

This week we are forced to dauble the number of pages to accomodate our advertisers. Charlevoix merchants have made special preparations this year for the holiday trade and there is no better place on earth to do your holiday shopping than right here. A journey through our advertising columns this week is like a trip through fairy land, so many and so varied are the many beautiful things which are offered and so tempting the prices. Our stores are decorated in honor of the season and you are invited to make the trip with us.

Entering the town we first call at Jim Graham's blacksmith shop where he is found busy horseshoeing. Before we reach Bridge street we stop at the store across from the court house where we find a fine assortment of bottled and canned goods as well as general groceries at Smith's. In the same building with Mr. Smith, J. J. Waffle is prepared to sell us our Christmas meats, oysters and fish at the lowest prices.

The first store we enter on Bridge street is Benj. Brown's where we linger to examine his immense line of fur coats and mittens as well as harnesses and horse furnishing goods, robes, sleighbells, robes and blankets.

The next place visited is Block Bros. where they are busy selling groceries and meats.

Shawley's Bazaar is indeed Santa Claus land and it is with difficulty we tear ourselves away from so many beautiful things greet us on every hand.

Taylor's Bakery is the next place we stop at and make arrangement for baked goods for Christmas dinner.

We are informed at the Emory Millinery store that they are selling everything at great reductions.

Fred G. Bellinger has a fine display of holiday jewelry and with reluctance we leave this store for here we could find something for everybody.

Chapel's drug store is next visited and here again we are bewildered by the grand array of holiday goods which they are showing.

Our next stop is at the Charlevoix County bank, the oldest bank in Charlevoix county, the officers being among the most influential men in the city.

J. L. Crane's, which is one of the most popular stores in the city is next visited. Here we find presents which will long be worn and treasured by their recipients.

Since our visit last year we find that M. A. Levinson & Co. have moved, or rather VanPelt has built them a new store, and they are now occupying more than double the space they did formerly, to take care of their growing trade.

F. E. Frazier has some useful gifts to show in fur shoes and slippers as well as his other lines of reliable footwear.

Frank N. Metcalf the new proprietor of the Ivy Drug store has made special preparations for the holiday trade and we pay a long visit here.

F. H. Wood has something to offer in the electrical line which makes the most acceptable Christmas gifts imaginable.

F. S. Blanchard has a desirable line of hardware and cutlery and hard indeed would anyone be to suit for whom a present could not be selected here.

Cashier Rachow greets us at the State Savings bank and informs us that they have made a splendid growth the past year. This bank enjoys the confidence of the public to a marked degree.

At McCann Bros. bakery we stop to leave our order for Christmas fruit cake as we want the best on that day.

C. R. Bellinger the pioneer jeweler, has a beautiful line of table silverware as well as all other lines.

The "Curio Store" is thronged with eager shoppers all finding what they want in this great stock of holiday goods.

The next place is the mammoth plumbing establishment of Robt. M. A. Johnston & Co. where we find an immense stock of electrical and plumbing supplies not excelled in northern Michigan.

Crossing the street the first place visited is S. M. See & Sons where we purchase a fine piece of furniture.

L. S. See, grocer, is next visited. Mr. See carries a mammoth stock of high grade groceries and we leave a good order here.

Raymond Bentley has a fine stock of hardware, a portion of which is especially suitable for Christmas gifts.

The Sugar Bowl is always one of the busiest and most beautiful places in the city at this season and this year is no exception.

Charlevoix has one of the best photographers in the state and a call at Priest's studio finds him busy with holiday orders.

At this time we find that we need a new cutter and we easily make a choice from Sam Beanblane's new stock.

As usual the Charlevoix Hardware Co. has a fine display of goods and a particularly fine cutlery window display.

Bert Mason is the next place visited and we find Bert and the boys busy as bees selling groceries and shoes at prices that explain why his store is so crowded.

At Cohen's we are told that their great Christmassesale is in full blast and by the looks of the crowd we are satisfied that the bargains offered are attracting a splendid trade.

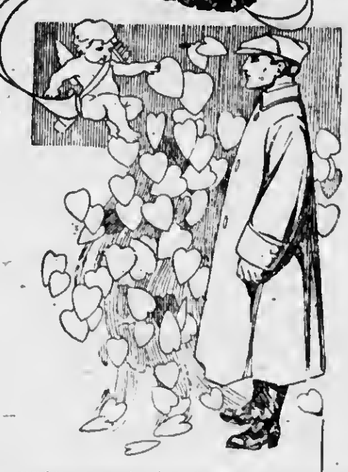
Bert Beandoin has several special offers in candy of which we take advantage. We also leave an order here for ice cream.

The Palace Clothing store, which commenced business last summer, has rapidly grown in public favor and the reason for its growing trade is easily found out by a visit and talk with Manager Cohen.

B. W. Miller's is the next place visited. Here we find everybody busy as it has become a truism. "If bought at Miller's its all right.

Going up the hill our last stop is made at S. Orlowski & Sons where special bargains are being offered in groceries and shoes, of which we take advantage, going home satisfied there there is no place like Charlevoix, for Christmas shopping.

A CHRISTMAS ROMANCE BY ELLIS BROWNE



Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

HE took her one day in his automobile,
And he was a magnate in iron and steel.
Her very best gown was a cheap little lawn,
But her face was as lovely and fresh as the dawn.
He had horses and cattle and acres of land
And servants to wait on his slightest command.
A house in the country, a palace in town
(But the eyes of his chauffeur were gentle and brown).

THIS captain of finance, he wooed like a king,
So she did not say "No" when he brought her a ring.
He showered her with presents of diamonds and pearls
And crowned her with roses, this fairest of girls.
But the glittering jewels were soon pushed aside,
And his roses, neglected, soon wilted and died,
For the magnate was grizzled and wrinkled and old,
And the locks of the chauffeur were yellow as gold.

OH, youth unto youth is forever the same
As the torch to the tow, as the moth to the flame,
So the jewels and ring, with a message contrite,
Went back to the elderly wooer one night,
And silent and dark stood the automobile,
With no lights o'er the bonnet, no hand on the wheel,
For a maiden in lawn and a lover in leather,
Walked Christmas eve to the parson's together.

WHAT BAKER WANTS

Cheboygan Candidate for Speaker Announces Platform.

Fewer Women Less Scandal No Junket—Eighty Days Session.

If his personal ideas of legislative unprovement may be considered a platform, Representative Herbert F. Baker of Cheboygan is standing on a platform for the speakership election that is just as radical in its reform sentiment as as that of the governor-elect.

"I do not deem it wise for me to formulate a platform," said he. "It is for the majority of the members to fix the policy of the house. But if I am elected speaker there are some matters of administration I shall try and work out.

"I shall strike for a eighty-days session. I think it possible and practical.

"There should be fewer employes. The expense of the legislature should be materially reduced if not actually cut in half.

"Fewer women and less scandal.

"The so-called junket is a disgrace to the legislature and should be greatly modified or abolished.

"The legislature should correct the public impressions that it is a select picnic party by doing business from the start.

"A square deal for all the interests and for one-hundred members.

"I stand for larger measure of home rule for cities.

"I shall stand for no backward step in the matter of direct nominations. I shall favor so amending the present law as to simplify its operation, modify the expense, make it mandatory for all parties and extend its scope."

Asked if the matter of committee assignment had been brought to his attention, Mr. Baker answered in the affirmative. He laughed and and said it was too early to count the chickens. Then, seriously:

"If I am made speaker I shall look first for good men on committees, and my friends second. But I shall not, at any stage of the game, forget my friends."

WILL INCORPORATE

Charlevoix County Fruit Growers' Association to be Permanent

Was Decided Upon at Meeting Held in East Jordan Last Saturday Afternoon

There was a meeting of the Charlevoix County Fruit Growers' Association held in the office of the People's State Savings bank last Saturday afternoon. The attendance was not large but made up in enthusiasm what it lacked in numbers.

Since its inception last winter the Fruit Growers' Association has been acting under a temporary organization but the unanimous sentiment of the meeting Saturday seemed to be in favor of making the organization permanent, becoming incorporated and receiving a charter from the state.

As long as the association confined its efforts to the matter of educating its members in the most approved methods in growing and caring for their fruit crop perhaps

OVER ONE HUNDRED MILLION

Population of United and all of It's Possessions

UNITED STATES PROPER 91,972,266

Michigan Ranks as Eighth State in the Union.

Increase for the Country Proper has been 15,977,691 or 21 per cent. Michigan has Increased Over 16 per cent.

The population of the United States is 93,402,151.

This the total number of people enumerated through the states, territories, District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico in the thirteenth census, which began in April 15, 1910. The total does not not include the Philippines. The increase in country's population during the past ten years was 16,145,521, or 22.9 per cent over 77,256,630 in 1900, as compared with an increase of 14,256,864 or 22.7 per cent over 62,979,766 in 1890.

The population of the continental United States is 91,972,266, an increase of 15,977,691 or 21 per cent over 75,994,575 in 1900 when the increase was 13,046,861 or 20.7 per cent over 62,947,714, the total in 1890.

The total population of the United States with all her possessions is about 101,000,000. This includes 7,335,126 in the Philippines, as enumerated in the census there in 1903 and estimates for the population of the islands of Guam, in Samoa, and persons in the Panama canal zone.

The states, in their rank according to population follows:

1, New York; 2, Pennsylvania; 3, Illinois; 4, Ohio; 5, Texas; 6, Massachusetts; 7, Missouri; 8, Michigan; 9, Indiana; 10, Georgia; 11, New Jersey; 12, California; 13, Wisconsin; 14, Kentucky; 15, Iowa; 16, North Carolina; 17, Tennessee; 18, Alabama; 19, Minnesota; 20, Virginia; 21, Mississippi; 22, Kansas; 23, Oklahoma; 24, Louisiana; 25, Arkansas; 26, South Carolina; 27, Maryland; 28, West Virginia; 28, Nebraska; 30, Washington; 31, Porto Rico; 32 Connecticut; 33, Colorado; 34, Florida; 35, Maine; 36, Oregon; 37, South Dakota; 38, North Dakota; 39, Rhode Island; 40 New Hampshire; 41, Montana; 42, Utah; 43, Vermont; 44, District of Columbia; 45, New Mexico; 46, Idaho; 47, Arizona; 48, Deleware; 49, Hawaii; 50, Wyoming; 51, Nevada; 52, Alaska.

With its practically 93,500,000 population, as shown by the announcement of the census of the total population for the continental United States, the figures exceeded the advanced estimate of the bureau to the extent of about 2,000,000. Previous to the beginning of the thirteenth census the bureau expressed the opinion, based upon previous increases that the aggregate would be 92,000,000. Up to last night it was not believed it would greatly exceed 90,5 per cent, whereas when the final tabulation was made it was found to be 21 per cent, giving a total increase of 16,000,000, practically sixteen millions.

Unquestionably it will be necessary to alter the basis of representation in congress. At the present ratio of 1 to 211,000 people to each member of the house, the house would contain about 474 members as against 391 at present. It is the general belief that this number would be unwieldy.

MET LAST WEEK

Michigan State Association of Farmers' Clubs.

Much Important Legislation is Asked for in Resolutions.

At the annual convention of State Association of Farmers' clubs held at Lansing last week, the following legislation was asked for:

An annual tax of $6 on all automobiles, the proceeds to be used for road building and road repairing.

Civil service code for all state departments.

Parcels post for everybody and for all sections of the country. The suggestion for a distinctly rural parcels post may be condemned by the convention as being part of a plan of the express companies and some others to defeat the enactment of a general parcels post law.

To prohibit the shipment of liquor into counties that have voted to be dry.

To repeal the hawkers and peddlers acts, on the grounds that hawkers and peddlers of products, like groceries, through the country districts, are a real benefit to the farmers.

Against any legislation that will divert any of the specific tax money from the primary school fund.

For a closed season of ten years for partridge and quail.

For a revision of the act so as to make more effective the requirement for spraying fruit trees.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, B. A. Hobden, Wixom, re-elected; vice president, J. D. Leland, Carrollton; secretary, Mrs. C. P. Johnson, Metamora, re-elected; treasurer, Mrs. Lewis Sackett, Oxford. Two directors were chosen for two years, C. H. Johnson of Metamora, and Patrick Hankart of Jackson, being selected.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session December 10, with an attendance of thirty-eight members and twelve visitors.

The meeting was called to order by Worthy Master O. D. Smith and during the business session a few bills were presented. The Ladies' Auxiliary announced that the next meeting would be held with Sister Esther Shepard Wednesday, December 21st, if the weather will permit. The dance committee announced a masquerade dance to be held at the hall December 23. Two prizes will be given, to the best dressed lady and poorest dressed man.

Then came the election of officers as follows:

Master—George Jaqways.
Overseer—Willard Warden.
Lecturer—Lottie Todd.
Steward—Albert Todd.
Ass't Steward—Orrin Todd.
Chaplain—Lovina Brimhall.
Treasurer—Samuel Nowland.
Secretary—Prudence Smith.
Gatekeeper—Edward Nowland.
Ceres—Esther Shepard.
Pomona—Ethel Brimhall.
Flora—Emma Todd.
L. A. Steward—Pearl St. John.
Ins. Director—Edward Brimhall.
Business Ag't—Wm. Saunders.

After a short recess the Lecturer's program was taken up, which consisted of songs, readings and recitations.

The visitors were then called on and we were favored by a song from Brother Terry Barber, a recitation by Sister Addie Barber and a story by Brother Fred Grillin.

On account of the supper and the late hour Grange was dismissed to meet again in two weeks.

DOINGS IN DETROIT

How Former Charlevoix People are Getting Along.

Some people you are most apt to meet on Woodard:

Mrs. Harry Luke, Mr. Luke is too busy, Mrs. E. H. Wicks, the doctor occasionally, W. W. Washburn and Clara his wife, Charles Jones, Harry Dodge, Thad Smith, Chas. Emrey, Harold Hampton, Dare Burke, Alex Levinson, Leon Taylor, Miss Pearl Emory, Emerald Emory, Mrs. Archie Carey, Miss Mary Jones, John W. Harsha and his wife, W. A. Carey with some other man's wife?

Harry Dodge enjoyed having his daddy drop in on him for a few days visit.

Several of the fellows saw George W. Crozier and A. L. Coulter in the city last week. Clyde and Clare Coulter were also in town doing their Christmas shopping, and shaking hands.

John W. Harsha is again able to be back on the job after more than a week's confinement, he being one of Detroit's many automobile victims. The host of friends at home will be pleased to hear that there were no bones broken and the accident was not as serious as it might have been, but Jack is doing considerable limping.

Charles H. Emrey is still confined to his room, 45 East High street, with rheumatics, and visiting friends on their Holiday vacation to the city must not forget, to call and cheer him up. Four weeks cooped up in a room is no joke.

The first social meeting of the Charlevoix-Detroit people will be held in January, definite date to be given later.

Rebekah Officers Elected.

At the the last meeting of Charlevoix Rebekah lodge the following officers were elected:

Noble Grand—Mrs. Eagleton.
Vice-Grand—Mrs. Bettes.
Recording Secretary—Mrs. Kirby.
Financial Secretary—Mrs. Hamilton.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Will Meet Friday Evening at the Home of Mrs. J. P. Partridge.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, December 16, with Mrs. J. P. Partridge.

The following is the program:

A CHRISTMAS OF LONG AGO

By MARCIA FIELD

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association]

DEAR COUSIN JACK
Pray come to spend
The Holly days with your true Friend
In Hopes that Weather will permit.
To your good Parents Pa has writ.
And you and Ned and Frank can ride
Your Ponies by the Chariot's side.

I am desired to say that Nan
Expects such Sport with Cousin Fan.
She has a Doll from London Town.
With an Egret and Tabby Gown.
She is so proud! But, Jack, we Boys
Can think of better Things than Toys

Hal begs his love. Pray answer quick.
Your faithful loving,
COUSIN DICK.

P. S.—There came gilt Gingerbread
From England in a Box: for Ned
There's a Dragoon: for Francis, too:
But, Jack, I'll save King George for you.

THE yellowed letter, so it runs.
Oft read by sons and sons of sons
Above the formal sheet, outspread.
Dick bent his curly, ribboned head.
With tight grasped goose quill moving slow.
That Christmas season long ago.

'Twas sealed and sent—one must confess.
Ill sealed: a finger burnt, I guess!
Black Pompey rode 'twixt kith and kin.
With ebon face and ivory grin.
To bear such letters to and fro
In Christmas season long ago.

Our fancy paints the Yuletide sport
At hospitable Holly Court—.
How Dick and Nan and Harry ran
To welcome Ned and Frank and Fan
And Jack, with apple cheeks aglow.
In Christmas season long ago.

What mirthful games, what generous cheer.
What sirloins huge, what cider clear.
What "puddefs"—Dicky spelled it thus—
What nut brown turkeys odorous.
What big mince pies in spicy row.
In Christmas season long ago!

As round the hearth the circle smiled
What log fires roared 'neath mantels tiled.
Where, figuring forth the Scripture tale
Blue Jonah fed the azure whale!
What singing sounds, what genial glow
In Christmas season long ago!

What stories told as snug they sat
By Cousin This or Uncle That.
Till Dicky vowed to go to sea.
But Jack a soldier bold would be.
Fight for the King and make a show
In scarlet coat, long, long ago—

All passed, like scenes in shifting fire.
And sailor Dick grew up a squire.
While—strange the change the swift years bring—
Bold Jack fell fighting 'gainst the King
All vanished like the melting snow
Of Christmas season long ago

ALL ABOARD FOR SOME QUEER RIDES!

By UNCLE BOB.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

COME along, now, children, and your Uncle Bob will give you a ride. What kind of a ride would you like best of all? What—aeroplane? Mercy, no! That machine that flies up into the sky and over rivers and fields and towns is too dangerous for children. It will be a long time before the men who invent things will build an aeroplane safe enough to carry little ones like you. For the present you'd just better stick to the earth and not try to go flying away into the air.

So we won't think about taking an aeroplane ride yet. Automobile, did you say? Well, Uncle Bob has no automobile for you today, but he has something that's lots more fun. A pony? Well, not exactly that, but it's something that walks.

Wait till we get the bridle on. There—take the reins and gabble him. Why, what a funny bird! Yes, he's an ostrich. You never rode an ostrich, did you? Some ostriches are too bad tempered for children to ride, but this one has been tamed, and he's all right.

You don't need any saddle on him. Just sit on his shoulders, with your legs down along each side of his neck.

THE OSTRICH RIDING PONY.

His feathers make a nice soft seat for you. He is a very strong bird, and you may have to pull hard on the reins when you want to guide him.

Would you like to have an ostrich for a Christmas present? Well, perhaps a little wagon or one of these nice auto buggies that you run with a pedal and a crank would suit you better. An ostrich that is trained to draw a buggy or carry a passenger on his back costs too much for your Uncle Bob to pay. Ostriches are real rarities, and they come high in this country.

If you think the ostrich is too frisky—and maybe he is, with his long legs and stalky gait—perhaps you'd like a ride on the back of a llama, though it would be difficult to get one of these animals for a Christmas gift and still more difficult to keep it alive and well in the United States. The llama is a sort of camel-like animal that grows in South America. It can live only where the climate is moderate. Too much cold is bad for the llama. In the western and southern regions of South America this very interesting animal lives and thrives. There are many thousands of them, just as there are many thousands of cows in the United States.

The South American people use the llamas, not only for their milk and flesh food, but also as beasts of burden. The llama takes the place of the horse in some of the mountainous regions of Peru and other South American countries. He can carry a pretty heavy load and travel for long distances without getting very tired.

How would you like to have Santa Claus put in your stocking—oh, dear, no, that's not large enough—put down alongside the fireplace a nice big, fat wart hog or wild boar for one of your Christmas presents? Ugh! Well, I don't blame you for feeling that way, but all the same there is such a thing as a wild pig to use as a pony, though pigs are not very popular in that way.

There are many kinds of wild hogs. Colonel Roosevelt knows a good deal about them. He hunted the wild boar in Africa, also the wart hog, and down in Texas he has hunted the peccary, which is a sort of pig also, though not by any means so much like the kind your father may have in his pigpen as the wild boar and the wart hog are. The peccary doesn't really look pig-ish, but he is a pig all the same; he belongs to the great hog family, which is widely distributed over the world.

Now and then a wart hog or a wild boar is caught and tamed, so that a brave young man can ride him. The wart hog belongs to Africa. The wild boar used to be very numerous in England, but that was many, many years ago—long before the present civilization got the upper hand in that island.

But perhaps a sled would suit you better than a wild pig? Very well, this Christmas your Uncle Bob won't try to find you a pig broken to the bridle, but will see if he can't make Santa Claus bring you a sled for Christmas. Sometimes a sled runs away and throws you, but it never bites.

SURFACING OF COUNTRY ROADS

Problems That a Highway Engineer Must Solve.

THREE TYPES OF TOP DRESSING

Sand-Clay, Gravel and Macadam the Materials Used—Character of Rocks Suitable For Building Macademized Roadways Must Be Known.

In an address recently delivered before the Appalachian Engineering association at Winston-Salem, N. C., Dr. Joseph Hyde Pratt, president of the Appalachian Good Roads association, spoke as follows on the surfacing of roads:

"The question of surfacing material for a road is one that is causing road builders considerable trouble, for with the introduction of the automobile, the wear and tear on our public roads, especially of the surfaced roads, is very materially increased. It is not due to the automobile alone, but to a combination of the cutting action of the narrow iron tires of heavy wagons and the suction of the rubber tires of the automobiles. The iron tire has a cutting and grinding action which reduces the surface of the road to a powder and loosens up small fragments, which are readily lifted up and thrown to one side by the suction power of the rubber tire of the automobile. The iron tire alone or the automobile alone would not do such great damage, for the material ground up by the iron tire acts as a protection for the surface of the road beneath it and remains as such protection until blown off by the wind or washed off by heavy rains. When removed, however, the iron tire at once comes in contact with the stone surface of the road and begins to wear it out. The automobile alone would not do anywhere near as much damage to the public roads, as the suction power of the tires would not seriously affect the well surfaced road. It is the combination of the two, however, that causes the great damage that is laid to the automobile.

"For country roads there are three types of surfacing material in use—macadam, sand clay and gravel.

"In considering a macadam road the road engineer has many problems to solve. He must not only be familiar with the method of construction of the macadam road, but he must also know when it is possible to use a thinner layer of stone, thus reducing the cost of construction. He also must be so familiar with this type of road that he will not make a mistake of using too thin a coating of macadam. According to the character of the subsoil and the hardness of the roadbed, the thickness of the macadam will vary from four inches to ten inches. The cost of a four inch macadam is so much less than a ten inch that an engineer will wish to use it as often as possible, and there is often a tendency to use the thin coating where the thicker one would give better results.

"The character of rocks suitable for use in the construction of a macadam road must also be known to the road engineer for the reason that many rocks are not at all adapted for this purpose on account of their softness and lack of minerals that make a good binding surface. The best rocks for this purpose are trap, diabase and gabbro. These rocks are all basic in character and when used as a top dressing for macadam give the very best binding qualities. Many other rocks, as granite, gneiss, quartzite, limestone, etc., have to be used on account of the inaccessibility of rocks of the other type. There is a great variation in granites and gneisses in their chemical composition, those which contain a great deal of hornblende giving the best results in the construction of macadam roads. They are, however, rather soft and wear down quickly if the traffic is very heavy. The limestone, although a soft rock, has exceptionally good binding qualities and makes a good macadam road, but one that has to be watched constantly.

MACADAM ROAD CONSTRUCTION.

[From Southern Good Roads, Lexington, N. C.]

"The sand clay road which is coming into general use throughout many of the southern states is one that the road engineer must know how to build. In some instances this road can be built to better advantage than macadam and will give just as good results. All sand or all clay will not make good sand clay roads, and in building this type of road both the sand and the clay must be tested as to its adaptability to use for this purpose."

THE IDEAL SHETLAND.

Can Be Raised With Profit When Properly Cared For.

Breeding Shetlands is a very profitable and important industry in several sections of this country. The little animals seem to thrive much better in the northern and middle western states. They get along better in the northern states doubtless because of their origin in the rigorous climate of the Shetland Islands. This is true only with reference to their breeding, for the full grown Shetland is a true cosmopolitan, at home in all lands and in all climes, and is perhaps unequaled by any other animal in points of hardiness and endurance. A prominent breeder writes as follows in describing the Shetland's fine points:

A STURDY SHETLAND HEAD.

"The head should not be too fine, and the eye should be prominent, the ears of good size and set well forward. The neck is thick and crested high up, so that the impression is conveyed that the crest extends right up to the ears. This gives appearance of great strength in the neck and, added to the broad shoulders, enables the pony to draw great weights. The neck should be of good length and the back, of course, short. The rib should be very well sprung, any indication of slabsidedness thavoring of the Icelander. The quarters should be as round as an apple and the tail set on moderately high.

"In selecting a pony look for one that is short legged, sturdy in build, thick in the chest, strong in his neck, round in his quarters, pleasant faced and with a nice mane and forelock. The forelock should come between the ears from the top of the crest, and the pony's legs should be sound and strong. The pastern should be springy and the action as smart and trappy as possible."

Stalk Saved in the Silo.

By placing corn in the silo the stalk as well as the grain is preserved for feeding purposes and the whole corn plant becomes available. About 40 per cent of the feeding value of the corn plant is in the stalk, leaves and husks and the other 60 per cent is in the ear. In handling corn as commonly practiced much of the 40 per cent is lost. When corn is cut for silo before lower leaves are dry there is no waste. About twice the amount of dry matter can be stored in the form of silage as in the form of fodder. It has been determined that a cubic foot of hay in the mow contains about 13 pounds of dry matter, while a cubic foot of silage contains about 8½ pounds of dry matter, a cubic foot of space in a silo being worth more than twice an equal space in the mow.

Fred Newville and family will spend some time with the family of W. C. Burdick while Mr. Newville is engaged in finishing his father's house.

J. A. Newville left Friday morning for Traverse City to attend a meeting of the directors of the State Patrons' Fire Insurance Co. He will remain to attend the state grange meeting.

The men of the neighborhood held their second meeting at the schoolhouse on Tuesday evening, December 6, for the purpose of forming plans for the betterment of conditions of farming. At a previous meeting E. J. Coykendall was elected chairman and O. D. Willson secretary, and a plan of specializing in crops had been discussed. It was decided to adopt late strawberries as one of the special crops and Fred Newville and L. D. Willson were appointed to experiment with different varieties to find out which is best adapted to this locality. The secretary had been instructed to find out if there was a market for squashes. No definite report could be given at this meeting. After considerable discussion it was decided to make a permanent organization and the secretary was instructed to procure printed stationery, and the name "Pleasant Valley Co-operative Farmer's Association" was adopted. H. L. Willson, W. C. Burdick and E. J. Coykendall were appointed as a committee to draft by-laws and instructed to correspond with other societies of a similar nature for pointers. These meetings are creating quite an interest among the farmers in this part of the county.

BAY SHORE.

Great, wide, beautiful, wonderful, world,

Mrs. Myers, an aged resident of Hayes, has been seriously ill the past week. She is some better at present writing.

Two Indians died of tuberculosis and one of pneumonia within a week. The native Americans become fewer every year.

Mrs. Orville Atwood, and her son Eugene, who has been very ill with diptheria at his aunt's home in Minneapolis, have returned to Bay Shore.

A young lady from Indianapolis once said: "Why do all the people have log cabins on their lawns." Some of the farmers have been heard saying that if she returned now, she would think steam engines had been added to log cabins for lawn ornamentations.

She Knew Her Business.

For many years in a certain family in Uniontown, Pa., there was an old colored cook who was thrifty and economical, but the old shanty to which she went home every night never had any repairs and was weather beaten and dilapidated.

"Nancy," said the mother in the family, "you seem to be getting along well, but why do you not fix up the shanty, add a spare room, and so forth?"

"Huh," said the old darky, "an' I'd have a spat' nigga every night."—Ladies' Home Journal.

TRAGIC CHRISTMAS DAYS.

World's Greatest Holiday Has Often Been Reddened by Blood.

Christmas, which should be and usually is the merriest day of all the year, has sometimes been reddened by blood shed and blackened by tragedy.

One of the most barbarous of the persecutions against the Christians was begun by Diocletian on Christmas day, A. D. 303, when a church in Nicodemia, filled with Christians, was ordered by him to be set on fire. Every way of egress was barred, and not a single worshiper escaped the flames.

Yuletide in 1066 was a melancholy time in England, which nevertheless always celebrated it with the utmost eagerness, for Harold, the last of the Saxons, had fallen before the Norman conqueror, and on Dec. 25 of that year William the Conqueror was crowned in Westminster abbey. The occasion was signalized by the slaughter of a huge crowd of Anglo-Saxons outside of the church through a mistaken idea that they had risen in revolt.

Exactly two years later there was an uprising of the malcontents in the northern counties who hoped to throw off the Norman yoke. William marched to person against the rebels and directed a universal slaughter. His men surprised several garrisons and put them to the sword. Neither age nor sex was spared, and every house in the disaffected regions was razed to the ground. It is said that over 100,000 men, women and children perished on Dec. 25, 1068.

It was on Christmas day in the year 1170 that Thomas a Becket, the greatest English cleric of his day, ascended the cathedral pulpit at Canterbury and preached what may be called his own funeral sermon. The words he made use of so angered Henry II. that he let fall those fatal words: "If anybody loved me he would rid me of this turbulent priest."

Four knights took him at his word, and on Dec. 29 they slew the prelate before the altar of St. Benedict in the northern transept of Canterbury cathedral.

On Dec. 25, 1384, John Wycliffe died as he was about to preach his Christmas sermon.

One of the saddest Christmases knowo in London was that of the year 1663. The great plague had stricken the city, and the people were dying at the rate of 1,000 a day.

Advice About Mowers.

More mowers are knocked out in cutting weeds than in cutting grass in the meadows. It is a good plan to get a new mower before the old one is entirely out of commission, then the old one can be used for a weed cutter exclusively.

A Christmas Fairy.

In the center of a room place a large round table covered with a green cloth scattered all over with small bunches of evergreen frosted with tinsel. Suspended from the chandelier and hanging just far enough apart to admit a little light from above have garlands sparkling with frost, with the ends fastened to the sides of the table, three-quarters of the way around it. The effect will be that of a tent. The other quarter should be left open, so that one may look inside and see an immense cornucopia covered with silver paper, with its open end toward the front. As though emerging from it the Christmas fairy (a wax doll, sparkling in robes of white and silver) should be poised. A frosted wreath should crown her golden curls, and in her hand she should hold a long silver wand. The cornucopia should seem to be emptying itself into the glittering train of the good fairy.

Bells A-ringing.

Two sorry things there be—
Aye, three—
A nest from which the nestlings have been taken,
A lamb forsaken,
A red rose by the wild wind rudely shaken.

Of glad things there be more—
Aye, four—
A bird above the old nest blithely singing,
A red rose clinging
In safety to a rock, a shepherd bringing
A lamb found in his arms, and Christmas bells a-ringing!

—Willis B. Allen.

A Christmas Game.

A Yuletide version of the donkey party is played thus: On a sheet sketch or paste a design of a Christmas tree. Have each branch of the tree terminate in a circle containing a number, using the numbers from one to ten or one to twenty-five, according to the size of the tree. Each person playing is blindfolded in turn and is given a rosette with which he must "decorate the tree." Each person aims to pin his or her rosette on or near to the highest number of the tree. Each competitor has three trials, the three numbers to which he pins nearest being written down to his credit by the hostess, who keeps tally. The one whose three numbers added together give the largest sum total wins the first prize.

A Small County.

Rhode Island not only is the smallest state in the Union, but it has the smallest county, Bristol, which contains but twenty-five square miles. Eight hundred Bristol counties could be placed within either Custer county, Mont., or San Bernardino county, Cal. Nearly eight counties the size of Bristol could be placed within the confines of the city of Chicago.

A Truthful Excuse.

"Now, don't tell me you were detained by business or any such improbable story as that."

"I won't, my dear. I was chased many blocks out of my way by a bull rhinoceros."

A Christmas Daisy.

CHRISTMAS BERRIES.

Where the Holly Grows and How to Find the Best.

The old fashioned Christmas greens were rosemary, ivy and bay, but in the 2,000 tons of wreathing and decorating material which it is estimated that we now use every year there is a much greater variety. Best loved of all is the glossy, red berried holly. "Holm" was the old English name for it, and it is thought to be identical with the "greenwood tree" of British ballads and of Robin Hood fame. On our side of the Atlantic the American holly (Ilex opaca) is found from Maine, where it grows as a shrub, to North and South Carolina, where it lifts a symmetrical cone of dark, shining leaves set with scarlet berry clusters along a beautiful trunk of gray and silver to the height of seventy or eighty feet.

Delaware and Maryland are usually credited with furnishing the best grades of holly to Christmas markets, but their "Three X" brand, as seen after shipment to northern cities, is not so finely berried as the Carolina holly, plentiful in the region around Asheville. In America there are three distinct grades of holly. Trees that stand on dry, barren hillsides, as a rule, are heavily laden with thick, knoblike clusters of berries, but their leaves are likely to be small, yellowish and imperfect. Follow some little stream to a sheltered, sunny glade where a holly trunk gleams white, and there you will find leaves large, dark and perfect with a thick scarlet fruitage lighting the shadows evenly all over the tree.

Christmas In Dixie.

MARION KAY'S CHRISTMAS GIFT

Seeking a Present For Mother, She Finds a Husband.

IT was just for a moment that Marion pondered, just for a brief space that temptation warred with training, but in that half minute a lynx eyed store detective had pounced upon her. The holiday shoppers thronged the place. There was no time to waste following a shoplifter outside of the store to establish a clear case. Almost before she had realized what had happened Marion was being hustled over to the elevators.

A few minutes later she stood before a sharp featured woman at a roll top desk who had taken her name and address and was putting her through a series of cross questions. But the inquisition was broken suddenly by the appearance of a tall, clean cut young fellow who walked up to the desk of the head detective and checked her questioning.

"I saw Miss Perkins make this arrest," he said quietly. "She has made a mistake."

"But the girl admits that she stole these," sharply retorted the woman, holding up some dainty creations of lace.

"I think I would admit murder," laughed the man, "if I were ever lined up in here. It's pure nervousness. There was a woman standing beside her who slipped the things in her pocket. I suppose the rest of the plan was to follow her to the street and pick her pocket after she had carried them safely out of the store."

"Of course if you say so"— began the offended Miss Perkins.

"I do say so," he answered quietly as he tore from the book the page on which Marion's answers had been entered. "and if Miss Kay," glancing at the sheet, "will excuse us I will see that she is not subject to further annoyance. You see," he added to Marion, "we have so much trouble around the holidays that mistakes are bound to occur."

"SHE HAS MADE A MISTAKE."

He lightly touched her arm and led her from the room. Already another woman had taken her place, and others eyed her enviously as she passed. Chatting pleasantly, the man led her to the elevator, and presently Marion found herself on the street again.

That night her fears were renewakened when a card engraved with the name of James Dalton was brought to her. It was in Boyce & Dalton's store that the incident had occurred. Perhaps they had found out, after all.

She gave a sigh of relief when the young man of the morning rose before her.

"You will pardon my intrusion," he began, "but since these unfortunate things were the cause of so much trouble I thought it only fair that you should have them."

He held toward her a parcel that Marion instinctively knew contained the coveted caps. She shook her head.

"I cannot take them," she walled. "I don't deserve them. I did steal them."

"Technically, yes," said Dalton. "I saw you slip them in your pocket. But I knew that if Miss Perkins had not been so quick you would have replaced them. I saw the struggle in your face. Were they for your mother?"

Marion nodded.

"You see," she began, "it is my first Christmas away from home. When father died and the money was all lost I had to go to work for a living.

"I am addressing envelopes at home to make some extra money. Before I always made mother's caps. But now I have not the time. I had some money all saved up to buy two when at the office they took up contributions for presents for the timekeeper and some of the others. It's a big office, you know, and it took all my Christmas money."

"And you came over in the noon hour to see if there were any cheaper ones you could still afford," he broke in. "Temptation was strong upon you, and just for one tiny moment you felt. I could see the whole process in your face."

"You knew that I had taken them when you spoke this noon?" she gasped.

"Certainly," was the smiling answer. "I knew that you had stolen them, but that you were not a thief. I could not bear to see you posted as a shoplifter, and when Perkins took you up I followed."

"But I ought to be punished," she cried accusingly.

"You are punished," he declared. "The memory of those moments upstairs will be punishment enough."

"I can't take them," she said wistfully. "I couldn't send them to mother."

"See here," he suggested. "Suppose you buy them from me. You send them home and pay me a little each week. I know just what a graft those presentation things are in a big office. I've stopped them in my store, but I know what it is."

"But it would take so long to pay back," she objected. "I cannot pay up more than a quarter a week."

"I'll let you have them at wholesale price," he offered. "We shall have to put them on the bargain counter after the rush anyway. Nice old ladies who wear lace caps are growing very few."

"You're awfully good to me," sobbed Marion. "You can't understand how it hurts not to have anything to send mother. I would not have taken them for myself, but when I thought of poor mother wondering why I did not send a present after all the fairy tales I've written her about how well I've been doing—just for a moment it seemed that I had to have them."

"But I do understand," he insisted. "I can recall a Christmas when my dinner was dry bread because I was too faint from hunger to fight for a place in line where they were feeding the poor. It is because I do understand that I sought to bring a happy ending to a little tragedy of poverty."

The simple words seemed to establish a bond of sympathy between them. Impulsively she caught his hand.

"But I'm selfish," he persisted. "I want to ask a favor of you in return."

"What is it?" she cried eagerly.

"I want you to share my Christmas dinner," he explained. "My sister, who keeps house for me, is traveling in Europe. Won't you dine with me and go to the theater afterward?"

Marion nodded shyly, and with a cheerful "That's an engagement, then," he took his leave.

Marion slept little that night. There was something about Dalton that won him regard from all. His quick appreciation of her temptation and his ready sympathy for her troubles had won her heart. She knew that it was foolish to build castles in the air, but there was some comfort to her in the thought that she at last had a friend in the great, inhospitable city; that she would not, after all, eat her first Christmas dinner away from home in the cheap boarding house.

The dinner ordered in advance was perfect, the visit to the theater was a genuine treat, and when Dalton suggested that they drop into a restaurant for an after theater bite she was glad to prolong her happiness.

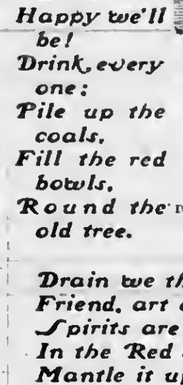
"I am purely selfish," he answered when she sought to thank him for the treat he had given her. "I guess we are always selfish. I had noticed you several times in the store making little purchases, and I wanted to know you. I was hoping that I might get a chance to speak."

"But why should you want to?" she asked wonderingly.

"Because I love you," he said simply, "I did not mean to speak so soon, but I can't help it. Ever since the first time I saw you I have wanted you for my wife. Is there any hope?"

Her eyes made answer, and he drew a case from his pocket. "I have carried it for weeks," he said, "for I knew that my chance would come. Will you wear it, little woman?"

For answer she held out her left hand. "This is the best Christmas present a girl ever had," she whispered as he slipped the solitaire on her finger.—C. B. Sutcliffe.



"IT IS BECAUSE I DO UNDERSTAND."

THE MAHOGANY TREE

Christmas is here.
Winds whistle shrill,
Icy and chill.
Little care we.
Little we fear
Weather without Sheltered about
The mahogany tree.

Once on the boughs
Birds of rare plume
Sang in its bloom.
Night birds are we.
Here we carouse,
Singing like them,
Perched round the stem
Of the jolly old tree.

LAUGHTER AND WIT FLASHING SO FREE.

Here let us sport,
Boys, as we sit,
Laughter and wit
Flashing so free.
Life is but short.
When we are gone
Let them sing on
Round the old tree.

Evenings we knew
Happy as this.
Faces we miss
Pleasant to see.
Kind hearts and true,
Gentle and just,
Peace to your dust!
We sing round the tree.

Care, like a dun,
Lurks at the gate.
Let the dog wait.
Happy we'll be!
Drink, every one;
Pile up the coals,
Fill the red bowls,
Round the old tree.

DRINK, EVERY ONE.

Drain we the cup.
Friend, art afraid?
Spirits are laid
In the Red sea.
Mantle it up;
Empty it yet.
Let us forget
Round the old tree.

Sorrows, begone!
Life and its ills,
Duns and their bills,
Bid we to flee.
Come with the dawn,
Blue devil sprite;
Leave us tonight
Round the old tree.

His Christmas Gift.

The following story is told of a little boy, three years old, who lives in Atlanta:

His mother had been telling him the story of the birth of Christ.

The next morning he went to the trunk which contained his clothing, took out a cloak and then put his cap on.

"Where are you going?" he was asked.

And the little fellow replied: "I'm going to God and you have all got to go with me. I've got to take that poor little baby some Santy Claus."

CHAPTER XIV.

WHILE they were talking a tugboat towing a pile driver came into view. Boyd asked the meaning of its presence in this part of the river.

"I don't know," answered Big George, staring intently. "Yonder looks like another one behind it, with a raft of piles."

"I thought all the company traps were up stream."

"So they are. I can't tell what they're up to."

A half hour later, when the new flotilla had come to anchor a short distance below, Emerson's companion began to swear.

"I might have known it."

"What?"

"Marsh aims to 'jerk' us."

"What is that?"

"He's going to build a trap on each side of this one and cut off our fish."

"Good Lord! Can he do that?"

"Sure! Why not? The law gives us 600 yards both ways. As long as he stays outside of that limit he can do anything he wants to."

"Then of what use is our trap? The salmon follow definite courses close to the shore, and if he intercepts them before they reach us—why, then we'll get only what he lets through."

"That's his plan," said Big George sorrily. "It's an old game, but it don't always work. You can't tell what salmon will do till they do it. I've studied this point of land for five years, and I know more about it than anybody else except the Creator. If the fish hug the shore, then we're up against it, but I think they strike in about here; that's why I chose this site. We can't tell, though, till the run starts. All we can do now is see that them people keep their distance."

The "lead" of a salmon trap consists of a row of web hung piling that runs out from the shore for many hundred feet, forming a high, stout fence that turns the schools of fish and leads them into cunningly contrived inclosures, or "pounds," at the outer extremity, from which they are "hailed" as needed. These corrals are so built that once the fish are inside they cannot escape. The entire structure is devised upon the principle that the salmon will not make a short turn, but will swim as nearly as possible in a straight line. It looked to Boyd as if Marsh, by blocking the line of progress above and below, had virtually destroyed the efficiency of the new trap, rendering the cost of its construction a total loss.

That evening when he had seen the night shift started Emerson decided to walk up to Cherry's house, for he was worried over the day's developments and felt that an hour of the girl's society might serve to clear his thoughts.

Cherry's house was situated a short distance above the cannery which served as Willis Marsh's headquarters, and Boyd's path necessarily took him past his enemy's very stronghold. Finding the tide too high to permit of passing beneath the dock, he turned up among the buildings, where, to his surprise, he encountered his own day foreman talking earnestly with a stranger.

The fisherman started guiltily.

"What are you doing here, Larsen?" asked Boyd.

"I just walked up after supper to have a talk with an old mate."

"Who is he?"

"He's Mr. Marsh's foreman."

Emerson spoke out bluntly: "See here, I don't like this. These people have caused me a lot of trouble already, and I don't want my men hanging around here."

"Oh, that's all right," said Larsen carelessly. "Him and me used to fish together." And as if this were a sufficient explanation he turned back to his conversation, leaving Emerson to proceed on his way.

He found Cherry at home and, tiding himself into one of her easy chairs, relieved his mind of the day's occurrences.

"Marsh is building those traps purely out of spite," she declared indignantly when he had finished. "He doesn't need any more fish—he has plenty of traps farther up the river."

"To be sure! It looks as if we might have to depend upon the gill netters."

"We will know before long. If the fish strike in where George expects Marsh will be out a pretty penny."

"And if they don't strike in where George expects we will be out all the expense of building that trap."

"Exactly! It's a fascinating business, isn't it? It's a business in which the unexpected is forever happening. But the stakes are high, and—I know you will succeed. By the way," she continued, "have you heard the historic story about the pink salmon?"

He shook his head.

"Well, there was a certain shrewd old cannery man in Washington state whose catch consisted almost wholly of pink fish. As you know, that variety does not bring as high a price as red salmon, like these. Well, finding that he could not sell his catch, owing to the popular prejudice about color, this man printed a lot of striking can labels, which read, 'Best Grade Pink Salmon, Warranted Not to Turn Red In the Can.' They tell me it worked like a charm."

Greatly relieved Boyd was about to go on, when a slurpery, like a signal, came in the woman's voice, a cry which turned to a genuine wail of distress. The distract heard a man's voice cursing in answer, and then the sound of a scuffle, followed at length by a choking cry that brought him bounding into the building. He ran forward recklessly, but before he had covered half the distance he collided violently with a piece of machinery and went sprawling to the floor. A glance upward revealed the dim outlines of a "topper," and showed him farther down the building, silhouetted briefly against the lesser darkness of the windows, two struggling figures. As he regained his footing, something rushed past him—man or animal he could not tell which, for its feet made no more sound upon the floor than those of a wolf dog. Then, as he lurched forward, he heard a man cry out, and found himself in the midst of turmoil. His hands encountered a human body, and he seized it, only to be hurled aside as if with a giant's strength. Again he clinched with a man's form, and bore it to the floor, cursing at the darkness and reaching for its throat. His antagonist raised his voice in wild clamor, while Boyd braced himself for another assault from those huge hands he had met a moment before. But it did not come. Instead he heard a cry from the woman, an answer in a deeper voice and then swift, pattering footsteps growing fainter. Meanwhile the man with whom he was locked was fighting desperately, with hands and feet and teeth, shouting hoarsely. Other footsteps sounded now, this time approaching, then at the door a lantern flared. A watchman came running down between the lines of machinery, followed by other figures half revealed.

Boyd had pinned his antagonist against the cold sides of a retort at last and with fingers clutched about his throat was beating his head viciously against the iron when by the lantern's gleam he caught one glimpse of the face, ran his hand from off him and loosed his hold with a startled exclamation. Released from the grip of it, had nearly made an end of him. Willis Marsh staggered to his feet.

The man was wounded, badly mangled as he saw by the red stream which gushed down over his breast. Marsh leveled a trembling finger at Boyd and cried hysterically:

"There he is, men. He tried to murder me. I—I'm hurt. I'll have him arrested."

The seriousness of the accusation struck the young man on the instant. He turned upon the group.

"I didn't do that. I heard a fight going on and ran in here"—

"He's a liar," the wounded man interrupted shrilly. "He's stabbed me! See?" He tried to strip the shirt from his wounds, then fell to chattering and shaking. "O God, I'm hurt!" He staggered to a packing case and sank upon it, weakly fumbling at his sodden shoulder.

"I didn't do that," repeated Boyd. "I don't know who stabbed him. I didn't."

"Then who did?" some one demanded.

"What are you doing in here? You'd a killed him in a minute," said the man with the lantern.

"We'll fix you for this," a third voice threatened.

"Listen," Boyd said in a tone to make them pause. "There has been a mistake here. I was passing the building when I heard a woman scream, and I rushed in to prevent Marsh from choking her to death."

"A woman!" chorused the group.

"That's what I said."

"Where is she now?"

"I don't know. I didn't see her at all. I grappled with the first person I ran into. She must have gone out as you came in." Boyd indicated the side door, which was still ajar.

"It's a lie," screamed Marsh.

"It's the truth," stoutly maintained Emerson. "And there was a man with her too. Who was she, Marsh? Who was the man?"

"She—she—I don't know."

"Don't lie."

"I'm hurt," reiterated the stricken man feebly. Then, seeing the bewilderment in the faces about him, he burst out anew: "Don't stand there like a lot of fools. Why don't you get him?"

"THERE HE IS, MEN. HE TRIED TO MURDER ME."

"If I stabbed him I must have had a knife," Emerson said, again checking the forward movement. "You may search me if you like. See?" He opened his coat and displayed his belt.

"He's got a six shooter," some one said.

"Yes, and I may use it," said Emerson quietly.

"If he hasn't a knife then he must have had a friend with him."

"Then tell your men what we were doing in here and how you came to be mlone with us in the dark." Emerson stared at his accuser curiously, but the trust's manager seemed at a loss. "See here, Marsh, if you will tell us whom you were choking maybe we can get at the truth of this affair."

Without answering Marsh rose and, leaning upon the watchman's arm, said:

"Help me up to the house I'm hurt. Send the launch to the upper plant for John. He knows something about medicine." With no further word he made his way out of the building, followed by the mystified fishermen.

No one undertook to detain Emerson, and he went his way, wondering what lay back of the night's adventure. He racked his brain for a hint as to the identity of the woman and the reason of her presence alone with Marsh in such a place.

CHAPTER XV.

THE main body of salmon struck into the Kalvik river on the first day of July. For a week past the run had been slowly growing while the canneries tested themselves, but on the opening day of the new month the horde issued boldly forth from the depths of the sea, and the battle began in earnest.

At times they swam with cleaving fins exposed. Again they churned the placid waters until swift coobers raced across the shallow bars like tidal waves, while the deeper channels were shot through with shadowy forms or pierced by the lightning glint of silvered bellies. They streamed in with the flood tide to retreat again with the ebb, but there was neither haste nor caution in their progress. They had come in answer to the breeding call of the season, and its exhilaration was upon them driving them relentlessly onward. They had no voice against its overmastering spell.

The time had come for man to take his toll.

At Emerson's cannery there fell a sudden panic, for fifty fishermen quit. Returning from the banks on the night before the run started, they stacked their gear and notified Boyd Emerson of their determination. Then, despite his utmost efforts to dissuade them, they took their packs upon their shoulders and marched up the beach to Willis Marsh's plant. Larsen, the day foreman, acted as their spokesman, and Boyd recognized too late the result of that conversation he had interrupted on the night of his visit to Cherry.

This defection diminished his boat crew by more than half, and, while the shoremen stoutly maintained their loyalty, the chance of putting up a pack seemed lost. Boyd swallowed his pride and went straightway to his enemy. He found Marsh well recovered from his flesh wound of a week or more before, yet extremely cautious for his safety, as he evidenced by conducting the interview before witnesses.

"We are short handed, and I gave instructions to secure every available man," he announced at the conclusion of Emerson's story. "It is not my fault if your men prefer to work for me."

"Then you force me to retaliate," said Boyd. "I shall hire your men out from under you."

Marsh laughed provokingly.

"Try it! I am a good organizer, if nothing else. If you send emissaries to my plants it will cause certain violence, and I think you had better avoid that, for we outnumber you ten to one."

Emerson left in disgust. Nor had he hit upon any method of relief when Cherry came down to the plant on the following morning. She inquired straightway:

"What are you doing about it? You can't afford to lose an hour."

"I have sent a man to each of the other plants to hire fishermen at any price, but I have no hope that they will succeed. Marsh has his crews too well in hand for that."

Cherry nodded. "They wouldn't dare quit him now. He'd never let them return to this country if they did. Meanwhile the rest of your force is on the banks, I presume."

"Yes."

"How many boats have you?"

"Ten."

"Heavens! And this is the first day of the run! It looks bad, doesn't it? Has the trap begun to fill?"

"No. George is down there now. I guess Marsh succeeded in corking it. Meanwhile all the other plants are working while my Chinks are playing fantan. I seem to bring misfortune upon every one connected with me, don't I?" he added. "I'm afraid I'm a poor sort."

How boyish he was, the girl thought tenderly, yet how splendidly brave he had been throughout the fight! There was a voiceless, maternal yearning in her heart as she asked him gravely:

"If you fail now it will mean—the end of everything, will it not?"

"Yes." He squared his tired shoulders. "But I am not beaten yet. You taught me never to give up, Cherry. If I have to go back home without a catch and see Hilliard take this plant over, why—I'll begin once more at something new, and some day I will succeed. But I shan't give up. I'll can what salmon we catch and then begin all over again next season."

"And—suppose you don't succeed? Suppose Hilliard won't carry you?"

"Then I shall try something else. Maybe I shall go to mining again. I don't know. Anyhow, she would not let me grow disheartened if she were here. She wouldn't let me quit. She isn't that sort."

Cherry Malotte stirred and shifted her gaze uncertainly to the gleaming bay. Abreast of them the fleet of fishing boats were drifting with the tide. In the distance others were dotted clear away to where the opal ocean lay. A tug was passing, and she saw the sun flash from the cargo in its tow, while the faint echo of a song came wafting to her ears. She stood so for a long moment, fighting manfully with herself, then wheeled upon him suddenly. There was a new tone in her voice as she said:

"If you will let me have one of your launches I may be able to help you."

"How?" he demanded quickly.

"Never mind how. It's a long chance and hardly worth trying, but—may I take the boat?"

"Certainly," said he. "There's one lying at the dock."

He led her to the shore and saw her aboard, then waved goodby and walked moodily back to the office, gratified that she should try to help him, yet certain that she could not succeed where he and George had failed.

"Fingerless" Fraser had breakfasted late, as was his luxurious custom, and shortly before noon, in the course of his dissatisfied meanderings, he found his friend in the office, lost in somber thought. It was the first time in many weeks that he had seen this mood in Boyd, and after a fruitless effort to make him talk he fell into his old habit of imaginary reading, droning away to himself as if from a printed page:

"'Your stay among us has not been very pleasant, has it?' Mr. Emerson inquired.

"'Not so that you could notice it,' replied our hero. 'I don't like fish, and I never did.'

"'That is the result of prejudice; the fish is a noble animal,' Mr. Emerson declared.

"'He's not an animal at all,' our hero gently corrected. 'He's a biped—a regular wild biped, without either love of home or affection for his children. The salmon is of a low order of intelligence and has a Queen Anne slant to his roof. No person with a retreating forehead like that knows very much. The only other member of the animal kingdom that is as foolish as the salmon is Alton Clyde. The fish has got a shade the best of it over him, but as for friendship and the gentler emotions—why, the salmon hasn't got them at all. The only thing he's got is a million eggs and a sense of direction. If he had a spark of intelligence he'd lay one egg a year, like a hen, and thus live for a million years. But does he? Not on your Sarony! He's a spendthrift and turns his eggs loose a hatful at a time. He's worse than a shotgun. And then, too, he's as clannish as a Harvard graduate and don't associate with nobody out of his own set. No, sir! Give me a warm blooded animal that suckles its young. I'll take a farmer every time.'

"'These are points I had never considered,' said Mr. Emerson, 'but every business has its drawbacks, you'll agree. If I have failed as a host, what can I do to entertain you while you grace our midst?'

"'You can do most anything,' remarked his handsome companion. 'You can climb a tree or do anything except fish all the time.'

"'But it is a dark night without, and I fear some mischief is afoot.'

"'True! But yonder beauteous gel.'"—

Roused by the familiarity of these lines, Emerson looked up from his preoccupation and smiled at Fraser's serious pantomime.

"What about that 'beauteous gel' and the mischief that is afoot?"

"Oh, I heard all about your trouble, I just left the pesthouse."

"The what?"

"The pesthouse—Clyde's joint. Ain't he a calamity?"

"In what way?"

"Well, I like silence and quietude. I'm a fool about my quiet, but Clyde"—He paused as if in search for suitable expression. "Well, whenever I try to say anything he interrupts me." After another pause he went on: "He's dead sore on this place, too, and whines around like a litter of pups. He says he was misled into coming up here and has a hunch he's going to lose his bank roll."

"Last night's episode frightened him, I dare say."

"Yes. Ever since he got that wallop on the burr in Seattle a guinea pig could lick him hand to hand. You'd think that ten thou' he put up was all the wealth of the Incas."

"The wealth of what?"

"Incas! That's a tribe of rich Mexicans. However, I suppose I'd hang to my coin the same way he does if I had a mayonnaise head like his. He's an awful shine as a business man."

"So he's homesick, eh?"

"Sure! Offered to sell me his stock." Fraser threw back his head and gave vent to one of his rare laughs. "Ain't that a rave?"

"Here he comes now," Boyd announced, with a glance out the window, and the next instant Alton Clyde entered, a picture of dejection.

"Gee! This is fierce, isn't it?" the clubman began, flinging himself into the nearest chair. "They tell me it's all off finally. What are you going to do?"

"Put up what fish I can with a short crew," said Boyd.

"We'll lose a lot of money."

"Probably."

A CHRISTMAS TELEPHONE.

By ALICE E. ALLEN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

DOROTHY left her playthings in a heap on the floor. She pulled a chair to the telephone on the desk. She climbed into it. Her curly head reached the mouthpiece. She unhooked the receiver and put it to her ear, just as father did.

"Number?" said a voice so quickly that Dorothy jumped.

"Two-two-nine-six," she said clearly. That was what father said.

In a minute, close to Dorothy's ear it seemed, another voice spoke.

"Hello!" it said pleasantly.

"Is this Santa Claus?" asked Dorothy as much like father as possible.

"Yes," said the voice sweetly. "What is it?"

Dorothy hesitated.

"You don't sound just like Santa Claus," she said.

"Well, I am," the voice laughed. "But who is this—some little girl?"

"YOU'RE MR. JOHN GRANT'S LITTLE GIRL?"

"I'm Dorothy Grant."

"Dorothy Grant?" The voice seemed surprised. Dorothy hastened to explain.

"Dorothy Graat, 234 Park place," she said. "Don't you know me?"

"Oh," cried the voice, "of course I do now! But I've never seen you, have I? You are Mr. John Grant's little girl, are you not, Dorothy?"

"Yes," said Dorothy. "But, you see, he isn't home. He isn't ever, 'cept Sundays and Christmases and Thanksgivings and such days. That's why I had to ask you. There isn't any one in the house 'cept Rhoda and Sofia. Sofia's so old she's deaf. You aren't deaf yet, are you, Santa Claus?"

"Not yet," laughed the voice. "I can hear you quite well. Go on."

"Sofia takes care of the house and father, and Rhoda takes care of me. But they don't understand about Evelyn, and tomorrow, when father 'll be here, it will be too late, 'cause tomorrow's Christmas. And you must give Christmas gifts on Christmas, mustn't you?"

A FREE Prescription ADVICE

From a physician of 32 years' practice in colleges, sanatoriums and general practice. Weak, nervous men, to gain strength and vigor."

So great was my sympathy for sufferers in the early years of my experience that I have made it a special study, and prepared two prescriptions, one for men under 50 and one for men over 50 years of age. In my declining years, I want every man to have the benefit of my long years of careful study, research and long experience.

I am now 73 years old and as serious minded as at 40 and the rest of my life will be spent in aiding suffering humanity. I realize that my time is short, but while I have power to aid men and women who are helpless and seeking relief, I will do so. There has been a great many discouraged men who thought relief in this world was impossible, but let me send you my free prescriptions and a list of private lectures I have written, the result of study since I became a specialist to student classes, way back in 1870. In that time I have cured many cases that were pronounced incurable.

YOU NEED AID. Let me help you. Call at my office, if possible, and consult with your former standing among men. If short, let me assist you to be all you were before.

If you are suffering from lack of vigor, lame back or weakened manhood, or any difficulties, LET ME SEND YOU A TREATISE in a plain sealed envelope that you can read in your own home. I am certain that you will thank me every day in your life after you have tested it for yourself.

Take advantage of this offer NOW before it is too late. Address me personally

CHRISTMAS TREE FRUIT IS RIPE.

"Yes," said the voice. "What is it you want, Dorothy?"

"It's about Evelyn. I didn't hear it myself till Rhoda told me today when she dressed me—that is, I didn't hear all of it. You don't know Evelyn, do you?"

"Why, no; I think not."

"I was just about sure you didn't, 'cause, you see, you've never given her a single thing, she says. And she's older'n me—a little. She's always been lame, but she's never been sick till now. Think of being sick at Christmas time! And the doctor says she must have fruit and nice things to eat. And she can't, you see, because Rhoda says it took every cent there was saved to pay up the doctor."

"Where does Evelyn live?"

"It's 22 Monroe street. I've been there with Rhoda. And it's up ever and ever so many stairs. I don't know how you'll ever get there. Are you so very stout?"

"Not so very. I climb stairs yet quite easily."

"I knew you'd help if you only knew about it!" cried Dorothy.

"What does Evelyn need most besides the nice things to eat?"

"She needs most everything," said Dorothy. "I bought her a Teddy bear with my own money. She just had to have him. But a dolly is quite necessary too. Don't you think so?"

"Very. And some picture books?"

"Oh! And a chair that won't hurt her back—a soft, comfy one."

"A pretty gown"—

"And some slippers"—

"And flowers"—

"Most anything you have left over!" cried Dorothy in great excitement. "Evelyn 'd like anything, 'cause she hasn't anything to begin with."

"I see," said the voice gently. "We'll have a lovely Christmas for Evelyn. Now, isn't there something you'd like for yourself, Dorothy?"

Dorothy hesitated.

"There is—one thing," she said slowly. "I've never even told father. But I do want it dreadfully."

"What is it?" encouraged the voice.

"I want—a—a mother all my very own," said Dorothy. "Barbara has one and Connie. And Maude has one and two grandmothers besides. Why, even Evelyn has a mother—a sick one. And I would like another one."

"Yes," said the voice.

"I'd like a pretty little one with dimples, like Connie's mother. She isn't hardly ever real cross, even when Connie tears her gowns. And she kisses Connie real often, and puts her to bed every single night, and tells her stories. But most any kind would do if father liked her. She'd have to stay here, you know."

A mischievous little laugh sounded in Dorothy's ear. But in a minute the voice said:

"Is that all, Dorothy?"

"Yes, thank you," said Dorothy, as father had taught her.

"You dear, quaint little thing!" cried the voice. "May I come to see you soon?"

"Why, of course, Santa Claus," said Dorothy.

* * * * * * *

"But wasn't Santa Claus funny to ask that, father?" asked Dorothy. Father had surprised her by coming home before her bedtime, and she was telling him all that had happened.

"BUT WASN'T SANTA CLAUS FUNNY TO ASK THAT?"

"Of course he's coming. Doesn't he always? Why should he ask if he could?"

Father chuckled.

"What number did you ask for, Dolly?" he said.

"Two-two-nine-six," said Dorothy, "the one you always say."

Father gave a long low whistle. Then he asked:

"Was Santa's voice deep and gruff?"

Dorothy shook her head.

"It was low and sweet, and every little way it had laughs in it," she said.

After Dorothy had gone her happy way to dreamland Mr. John Grant went to the telephone.

"Two-two-nine-six," he said.

In a moment there came to him a voice, low and sweet, with laughs in it.

"Is this Miss Annie Claus?" he asked.

"Yes. And this is Mr. Grant?"

"Yes. You had a conversation with my little daughter this morning, Miss Claus?"

"Yes—bless the child! How did she know me and my number?"

"She didn't, but—bless the child—she tried the only number she remembered and found you. She was trying to get Santa Claus."

"Santa Claus?"

"Yes."

Annie Claus laughed.

"I understand now," she cried. "That was why she asked if I were deaf yet—and stout. How funny and sweet and dear of her! Well, thanks to her and to Evelyn, I've played Santa's part and had the loveliest Christmas I ever had so far."

"It was good of you, Annie," said John Grant.

"Good?" Annie Claus questioned. "One would do anything for Dorothy."

"Would one?"

"Anything one could," amended Annie in suspicious haste.

"You have Evelyn's gifts ready?" asked Mr. Grant.

"All ready. You should see"—

"And Dorothy's?"

"Dorothy's?"

"The one thing she wants—she told me, Annie. Is it ready?"

"Not quite."

"But, Annie, tomorrow is Christmas, and Christmas gifts must be given on Christmas."

"IS THIS MISS ANNIE CLAUS?"

A mischievous little laugh rippled over the wire.

"Dorothy stipulated that in the selection of her gift her father must be pleased," said Annie Claus.

"That needn't bother you. You have known his preference for a year and more, haven't you?"

"Ye-es, unless he has changed his mind."

"He hasn't, Annie, and never will. Don't you believe that?"

"Ye-es."

"Well?"

"Come over in my Christmas tree tomorrow night, you and Dorothy. Evelyn will be here. We'll talk things over."

"Thank you; we'll come without fail. But Dorothy—and Dorothy's father—will be sadly disappointed if Dorothy's gift isn't ready."

"Perhaps it will be."

"Annie—really?"

But Annie Claus had rung off.

Eight Millions For Toys.

The real amount of cash money paid out in the United States alone for toys that on Christmas morning gladden the hearts of American children is conservatively estimated at $8,000,000. This means about 60 cents apiece for the something like 13,000,000 of five to twelve year old children. The children of no other country have so great an amount expended for toys for them.

Christmas Candle and Tree.

The old custom of the lighting of the Christmas candle, which is still observed by the Irish peasantry, chiefly at Candlemas or Old Christmas day, has become quite obsolete in England. A relic of the observance in England is, however, preserved. An old stone socket carved with a lamb is shown in the buttery of St. John's college, Oxford, which was used in former days for holding the Christmas candle. The Christmas tree was practically unknown in England a little more than half a century ago. It was introduced into this country from Germany, and the Christmas tree has been a popular feature of Christmas eve festivities for centuries, by the prince consort shortly after his marriage.—Westminster Gazette.

CHRISTMAS ON THE PLANTATION

By ELBERT J. LEE.

IN the antebellum days the negroes enjoyed a whole week of rest at Christmas time. Now that they are hired hands instead of slaves they cling to this privilege, refusing to work while the holiday spirit is in the air. This means that Christmas lasts a week. Every negro—man, woman and pickaninny—makes the most of the week, and the fun runs high. On many plantations the negroes are almost as much a part of the "plant" as they were during slavery. They have the feeling that, inasmuch as they belong to the place the rest of the year, the place belongs to them for the holiday week, and they take advantage of the opportunity to do as they please.

For weeks in advance the holidays are anticipated with joy, though not with any great degree of preparation. The plantation negro, generally speaking, lets tomorrow take care of itself. But some of the more provident ones begin to store up for Christmas. The fattest pumpkin is picked up from the corn rows and put away for pie material. The turkey gobbler in the back yard is fattened for the occasion. Old Aunty hides her jars of preserves from the younger generation. Uncle Ike becomes a confederate in the happy conspiracy for saving things to augment the Christmas spread.

Christmas morning the negro children are up bright and early. There is method in their early rising. From time immemorial southern people, both white and black, have cherished the belief that there is much virtue in being the first to shout "Christmas gift!" in meeting a friend on the morning of the great day. In some sections this priority of greeting is expected to result in the forfeit of a gift from the other party. Accordingly the little negroes make a point of running up to the big plantation house and greeting the white people with a lusty "Christmas gift!" in the hope of receiving at least a big red apple, a fresh baked pie or a stick of striped candy such as the general store on the plantation is sure to keep in stock.

The best fiddler on the plantation is the hardest worked man of all, but he enjoys every scrape of his bow, while the dance goes merrily on. The Christmas dance is a continued story. It begins Christmas eve and continues every night in the week. If the weather is not too cold the big barn floor is cleared for the dance, but if heat is required the "function" takes place in the biggest room of the biggest negro house on the place, with a roaring fire in the fireplace and plenty of cheer on the kitchen table, both solid and liquid.

Christmas week is spent in visiting. The negroes go from cabin to cabin on their own plantation, or they hitch up the work mule or steers and visit friends on a neighboring plantation. Everywhere the Christmas spirit prevails. If one family is short of this world's cheer another family is glad to share its own. The Christmas spirit on a cotton plantation is much more in evidence than in a prosperous white folks' town.

ETIQUETTE OF GIFT GIVING.

Suggestions on Bestowing and Receiving Christmas Presents.

There is an etiquette governing the giving and receiving of presents, as there is about most things, because there is always a best way to do everything, says the Ladies' Home Journal. If we penetrate below the surface of the little courteous conventions we shall find that consideration for the feelings of others underlies all. Do not try to make your gift look as though it cost more than you paid for it. Aside from the paltry spirit of such giving, it is a delusion and a snare, for next year your offering must seem to be as fine as the one of this season or you may appear to have been less anxious to please your friend.

Take the time to write a few words of loving or cordial greeting on the cards that accompany your gifts. Without that evidence of individual personal thought the offering of even the finest present appears somewhat graceless and perfunctory. A message on a card is better than a note because more informal, and one should not seem to make much of a gift. Having your presents daintily wrapped is not less a matter of courtesy. Let their outward appearance commend them. Leave them or send them to their destination the day before Christmas unless you can insure their reception early in the day. A tardy gift appears like an afterthought.

A Merry Christmas Jest.

An old chronicle contains the following quaintly worded anecdote:

"There was some time an old knight who, being disposed to make himself merry in a Christmas time, sent for many of his tenants and poor neighbors with their wives to dinner, when having made meat to be set on the table would suffer no man to drink till he that was master over his wife should sing a caroll; great niceness there was who should be the musician. Yet with much adoe, looking one upon another, after a dry hemme or two, a dreaming companion drew out as much as he dare toward an old fashioned ditty. When having made an end, to the great comfort of the beholders, at last it came to the women's table, when likewise commandment was given that there should no drinke be touched till she that was master over her husband had sung a Christmas caroll; whereupon they fell all to such a singing that there was never heard such a catterwaling peece of musicke. Whereat the knight laughed heartily, that it did him halfe as muche good as a corner of his Christmas pie."

Christmas Superstitions.

There are many Christmas superstitions, long held as articles of faith, that are to be recalled. Among these are the beliefs that oxen kneel in their stalls at midnight on Christmas eve in adoration of the Nativity and for one hour have the power of speech. For that one hour, too, the lost spirits have rest. Judas sleeps, Herod ceases to clank his chains, the daughter of Herodias may pause in the dance, in which she is condemned to spin forever, and Pilate's ghost ceases its wanderings on Mount Pilatus. It used to be believed, too, that the sound of church bells could be heard wherever a church had stood, though no trace remain, and that on that pregnant night one sleeping in a manger would see his future in a vision.

Neighborhood Notes

News that a receiver had been asked for and granted to the Bogardus interests of this village was made public Wednesday The petition was granted by Judge Dennison in the United States circuit court at Grand Rapids and the court order was dated December 6. Judge Dennison appointed Harold C. Johnson as receiver, together with the Michigan Trust Company of Grand Rapids as co-receivers.

Mr. Johnson arrived Wednesday morning and assumed charge of the Bogardus Land & Lumber Co., the Pellston Light & Power Co., the Pellston Planing Mill Co. and the Pellston Turning & Manufacturing Co.

Mr. Johnson, we are informed, will take active charge of the above companies and make Pellston his headquarters. The plants and business of the various companies will be continued without interruption. Mr. Johnson is a practical lumberman and owns a large lumbering proposition on Drummond island in Chippewa county which is similar to the Bogardus interests here and which he has operated very successfully.

Mr. Johnson continues the present working forces. Mr. Gillette remains as manager, together with the heads of the various departments.

From what the Journal can learn, the outcome for a quick and satisfactory adjustment of the affairs of the different companies is favorable, the move for a receivership being made to protect and continue the Pellston industries, which have been organized by Mr. and Mrs. Bogardus since they came to Pellston some ten years ago, when the town was a flag station and the inhabitants not over a dozen. These industries have been a large factor in the prosperity of the village, and everyone will be gratified to know that they will continue without interruption, and give work to the large number of their old employees.—Pellston Journal.

William L. Curtis has petitioned the Petoskey council to rename Curtis park, which is the city park, as he believes there is ill feeling among the citizens in regard to the matter. A number of taxpayers have also offered a petition asking that the West Side park be named after him. The council has refused to act on the matter at present. Mr. Curtis is president of the First National Bank.

The board of supervisors of Missaukee county removed Superintendent of the Poor James Cavanagh from office, having found him guilty of wilful neglect and refusal to do his duty, at the same time exonerating Superintendent Owen McMahon.

The special charge was that the superintendent refused to permit Angus Cameron to be cared for at the poorhouse. Cavanagh insisted that Cameron was insane, even though a commission of physicians declared that he is not. Cavanagh took Cameron from the poorhouse and insisted on his remaining away from it. Cavanagh's term of office would have expired January 1. James Wright, who was recently elected and who would have succeeded him January 1, has been appointed to the vacancy.

The census bureau's figures on the agricultural status of Michigan, as shown by the thirteenth census are as follows:

In expenditures for fertilizers, 80 per cent; in the total value of farm buildings alone, 79 per cent; in total expenditures for labor, 76 per cent; in the total value of all farm implements and machinery 73 per cent; in the total value of farm land and buildings, 54 per cent; in the total value of all farm land alone, 45 per cent; in the avrrage value per acre of farm land and buildings, 39 per cent; in the average value per acre of farm land alone, 33 per cent; in the total increase of improved farm land acreage, 9 per cent; in the total farm acreage, 8 per cent; in average acres per farm 7 per cent, and in the whole number of farms, 2 per cent. The total number of farms is 206,376, whose value with the buildings on them is $897,557,000.

The total acreage was 18,913,000 acres, of which 12,819,000 acres were improved. The average size of farms is 92 acres, with an average value of $46 per acre.

During the winter season in Northern Michigan the roads in the rural districts are bound to be more or less blockadrd from time to time by the snow, and the attention of our readers who live on the rural free delivery routes is called to the fact that the carriers are not required to serve their patrons unless the roads are broken out and made passable. Moreover, unless the patrons care enough about receiving their mail to see that this work is done, the postoffice department says that the service will be discontinued. Don't kick because the carrier will not compel his horse to wade through drifts that are waist high, but get out bright and early the next morning after a storm and open up the road past your farm, thus doing yourself and your neighbors a valuable service.

it would not have been found necessary to incorporate, but it is now thought that the time is ripe to extend the field of their endeavors and, while continuing the educational work, to take up the matter of purchasing nursery stock and spraying materials, also the matter of marketing the fruit grown by the members of the association. To do this the association will have to be incorporated in order to give it the proper commercial standing.

The matter will be taken up again at another meeting to be called in the near future, when it is hoped that a greater number of those interested will be in attendance.—Enterprise.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Dr. Wiley Kiepert, of Berlin, an exchange professor of the Carnegie Foundation, who has just finished a course of lectures at the Chicago University on German history, literature and other similiar subjects, spent a few days recently in Washington. "Statistics prove," said Dr. Kieperr, "that the consumption of alcoholic drinks decreases more and more from year to year—per capita among the German people. Since a decade or longer, there is among professors and students of the various educational institutions in the fatherland a very strong movement against the consuming of alcoholic drinks in any form. This movement is strengthened by the increasing number of societies which cultivate sports and athletics which practice not only the healthy art of fencing known for centuries at German universities and the highly developed "Turnen," but also different other kinds of popular open air sports, as various ball games, rowing, swimming, skating, barlauf, track and other diversions. This movement is spreading more and more, not only at universities and colleges, but among all German people throughout the country." Washington Herald.

"IN A BAD WAY".

Many a Charlevoix Reader Will Feel Grateful for This Information.

When your back gives out;
Becomes lame, weak or aching;
When urinary troubles set in,
Your kidneys are "in a bad way."
Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you.
Here is good evidence to prove it.

Mrs. I. A. Slack, 130 Grove St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "Some time ago I suffered intensely from a lameness through my shoulders limbs and across my kidneys. I, at length, procured Doan's Kidney Pills and before I had used them long they disposed of my trouble, making it possible for me to stoop or lift without suffering. I am pleased to say a good word for Doan's Kidney Pills."

The above statement was given in August 1906 and was confirmed by Mrs. Slack on July 30, 1909 when she said: "I can still recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a remedy of great merit for kidney trouble and backache. The relief they brought me has been permanent. You may continue to publish my testimonial."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's, and take no other.

WILL BUILD GOOD ROADS

Enthusiastic Meeting Held at East Jordan Last Week

Now Let Charlevoix and the Rest of the County Get Into the Game.

Wednesday of last week an enthusiastic good roads meeting was held in East Jordan an account of which we publish below, from the Enterprise:

Everyone expressed themselves very freely that we must have better roads, that though they are expending large sums of money yearly to maintain our highways that every year they are getting worse because ordinary dirt and gravel roads cannot "stand up" under the increasingly heavy traffic over them.

Stone roads which appear to be the only solution of the problem will be expensive to build, even though we are most favorably located for securing the necessary materials, and it will be impossible to transform every road in the county into a boulevard at once, but it was agreed that a systematic plan should be worked out so that beginning with the worst roads and each year building every mile of these permanent highways that we possibly could, eventually the whole township would be covered.

Supervisor F. M. Serverance, of Jordan township, was present and said that they had already made application to build a mile of state award road leading to East Jordan and several gentlemen from Echo assured us that their own township would do its share.

Highway Commissioner George W. Hayner brought the pleasing intelligence that there was at the present time in the highway improvement fund of this township enough money to buy the material with which to build a mile of stone road.

The meeting was adjourned until Saturday afternoon, February 17, after the appointment of Messrs. Wm. J. Bennettt, George Vance, H. L. Olney, W. P. Porter, Robert Gunsolas and Abe Stevenson to act with everybody else to act as a committee of good roads "boosters."

The open season for killing English sparrows, during which the state will pay a bounty of two cents per head for the little birds, began December 1. Last year about 25,000 sparrows were killed in northern Michigan. The season will close January 21, 1911.

Starting on December 1, a veritable flood of transfers and reinstatements is reported from Port Huron, the headquarters of the Ladies of the Modern Maccabees. This is due, the officers say, to the cash contest just inaugurated. The rush of business is causing some delay in sending out new certificate.

The round-up farmers' institute for Charlevoix county will be held at Boyne City January 23 and 24. One day institutes will be held in different parts of the county prior to the round-up. Secretary Newville is now busy working up the programs and will announce them as soon as possible.

Election returns compiled at the office of the secretary of state show socialists cast more votes at the fall election than prohibitionists and that their vote was increased over that cast in 1908, while the prohibition vote shows a slump. For governor, Joseph Warnock, socialist, received 9492 votes; Fred W. Corbett, prohibitionist, 9,989 votes, and Herman Richter, socialist-labor, 1,204. In 1908 the socialist vote was 9,447; prohibitionist, 16,092, and socialist-labor, 845.

While it has been the custom in this county for doctors to charge the same in winter when the roads were near impassible as in the summer time, we are informed that hereafter they will do the same as in other localities, and when the roads are in bad condition double their charges. While some may object to this change, we believe they are justified in making the change as certainly the additional expense calls for it and no other class of laborers are more entitled to their hire.

Mrs. W. A. Thomas, who has been lying very low with pneumonia asthma and a severe attack of pleurisy which came near proving fatal, friends will be pleased to learn she is a little on the gain. She sat up a few minutes last week for the first time in three weeks. Dr. Hoyan states she is one out of a hundred to pull through. Good care tells the tale, Mr. Thomas carries the honor of being a first class nurse, now his wife is on the gain he is just about ready to go to bed sick but friends hope he will not give out now.

FARMING AS A BUSINESS

Modern Methods Require Greater Degree of Skill

Short Courses at the M. A. C. a Splendid Opportunity.

Agriculture is rapidly becoming an organized business. It is dividing along natural lines into seperate fields of operation. Until recent years, the farmer endeavored to produce all his living from his farm. He raised a sufficient quantity of wheat, corn, potatoes, ment, fruit, etc., to satisfy the needs of his family. There was practically no market for the surplus. At present however, there is a cash market for whatever products the farmer has to sell. This has made it possible for him to grow those products for which his land is naturally adapted, and for which his training and tastes have specially prepared him to produce.

This modern trend in practical agriculture calls for a much greater degree of skill than the old method. If a man places all his eggs in one basket, he must be very certain that the basket does not fall on the way to market. If a man centers all his interest in one line of agriculture, he should be an expert in that line. If he is not, any failure will be disastrous. We are rapidly approaching a time when a man who is not a specialist and who does not know at least one line of farming very well will be a back number and will be compelled to trudge along with a mere living while his neighbors with special training, following special lines of work, will live in better homes and enjoy luxuries which the untrained men cannot afford.

Our state has made it easy for the energetic young man to secure this special training. If he desires to gain special knowledge of live-stock dairying, poultry, husbandry, fruit culture, creamery management or general agriculture, he will have an opportunity to do so at a very small expense at the agricultural college, East Lansing. The college upon request will mail, free of charge, circulars giving information concerning the short courses offered in special lines of work.

MASTER HULL IS RE-ELECTED

At Last Week's Session of the State Grange

BURTON DEFEATED FOR EX.-COMMITTEE

Kalamazoo Wins Over the Soo for Next Year's Session

Attendance was Large—Great Display of Products of Northern Michigan—Position on Tonnage Tax Re-affirmed

The Michigan State Grange meeting held at Traverse City last week was well attended, over four hundred delegates, representing every county in Michigan being present, besides hundreds of visitors.

One of the most attractive features of the meeting was the exhibit of farm products grown in Northern Michigan, Charlevoix County taking the first prize. A fine display of Northern Michigan products was also made by the Hannah & Lay Company.

Tuesday the grange was called to order by Worthy Master Hull and short addresses were made by prominent grange workers. The committees were appointed and the time was taken up listening to the reports of officers. In the evening the annual reception was given the delegates and visitors by the citizens of Traverse City.

Wednesday was taken up by routine work and in the evening short addresses were given at the farm produce show by different speakers.

Thursday election of officers took place which resulted as follows:

Master—N. P. Hull.
Overseer—C. A. VanDeventer.
Lecturer—Jennie Hull.
Chaplain—Mrs. O. J. C. Woodman.
Treasurer—Frank Coward.
Secretary—J. W. Hutchius.
Steward—T. E. Niles.
Assistant Steward—Leon Haybarker.
Gate Keeper—George Robertson.
Ceres—Mrs. Freeman
Pomona—Nellie Mayo.
Flora—Mrs. Corless.
Lady Assistant Steward—Ida Haybarker.

Members executive committee Charles S. Bartlett, George B. Horton, T. H. McNaughton, L. W. Oviatt Saulte Ste. Marie, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Battle Creek and Ann Arbor all were candidates for the next place of meeting and each had their claims presented in an eloquent manner by different speakers. Kalamazoo winning on the second ballot.

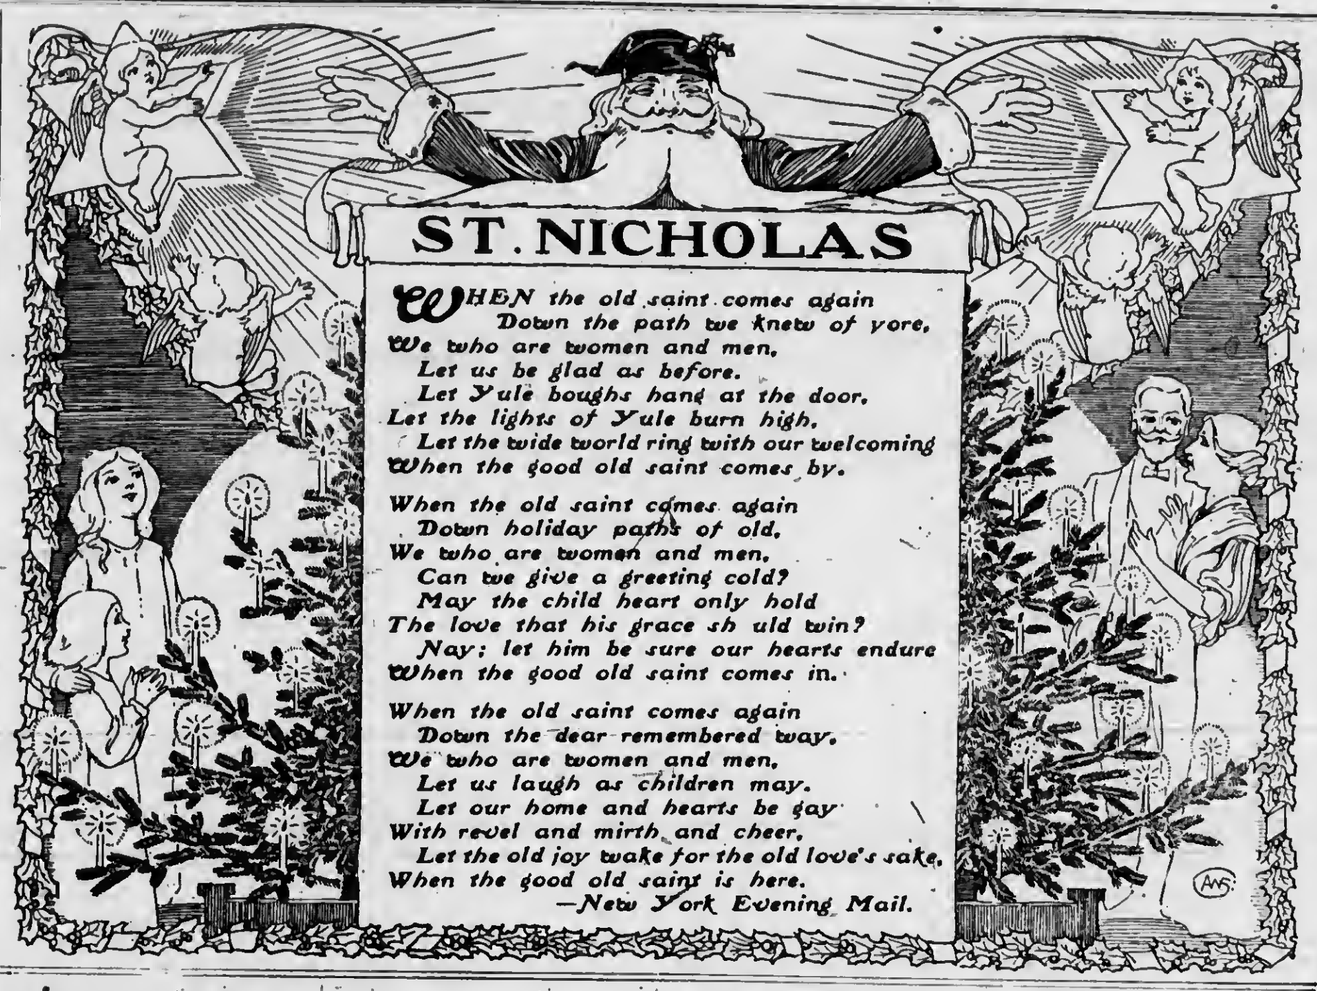
The sessions were the most harmonious in years. Although there was a long struggle on the report of the executive committee, the grange voting to suppress the report of the sub-committee that visited the National grange at Atlantic City, the committee consisting of H. F. Baker, George B. Horton and J. W. Helme thought that the members of the order were entitled to know how their money was expended in paying their expenses for the trip and the report of the committee can be found in the state papers of Saturday.

The grange reaffirmed its former position on matters of legislation, although a determined effort was made to have it change from its former stand on the tonnage tax.

Friday evening the officers were installed in an impressive manner, Miss Julia Hall acting as installing officer and after a few words of parting the grange closed to meet next year in Kalamazoo.

After the session closed Friday night the new executive committee was organized, George B. Horton being elected chairman.

As usual several of the prominent politicians in the state were present in the city trying to get a line up on grange sentiment. The chief thing they were interested in at this time was the speakership contest, Representatives Baker, Warner and Yeo who are candidates all being present. While an effort was made to create a predjudice against Mr. Baker, it was practically the unanimous opinion that he had the contest won, a position which he has earned by his services in the legislature in favor of the measures asked for by the people. The plans of Governor-elect Osborn also came in for much commendation and the generally expressed opinion was a better time politically for Michigan was at hand.



ST. NICHOLAS

WHEN the old saint comes again
Down the path we knew of yore,
We who are women and men,
Let us be glad as before.
Let Yule boughs hang at the door,
Let the lights of Yule burn high,
Let the wide world ring with our welcoming
When the good old saint comes by.

When the old saint comes again
Down holiday paths of old,
We who are women and men,
Can we give a greeting cold?
May the child heart only hold
The love that his grace sh uld win?
Nay; let him be sure our hearts endure
When the good old saint comes in.

When the old saint comes again
Down the dear remembered way,
We who are women and men,
Let us laugh as children may.
Let our home and hearts be gay
With revel and mirth and cheer,
Let the old joy wake for the old love's sake,
When the good old saint is here.

CHARLEVOIX WINS FIRST PRIZE

At Farm Products Exhibition Held in Traverse City

IN CONNECTION WITH GRANGE MEETING

Committee Deserves Full Measure of the Credit

County was in the Lime-light all the Time—Results are Sure to Follow Development Work Being Done.

Again Charlevoix county scored a victory in Traverse City, winning first prize over all other counties at the farm products exhibition, held in connection with the state grange meeting.

The committee from Pomona that had charge of the exhibit which consisted of Nat Burns of Marion, M. J. Staley of Eveline and Earl Clark of East Jordan were seriously handicapped this year by the small crop of fruit but undismayed they hustled and put up a display that won the admiration of the thousands of visitors that thronged the grange building, where the display was held, from morning until night. The following from the Traverse City Record-Eagle shows how the Charlevoix display impressed the people from other counties:

"One of the best arranged and most attractive exhibits ever seen in the state is the one presented by Charlevoix county. This is gotten up in the true western style, the apples being arranged in a manner that shows them off to the best possible advantage. The apple racks consist of 225 plates of fruit made up from 24 seperate varities. All of this fruit is carefully polished so as to present a striking appearance.

Aside from the apple show there is an elaborate collection of seeds of all varities shown in pans on one of the tables that runs through the main part of the building.

The exhibits in all is composed of oats, 8 varieties; wheat, 7; speltz 1; barley, 2; rye, 1; buckwheat, 2; sweet corn, 6; popcorn, 3; field corn, 11; beans, 9; peas, 12; pumpkins, 2; squash, 2 one of these specimens weighing 127 pounds and the other 117 pounds. Aside from the above display are samples of beets, carrots and sugar beets.

Charlevoix county is to be congratulated upon the showing made as it gives a clear idea to the visitors what this region can produce with an ordinary amount of effort on the part of the farmer."

Not content with reaping first honors at the produce show, Mr. Staley also made several entries in the exhibition conducted by the Hannah, Lay & Co. and carried of several prizes and Judge Mayne was one of the speakers at the meeting held in connection with the produce show Wednesday night.

Altogether it was a great week for Charlevoix county and followed up the great advertising campaign which is being pushed for this region by the development bureau and cannot help but bring results to everybody in Charlevoix county.

NOTICE.

I will be at the Elk Cement & Co's office at Bay Shore on December 23 and 30 and January 6, also at the Charlevoix County Bank on December 24 and 30 and January 7, for the purpose of receiving taxes. Oscar Tillotson, treasurer of Hayes township. 50t2

LOCATED IN INDIANA

George W. Baxter Again at His Old Occupation

Now Proprietor of Kendallville Daily Sun and Weekly Standard.

The numerous friends of George W. Baxter in this locality will be interested in the following from the Kendallville Indiana Daily Sun:

The Kendallville Daily Sun and Weekly Standard is now the sole property of George W. Baxter, who comes here from Michigan. Mr. Baxter is a news paper man of thirty years' experience, beginning in the humble position of the "print shop devil," and climbing consecutively the various stages that lead to the editorial chair. For the past four years he has successfully published the Semi-Weekly Citizen at Boyne City, Michigan, selling that property last September, since which time he has lived at Detroit, his former home, and in the meantime has been looking over various newspaper properties with the view of purchasing.

Coming to Kendallville he was favorably impressed with the splended mechanical equipments of the Sun and Standard plant, and the pleasing appearance of our city and its homes, and last Monday he purchased from the Sun-Publishing Company and the Conlogue estate, the newspaper properties founded by the late J. S. Conlogue.

Mr. Baxter's business and newspaper experience is broad enough to make it safe to guarantee that the Sun and Standard will not only be kept up to their present standard of excellence, but the properties—papers—will be gradually improved.

Mr. Baxter brings with him now his two sons, both of whom are experienced printers, and as soon as suitable locations can be secured they will bring two more families to Kendallville.

ROAD BUILDING IN MICHIGAN

Deputy State Highway Commissioner Rogers' Address

AT CONVENTION OF ROAD BUILDERS

Thirty-Four Counties Have Adopted County Road System

Five Hundred and Forty-Five Miles of State Reward Roads Have Been Built at a Cost of $1,732,995.52.

"Progress of Road Building in Michigan," was the title of Deputy Highway Commissioner Rogers' paper—the feature of the closing session of the convention of American road builders at Indianapolis.

Following are the important features of the address:

"Michigan has 58,015 square miles of territory, divided into 83 counties, which in turn are devided into 1,226 organized townships, the latter being the units of rural government. The 70,000 miles of public wagon roads which serve our state are all under township control, except certain roads in counties which voluntarily adopt the county road system and come under the direct supervision of a township highway commissioner.

"In the counties which have adopted the county road system, 31 in all, such roads as the county road commissioners see fit to adopt are constituted as county roads and maintained and improved with county funds, but all other roads in such counties remain township roads and are maintained and improved with township funds. Any county can make application for and receive state reward when the road in question has been improved in conformity with the state's specifications and accepted by the highway department. The coming legislature will be asked to provide another $75,000 allowing rewards for concrete roads built under the state's specifications.

"The Michigan state aid law became operative July 1, 1905, and the following figures, giving the mileage built in each of the last five years, show that it is increasing in popularity: In 1905, 20 miles in roads were built, in 1906 40, in 1907 80, in 1908 160, 1909 244, in 1910 276, or a total of 700 miles in the six years. On July 1, 1910, the close of the fifth fiscal year, there had been completed 543.5 miles of state reward road at a cost of $1,732,995.52, on which $592,298 of state reward was paid. This shows the average cost of roads of all classes for the first five years was $3,190 a mile, while the average state reward per mile was $719, or approximately 22.6 per cent of the total cost of the road built. Roads have been built in 61 of the 83 counties and in 361 townships.

"The legislature has appropriated all told $660,000 for the use of the state highway department during the five years ending July 1, 1911, $600,000 of this is to pay state rewards, and $60,000, only 10 per cent of the money paid for bonus, was set apart for the department expenses. Michigan is not as well supplied with road-building materials as many other states. Gravel is not well distributed, and the only available road building rocks in the lower peninsula are quarry limestone and field cobbles.

"Of the 543.5 miles of road completed on July 1, 34.4 per cent were gravel, 43 Macadam, with the remaining 21½ per cent divided combination roads. About eight miles of two layer concrete roads built in Wayne county, in which the coarse aggregate is crushed stone, are included in the macadam mileage. Except near cities the motor cars have not seriously injured Michigan roads. Thus far, with one or two exceptions, Wayne, Saginaw and Bay counties are the only ones that have attempted anything to resist motor car wear. In Bay county nothing has been done except to coat their water-bound limestone macadam roads with oil once a year, usually in July. Saginaw is trying concrete for the first time."

DEATH OF MRS. WEBSTER

One of the Oldest Pioneers of Charlevoix County

Coming Here in the Fall of Eighteen Sixty-Seven

Mrs. I. S. Webster, one of the oldest pioneers of Charlevoix county, died at her home in South Charlevoix, early Saturday morning from a stroke of paralysis.

Mrs. Webster was born in Fulton, Ohio, in 1842 and came to this county, with her husband, in the fall of 1867, going through all the hardships of pioneer life. The last twelve years they have lived in this city. Besides her husband she is survived by five children, four sons Amos, alderman from the third ward of this city, Platt of Hayes, Frank of Toledo, Ohio and Harvey of Evansville, Indiana and one daughter, Mrs. Ella Sheldon of Alanson, all of whom, with the exception of Harvey, being present at the funeral which was held, Monday, at the home, Rev. F. Dewey Ehle, pastor of the Baptist church officiating, burial took place at Brookside.

Mrs. Webster leaves a large circle of friends who will be pained to learn of her untimely death, and who extend to the family their fullest sympathy in a loss of a loving wife and mother.

SIXTH ANNUAL CONVENTION HELD

Of the Lake Michigan Commercial Fishermen's Association

HELD AT GRAND HAVEN LAST WEEK

Measures Vital to the Fishermen Were Discussed

Banquet Held in the Evening—Alderman Geiken of Charlevoix one of the Speakers—Legislation is Asked For.

The sixth annual convention of the Lake Michigan Commercial Fisherman's Association was held at Grand Haven, Dec 13-14. Delegates were present from Escanaba, Menominee, Northport, Harbor Springs, Leland and St. Joseph. Measures vital to the commercial fishermen were topics for discussion. The unsatisfactory conditions produced by adverse legislation, seemingly in the interest of the people, often works a great many hardships to the fisherman. Because our legislators are not thoroughly acquainted with the conditions that confront the men employed in this vocation, laws are often passed, which theoretically seem just, but are very impracticable when put into operation, and if strictly enforced, as every law should be, would put the fishermen out of business. This would be a great calamity, considering the great amount of money invested in this industry, in this state, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the revenue the state derives from its output would run into the millions. Under present conditions every commercial fisherman plying his vocation is a criminal every day because the laws on the statute book made it impossible to fish a single day without a violation and should the game warden department see fit they could order every chub net taken out of the lake, thus jeopardizing as many a working people as may be found anywhere.

Act 213 of the Public Acts of 1909, Sec. 3, reads as follows: "That gill with meshes of 2¼ inches may be used for the taking of perch, herring, chubs and other fish; whenever they will not interfere with or take whitefish or trout.

The fisherman assert that not a living soul can plant a gang of chub nets without violating this law.

Sec. 8 of the same act places the fisherman face to face with law violation when it reads:

"It shall be unlawful to market or have in posession at any time, in this state, whether caught within or without this state any whitefish of less weight than two pounds in the round or one pound and ten ounces when dressed; any lake trout of a less weight than one and one-half pounds in the round or one and one-quarter pounds when dressed.

Here again we see the absurdity of the law, for every day, a fisherman leaves port to lift his nets, it matters not at what point of the lake, he cannot avoid having in his possession a certain amount of trout and whitefish, for Act 330 Sec. 1 of the laws of 1885 reads that no fisherman shall pollute the waters of the lake by throwing overboard any offal, blood, putrid brine, putrid fish or filth of any description. Penalty not exceeding $100.00.

Any practical fisherman will make affidavit that 75 per cent of the trout caught with gill nets are dead and therefore must be taken ashore and this plainly is a violation.

To remedy these evils the fishermen have adopted the following resolutions and are praying for relief:

Resolved, that the president ap-

Literary Notes

Christmas Party for Boys and Girls

"The original entertainment was given by a Sunday-school teacher to her class of boys and girls," says Alice P. Robinson in Woman's Home Companion for December, "and was intended to instruct as well as amuse. The children were old enough to have some idea of geography.

"Soon after the children reached the teachers home, she conducted them into a room decorated to represent Norway. Here they were greeted in a most cordial way by a maiden dressed in the costume of Norway, who told them the story of Christmas in that land, which is called Yulepence instead of Christmas, and is celebrated by feasting, and all quarrels are made up. She spoke of the preparation made by the mothers, the way the gifts are distributed from the trees, how the birds are remembered with bunches of wheat placed outside the window on poles, that all animals are given extra portions of supper, and how strangers are treated on Yule-pence day. After the story a little girl in the native costumes of Norway appeared from behind the pine trees with trays of dainty sandwiches.

"Then they went into another room where dainty articles from Holland were displayed in a very artistic manner. After a hearty welcome from a maiden in the tipical Dutch costume, some time was spent looking at the pretty things before she began the story of how the Dutch people keep Christmas—as a holy day. Among the other things she told them that the Dutch children think Santa Claus comes driving a white horse instead of deer, and they clean their wooden shoes and fill them with hay and oats for the white horse. Here ice-cream was served in little wooden shoes with flags of the country stuck in them like sails.

"They next visited Denmark. Here was a pretty Christmas tree with dainty gifts for each one. A young lady in the native dress told how Christmas is celebrated there.

"Then they went to a pretty room decorated with American flags and bright holly wreaths and other greens—that was America. Here they had a merry time eating nuts and fruits and playing games."

COUNTY NORMAL

Hazel Price was absent two days last week because of illness. She was ready to take up work again Monday morning.

Friday afternoon Miss Himes and the normal class visited the beet sugar factory. They were shown through and had the various processes explained to them. They will now appreciate the value of sugar more than they have ever before.

Jennie Hunderman was absent Monday morning and Eva Cram all day.

The normal class was asked to dramatize a Christmas story. From the "Bird's Christmas Carol" they chose the chapter on the preparation of the Ruggles to attend the Christmas dinner. Children from the grammar grades took the part of the Ruggles children, and a girl from the high school filled Mrs Ruggle's place. Lula Taylor told the story. Amlie Delaney was to have given the value of dramatization, but was not able to be there.

During manual training period the class have been filling orders for Christma's gifts.

In elementary agriculture the class has been discussing potato raising. Bulletins from the department of agriculture on soil, culture seed, spraying for disease, etc. with regard to potatoes have been presented.

CARE OF HARNESS.

Should Be Used Properly and Kept In Special Room.

Very often a farmer is obliged to use the same harness on different horses, says a well known horseman, and if he makes the change in a hurry ten chances to one he does not readjust the harness to the second horse. If a harness is taken from a large horse and then used on a small horse without readjustment there is not only danger of injuring the beast, but the harness is sure to suffer as well.

Another thing that is very injurious to the harness is to pile the heavy parts on top of the bridle after it has been hung on the hook. The safest thing is to have a separate hook for the bridle, for this is the part of the harness that should be cared for the best. A stranger always notices this first, and a bridle that is fastened together with pieces of wire advertises the driver as a shiftless fellow.

The ideal way to care for harness is to build a harness room where the leather can be kept free from moisture. A good way to build this is to line it with building paper. There should be plenty of room. If it is impossible to have a harness closet the pegs should be as far away from the manure as possible, for the gases and dampness arising from manure piles rot the leather faster than anything I know of.

Every harness should be well oiled at least twice a year, so that it will be in shape to give the service that is expected of it. The oil works its way to the surface, and when the harness is exposed to a rain this oil is washed away. If the oil is not removed from time to time the leather will soon dry out and crack.

I don't believe in washing a harness. Washing does little good unless there is soap used in the water, and most soap has lye in it, which is hard on the leather. The oil soaks into the harness much more easily if it is dry than if it is damp. Of course the harness must be cleaned, but this can easily be done without moistening it.

Neighborhood Notes

One of the most unique proceedings that has yet illuminated the justice court records in Michigan came to a head last week in Stittsville, Missaukee county. It appears that some time in October last, one Monroe Courtney swore out a warrant before Justice Chas. Williams, in which he charged E. C. Ferris with the theft of a steer. Ferris was arrested and when arraigned asked for a change of venue, on the plea that he was at this time bringing a charge in court against Justice Williams. The justice said he would take the matter under advisement and adjourn the case to November 21. At the adjourned date neither Ferris nor Prosecuting Attorney Dunan put in an appearance. After taking advice in the matter Justice Williams had both Ferris and the prosecuting attorney arrested for contempt of court; has sent Ferris to jail for ten days, and the prosecutor's case not yet settled.

C. N. Smith, chief deputy state game, fish and forest warden, has been in the cooper country for the past few days on his annual visit. Mr. Smith is opposed to the plan of T. A. Green of Ontonagon who favors a forest patrol organization in Michigan and paid for by taxation. Mr. Smith is very much opposed to this form of forest protection. He put it this way: Any business man who has property which he values, insures it, particularly against loss by fire. The mining and manufacturing industries do this, why not the lumberman? "Expert foresters tell us," said Mr. Smith, "that standing forests gain in value through natural growth about two dollars per acre per year. Take the example of a man named Mershon of Saginaw. He owns big tracts of timber in Chippewa county. He wants the county taxes taken off it and he wants the state to patrol it to prevent forest fires which might destroy it. Would not this be pretty soft for Mr. Mershon, having the state protect his property and it gaining in value at the rate of two dollars per acre every year it stands?" Mr. Smith is of the opinion that the farmers in this state will not swallow a law that will add to the taxes for the purpose of fire protection. He also is pretty certain that the Wisconsin farmers will not stand it and the law is all ready for the legislature over there.

The attorney general has given an official opinion that county school commissioners, to be elected next April, must be nominated by the convention system that prevailed before the adoption of the present primary law.

The supreme court of Michigan handed down an opinion last week that may be of interest to Charlevoix people as well as those of other portions of the state. The case of the People vs. Abe Lowry, affirmed by the supreme court, is one of considerable interest and of a character that rarely gets to the higher court. The case went up from the Missankee county court, where Judge Fred S. Lamb had affirmed the decision of the justice court. Abe Lowry was arrested one day by Sheriff Brown in Lake City under the statute that declares a man drunk in a public place to be guilty of a misdemeanor. Lowry is a prominent farmer and he fought the imputation the justice had put upon him, and carried the case to the supreme court, where the decision was affirmed. Now the supreme court makes it incumbent on the man to pay the line imposed and serve the term given him by the justice.

The Indian treaty of more than a half century ago, by the terms of which the United States government is now putting a great many Minnesota liquor dealers out of business, is believed by Rev. C. H. Rutledge to apply with equal force to a large portion of the upper peninsula of Michigan. Mr. Rutledge is the district superintendent of the anti-saloon league.

He is now looking up the provisions of the treaty and he announces that if he finds that these sustain his contention he will call upon the federal government to take action similar to that in the Gopher state. From what Mr. Rutledge has learned already, he is of the opinion that the agreement with the Indians affects practically all the towns in the iron and copper districts, as well as a considerable area in the eastern portion of the peninsula, including the city of Sault Ste. Marie.

The Chippewa tribe of upper Michigan was a party to the treaty, it appears, and according to the contention of the anti-saloon man sales of liquor are illegal within certain zones tributary to the reservation at Brimley, Westmore, and L'Anse. Chippewa county is under the ban, should Mr. Rutledge's belief hold good, and so are Munising and other Alger county towns; Marquette, Ishpeming and other municipalities in the iron country, the city of Negaunee excepted, and L'Anse, Baraga, Hancock, Houghton and other locations in the copper mining regions. There are hundreds of saloons and a number of breweries in these areas and naturally there is no little anxiety concerning the outcome.

The Late Senator Dolliver.

Hon. Jonathan P. Dolliver, senior United States senator from Iowa, died suddenly and unexpectedly at his home in Fort Dodge, while his physician was examining his heart with a stethoscope, he all at once discovered that the heart had ceased to beat while he was counting. The senator had been ill for several days from overwork at the last session of congress; and a complete rest had been ordered. His condition, while serious, had not been considered critical; and his sudden death came as a great shock to his friends and to the nation. He was born in a humble Methodist parsonage in West Virginia, February 6, 1858, and received a good education. He served twelve years in the lower house of congress, and ten years in the senate. He was one of the great men of the nation, a statesman of broad views, a conscientious public servant and an ardent patriot. He was at his death one of the most influential and highly respected leaders of the "progressive" school of political action, and his death is a distinct loss to the country. He was a life long and loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and very prominent in her councils. His influence in the general conference at Baltimore was great and commanding. At one time it was thought he might become the nation's chief executive as the successor of President Roosevelt, and Taft alone loomed up ahead of him. He was a great and effective orator and a few years ago ably represented the church as a fraternal delegate to the M. E. church south. Methodism has lost a valued friend and supporter.

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

Clyde's tone was querulous as he continued:

"I'm sorry I ever went into this thing. You bet if I had known as much in Chicago as I know now I would have hung on to my money and stayed at home."

"You knew as much as we did," Boyd declared curtly.

"Oh, it's all right for you to talk. You haven't risked any coin in the deal, but I'm a rotten business man, and I'll never make my ante back again if I lose it."

"Don't whine about it," said Boyd stiffly. "You can at least be game and lose like a man."

"Then we are going to lose, eh?" queried Clyde in a scared voice. "I thought maybe you had a plan. Look here," he began an instant later. "Cherry pulled us out once before. Why don't you let her see what she can do with Marsh?"

Boyd scanned the speaker's face sharply before speaking.

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean she can work him if she tries, the same way she worked Hilliard."

"Marsh isn't in the mood to listen to arguments. I have tried that."

"Who said anything about arguments? You know what I mean."

"I don't care to listen to that sort of talk."

"Why not? I'm entitled to have my say in things." Clyde was growing indignant. "I put in $10,000 of my own money and $25,000 besides on your assurances. That's $35,000 more than you put up."

"Nevertheless it doesn't give you the right to insult the girl."

"Insult her! Bah! You're no fool, Boyd. Why did Hilliard advance that loan?"

"Because he wanted to, I dare say."

"What's the use of keeping that up? You know as well as I do that she worked him, and worked him well. She'd do it again if you asked her. She'd do anything for you."

CHAPTER XVI.

BOYD broke out roughly: "I tell you, I've heard enough of that talk, Alton. Anybody but an idiot would know that Cherry is far too good for what you suggest. And when you insult her you insult me."

"Oh, she's good enough," said Clyde. "They're all good, but not perhaps in the way you mean."

"How do you know?"

"I don't know, but Fraser does. He's known her for years. Haven't you, Fraser?" But the adventurer's face was like wood as they turned toward him.

"I don't know nothing," replied "Fingerless" Fraser, with an admirable show of ignorance.

"Well, judge for yourself," Clyde turned again to Emerson. "Who is she? Where did she come from? What is she doing here alone? Answer that. Now, she's interested in this deal just as much as any of us, and if you don't ask her to take a hand I'm going to put it up to her myself."

"You'll do nothing of the sort!" Boyd cried savagely.

Clyde rose hastily, and his voice was shaking with excitement as he stammered:

"See here, Boyd, you're to blame for this trouble, and now you either get us out of it or buy my stock."

"You know that I can't buy your stock."

"Then I'll sell wherever I can. I've been stung, and I want my money. Only, remember, I offered the stock to you first."

"You've got a swell chance to make a turn in Kalvik," said Fraser. "Why don't you take it to Marsh?"

"I will!" declared Alton.

"You wouldn't do a trick like that?" Emerson questioned quickly.

"Why not? You won't listen to my advice. You're playing with other people's money, and it doesn't matter to you whether you win or lose. If this enterprise fails I suppose you can promote another."

"Get out!" Boyd ordered, in such a tone that the speaker obeyed with ludicrous haste.

"Did you know Cherry before you came to Kalvik?" Boyd asked, searching his companion's face with a look the man could not evade.

"Only casual."

"Where?"

"Nome—the year of the big rush."

"During the mining troubles, eh?"

"Sure."

"What was she doing?"

"Minding her business. She's good at that." Fraser's eyes had become green and flashy, as usual.

"What do you know about her?"

"Well, I know that a lot of fellows would go through fer her at the drop of a hat. She could have most anything they've got, I guess. Most any of them officers at Nome would give his right eye or his only child, or any little thing like that, if she asked it."

"What else?"

"Well, she was always considered a right good looking party"—

"Yes, yes; of course. But what do you know about the girl herself? Who is she? What is her history?"

"Now, sir, I'm an awful poor detective," confessed "Fingerless" Fraser. "I've often noticed that about myself. If I was the kind that goes snooping around into other people's business, listening to all the gossip I'm told, I'd make a good witness. But I ain't. No, sir! I'm a rotten witness."

Despite this indirect rebuke, Boyd might have continued his questioning

"WE CAN GET HIM TONIGHT IF YOU SAY SO."

had not George Balt's heavy step sounded outside. A moment later the big fellow entered.

"What did you find at the traps?" asked Emerson eagerly.

"Nothing." George spoke shortly. "The fish struck in this morning, but our trap is corked." He wrenched off his rubber boots and flung them savagely under a bench.

"What luck with the boats?"

"Not much. Marsh's men are trying to surround our gill netters, and we ain't got enough boats to protect ourselves." He looked up meaningly from under his heavy brows and inquired. "How much longer are we going to stand for this?"

"What do you mean? I've got men out hunting for new hands."

"You know what I mean," the giant rumbled, his red eyes flaming. "You and I can get Willis Marsh."

Emerson shot a quick glance at Fraser, who was staring fixedly at Big George.

"He's got us right enough, and it's bound to come to a killing some day, so the sooner the better," the fisherman ran on. "We can get him tonight if you say so. Are you in on it?"

Boyd faced the window slowly, while the others followed him with anxious eyes. Inside the room a deathlike silence settled.

Moreover, Mildred Wayland was soon to arrive—the yacht was expected daily—and she would find him a failure. What was worse, she would find that Marsh had vanquished him. She would turn elsewhere—perhaps to the very man who had contrived his undoing. At thought of this a sort of desperation seemed to master him; he began to mutter aloud.

"What did you say?" queried Balt.

"I said that you are right. The thing is close at hand for some sort of a reckoning," answered Boyd in a harsh, strained voice.

"Good!"

Emerson was upon the point of turning when his eyes fell upon a picture that made him start, then gaze more intently. Out upon the placid waters, abreast of the plant, the launch in which Cherry had departed was approaching, and it was loaded down with men. Not only were they crowded upon the craft itself, but trailing behind it like the tail of a kite was a long line of canoes, and these also were peopled.

"Look yonder!" cried Boyd.

"What?"

"Cherry has got—a crew!" His voice broke, and he bolted toward the door as Big George leaped to the window.

"Injuns!" wildly shouted the giant, and without stopping to stamp his feet into his boots he rushed out barefoot after Boyd and Fraser. Together the three men reached the dock in time to help Cherry up the ladder.

"What does this mean?" Boyd asked her breathlessly. "Will these fellows work?"

"That's what they're here for," said the girl. After her swarmed a crowd of stare eyed, copper tined Aleuts. Those in the kyaks astern cast off and paddled toward the beach.

"I've got fifty men, the best on the river. I tried to get more, but—there aren't any more."

"Fingerless" Fraser slapped himself resoundingly upon the thigh and exploded profanely. Boyd seized the girl's hands in his and wrung them.

"Cherry, you're a treasure!" The memory of his desperate resolution of a moment before swept over him suddenly and his voice trembled with a great thankfulness.

"Don't thank me!" Cherry exclaimed. "It was more Constantine's work than mine."

"But I don't understand. These are Marsh's men."

"To be sure, but I was good to them when they were hungry last winter, and I prevailed upon them to come. They aren't very good fishermen. They're awful lazy and they won't work half as hard as white men, but it's the best I could do." She laughed gladly, more than repaid by the look in her companion's face. "Now get me some lunch. I'm fairly starved."

Big George, when he had fully grasped the situation, became the base fisherman on the instant. Before the others had reached the cookhouse he was busied in laying out his crews and distributing his gear. The impossible had happened; victory was in sight; the fish were running. He cared to know no more.

That night the floors of the fish dock groaned beneath a weight of silver sided salmon piled waist high to a tall man. All through the cool, dim ill hours the ranks of Chinese butchers hacked and slit and slashed with swift, sure, tireless strokes, while the great building echoed hollowly to the clank of machines and the hissing sighs of the soldering furnaces.

It seemed to Boyd that he had never felt such elation as during the days that followed. He trod upon air; his head was in the clouds. He joked with his men, inspiring them with his own good humor and untiring energy. He was never idle save during the odd hours that he snatched for sleep.

While the daily output was disappearing, Emerson drew consolation from the prospect that his pack would be large enough at least to avert utter ruin.

Up at the trust's headquarters Willis Marsh was in a fine fury. As far as possible his subordinates avoided him.

On the third day after Boyd's deliverance Constantine sought him out in company with several of the native fishermen, translating their demand to be paid for the fish they had caught.

"Can't they wait until the end of the week?" Emerson inquired.

"No! They got no money—they got no grub. They say little baby is hungry, and they like money now. So soon they buy grub, they work some more."

"Very well. Here's an order on the bookkeeper."

Boyd tore a leaf from his notebook and wrote a few words on it, telling the men to present it at the office. As Constantine was about to leave he called to him:

"Wait! I want to talk with you."

The breed halted.

"How long have you known Mr. Marsh?"

"Me know him long time."

"Do you like him?"

A flicker ran over the fellow's coppery face as he replied:

"Yes. Him good man."

"You used to work for him, did you not?"

"Yes."

"Why did you quit?"

Constantine hesitated slightly before answering, "Me go work for Cherry."

"Why?"

"She good to my little broder. You savvy little chil'ren—so big?"

"Yes, I've seen him. He's a fine little fellow. By the way, do you remember that night about two weeks ago when I was at Cherry's house—the night you and your sister went out?"

"I 'member."

"Where did you go?"

Constantine shifted his walrus soled boots. "What for you ask?"

"Never mind! Where did you go when you left the house?"

"Me go Indian village. What for you ask?"

"Nothing. Only if you ever have any trouble with Mr. Marsh I may be able to help you. I like you, and I don't like him."

The breed grunted unintelligibly and was about to leave when Boyd reached forth suddenly and plucked the fellow's sheath knife from its scabbard. With a startled cry, Constantine whirled, his face convulsed, his nostrils dilated like those of a frightened horse.

WITH A STARTLED CRY, CONSTANTINE WHIRLED, HIS FACE CONVULSED.

But Emerson merely fingered the Indian's weapon carelessly, remarking:

"That is a curious knife you have. I have noticed it several times."

He eyed him shrewdly for a moment, then handed the blade back with a smile. Constantine slipped it into its place and strode away without a word.

It was considerably later in the day when Boyd discovered the Indians to whom he had given the note talking excitedly on the dock. Seeing Constantine in argument with them, he approached to demand an explanation, whereupon the quarter breed held out a silver dollar in his palm with the words:

"These men say this money no good."

"What do you mean?"

"It no good. No can buy grub at company store."

It was evident that even Constantine was vaguely distrustful.

Another native extended a coin, saying:

"We want money like this."

Boyd took the piece and examined it, whereupon a light broke upon him. The coin was stamped with the initials of one of the old fishing companies, and he instantly recognized a ruse practiced in the north during the days of the first trading concerns. It had been the custom of these companies to pay their Indians in coins, bearing their own impress, and to refuse all other specie at their posts, thus compelling the natives to trade at company stores. Seeing that his words carried no conviction, Emerson gave up at last, saying:

"If the company store won't take the money I'll sell you whatever you need from the commissary. We are not going to have any trouble over a little thing like this."

He marched the natives in a body to the storehouse, where he saw to it that they received what provisions they needed and assisted them in loading their canoes.

But his amusement at the episode gave way to uneasiness on the following morning when the Aleuts failed to report for work, and by noon his anxiety resolved itself into strong suspicion.

Balt had returned from the banks earlier in the morning with news of a struggle between the white crew and Marsh's men. George's boats had been surrounded during the night, nets had been cut and several encounters had occurred, resulting in serious injury to his men. The giant, in no amiable mood, had returned for reenforcements, stating that the situation was becoming more serious every hour. Hearing of the desertion of the natives, he burst into profanity, then armed himself and returned to the banks, while

MRS. JOHN TAYLOR DEAD

Had Resided in Bay Township all Her Life.

The death of Mrs. John Taylor of Bay township, occurred Monday afternoon in Petoskey after a brief illness of less than a week with pneumonia. She was twenty-four years of age, and had been a resident of the vicinity all her life.

The demise, coming suddenly as it did, was a great shock to all the immediate relatives, as Mrs. Taylor was taken sick only last Friday and it was not thought that her illness was of a serious nature.

In addition to her husband, who is a farmer in Bay township, the deceased leaves to mourn her, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Janeschek, three brothers John, Aaron and Charles Janeschek, all of whom reside near Petoskey, and a married sister who lives near Grand Rapids.

WANT $125 TO COME.

It was meotioned before that a movement is on foot to have Charles Gardoer, the diminutive comedian, and his company, come here. The negotiations have reached the stage where the cost of securing the attraction has been ascertained. A representative of the International Amusement Association, who manages Gardner, was here and stated that he would bring his attraction here if $125 advance sale could be made. He figures that this amount of tickets sold would insure him a crowded house.

When the fact is considered that this show must cost fully that much money, and that Gardner is accompanied by three other stars of not much less magnitude than himself, the demand of his manager is not unreasonable.

The day has actually come when a real show has a fixed monetary value, the same as houses, shoes and other necessities. Perhaps it will be argued that amusements are not necessities, but the same thing could be said with more truth about diamoods, pianos, some brands of millinery, and a thousand other things that we pay for, and which goes a long ways toward filling our daily lives; and when an opportunity like this occurs it is to be hoped that it will not be overlooked.

With Gardner is Helen Atterbury, the child soprano, who has the same range as Patti, and who is but 16 years of age. Also Grace Johnson, the boy impersonator, famous both in America and Europe and Mordock Holmes, the new baritone. The company is not a large one, but is the best balanced, traveling today, and as the play was written expressly for the four stars, it will be a real treat to see them. Every one should do their best to secure this attraction.

WHAT IS A CHRISTMAS TREE?

BY ROBERTUS LOVE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

WHAT kind of a tree is a Christmas tree?
I'm sure all you children and I will agree
That it isn't an orange or plum or pear,
Though all of these fruits it is likely to bear.

THE Christmas tree is a popcorn tree—
A fact that a Sleepy-Eye Kid can see—
For look at the popcorn balls and strings
That hang from its branches, 'mong other nice things.

BUT listen to grandpa's wise old talk.
He tells us that popcorn is grown on a stalk.
We'll have to believe him, and so, you see,
That it really isn't a popcorn tree.

THE Christmas tree is a candle tree,
For candles all over it all of us see.
They're red, white and blue, and we'll light 'em tonight,
For candles are meant to make candle trees bright.

NOW listen to grandma (please leave us alone!)—
She tells us that candles are molded, not grown;
So we've got to give up, with a sigh, you see,
The notion that this is a candle tree.

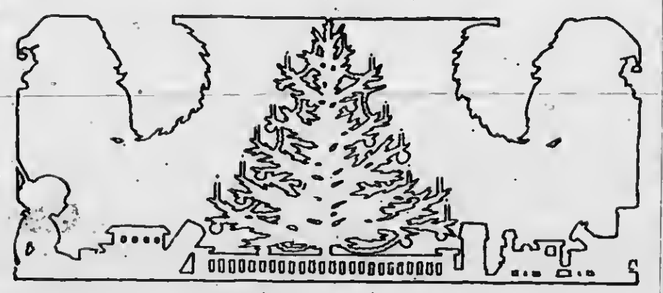
THE Christmas tree is a spangle tree,
For spangles are dangling all over it, see?
Spangles of silver and spangles of gilt,
It's surely a spangle tree Santa has built!

BUT listen to daddy—he says, says he,
There's no such thing as a spangle tree,
For spangles, says daddy, are made in a shop,
So this nice idea we'll have to let drop.

THE Christmas tree is a candy tree—
I'm sure now we have it! Let's holler with glee!
There's candy in boxes and candy in bags,
Let's mark it with "THIS IS A CANDY TREE" tags!

BUT here comes your mamma, who says, if you please,
"Who ever saw candy that GREW upon trees?"
So sadly we've got to surrender such whims,
It may be this candy was TIED to the limbs!

THE Christmas tree is a CHRISTMAS tree!
Is that not sufficient for you and for me?
It's full of good goodies that Santa Claus grows,
And WE shouldn't ask how they got there, I s'pose.



This Shows You What "Honorbilt" Means

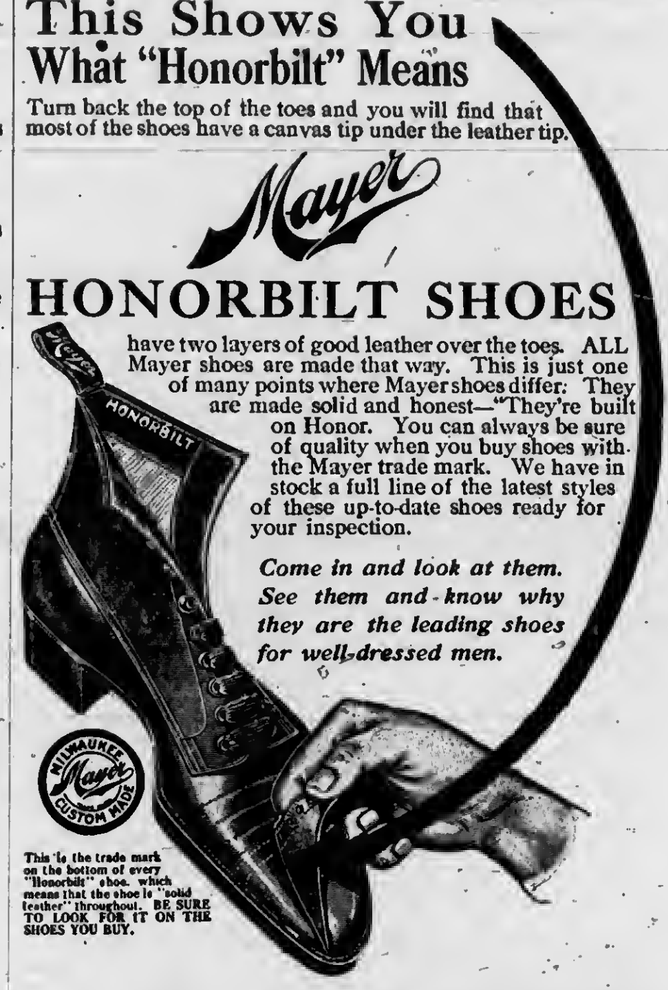
Turn back the top of the toes and you will find that most of the shoes have a canvas tip under the leather tip.

Mayer

HONORBILT SHOES

have two layers of good leather over the toes. ALL Mayer shoes are made that way. This is just one of many points where Mayer shoes differ: They are made solid and honest—"They're built on Honor. You can always be sure of quality when you buy shoes with the Mayer trade mark. We have in stock a full line of the latest styles of these up-to-date shoes ready for your inspection.

Come in and look at them. See them and know why they are the leading shoes for well-dressed men.



This is the trade mark on the bottom of every "Honorbilt" shoe, which means that the shoe is "solid leather" throughout. BE SURE TO LOOK FOR IT ON THE SHOES YOU BUY.

MR. WEBSTER.

He Turned Out Not to Be a Myth After All.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

The revolution of 1848 had collapsed. At one time it had looked as if all Europe would become republican, but the democratic cause was not destined at least then to succeed. Those who had been prominent in the endeavor to shake off royal authority were flying from the scene of their operations with a view to saving their lives or themselves from an infinitely long term of imprisonment.

One evening at that hour when the day is not quite done and the night not yet begun a woman, unattended, entered a cafe on the Boulevard de Capucin in Paris and took a seat at one of the tables. That was at a time when a lady could not with propriety walk alone on the streets of the French capital, much less enter a cafe in the evening unattended.

At a table near by the one at which the lady sat a man of a distinctly German type was dining. He, too, gave evidence of being of the higher class—one who was used to giving orders rather than receiving them. In his buttonhole he wore the rosette of an order of the kingdom of Prussia to which none who could not at least write "von" before his name might be admitted. He had finished his repast, rinsed his fingers in a glass bowl, carefully wiped them and his lips with a napkin and lighted a cigar. Then he leaned back in his chair and began to look about him.

"GIVE ME YOUR ORDER FOR HIS RELEASE."

There was something in the unattended lady that was familiar to him. For some moments he scrutinized her features. "I have seen her somewhere," he said to himself, "but where or when for my life I cannot tell."

While the gentleman was thus trying to place the lady and musing upon her social position, his eyes constantly fixed upon her, she was nerving herself for a coup of which he was the especial object. Suddenly she arose and with flashing eyes and raised voice said in French, but with a foreign accent:

"Is there no one here who will protect a woman from insult? I have always heard of the chivalry of the French. And yet here am I, stared at by that man (pointing to a common outcast), and no man present comes to my defense."

A gentleman sitting at the next table to the lady arose.

"Parbleu, madame! But where is your escort?"

"Monsieur, I am an American. In America a woman may go anywhere safe from insult."

"In that case, madame, permit me to offer you my services."

"Thank you, monsieur. I accept them, but only as a matter of form. Will you kindly arrange a meeting with the man who has insulted me and my husband to take place tomorrow morning at 6 o'clock in the Bois de Boulogne."

Meanwhile the object of this attack had half risen from his table and at this moment began to stammer an apology.

"Pardon, madame," he said in German. "I had no intention"—

"Your intentions are your own affair," interrupted the lady. "Your insult is my husband's to avenge." Then, turning to her partisan, "Will you exchange cards with the gentleman and with me?"

The man last addressed drew two cards from his case, handing one to the lady, the other to the German, who reluctantly produced one of his own. The Frenchman's bore the name of Gaston de Curler, the German that of Count Herman von Hollub.

"I may be found," said the lady to her champion, "at the Hotel Maurice, in the Rue de Rivali. Call for Mrs Webster. I bid you good evening."

"May I not act as your escort?" asked De Curler.

"I will thank you to call a carriage," replied the lady, "and if you will ride with me to my hotel you may meet the man whose challenge you have consented to bear."

Having secured Von Hollub's address De Curler rode with Mrs Webster to her hotel. Leaving him in a waiting room, she told him she would go upstairs to find her husband. Presently she returned and said:

"Mr. Webster is away. He has left a note saying that he will be detained on a matter of importance till near morning. But I will engage that he shall be on hand. I shall not go to bed, but await your coming after you have seen the other party to this affair."

De Curler went away in a bad humor. "This is a very strange affair," he said to himself, "in which I have become entangled. I am the bearer of a challenge from a man I have never seen to a man he has never seen and who has never seen him, the whole matter being started by a woman I have never seen before tonight and because she enters a public dining room alone and is stared at for doing so. I wonder if she really has a husband or if she is going to get me killed in her behalf. Pouf! I don't like this condition at all."

Nevertheless he visited Von Hollub and arranged the meeting, as the lady had desired the weapons to be foils. Then he returned and reported the matter to the lady.

"And now, madame," he added, "having arranged matters for you, I presume I may be excused from further participation in this affair."

"If you so desire it, but my husband and myself are strangers in Paris, and when he goes out to the field he must go unattended."

"In that case, madame, I shall serve him. I will call at 5:30 o'clock."

De Curler left her more than ever dissatisfied with his position. Everything indicated that Mrs. Webster was, what she pretended to be—she was stopping at a first class hotel, a favorite hostelry for Americans, and this partly explained her presence unattended in the restaurant, but not satisfactorily. Though American women had great privileges in their own country, they did not usually avail themselves of them in foreign lands. Well, the morning would bring developments. He would go home and snatch a few hours' sleep before going on to the ground.

At half past 5 in the morning he called at the Hotel Maurice and gave the sleepy concierge his card for Mr. and Mrs. Webster. The man brought him a note signed by the lady saying that Mr. Webster had gone to the rendezvous and that she was so overcome by the painful episode that she was unable to leave her bed.

De Curler was astonished. "Ma foi!" he exclaimed. "What a marvelous condition! This man, my principal, whom I have never seen and whom his opponent has never seen, is so eager to avenge the insult to his wife that he has no patience to wait for his second. Mon Dieu! I must see the end of this affair or I shall die of curiosity."

Jumping into his carriage, he told the driver to take him as quickly as possible to the Bois de Boulogne. Arrived at the place of meeting, he saw Von Hollub standing with a foil in his hand, while a figure, also armed, wearing a long, flowing cloak, was approaching him. De Curler sprang from his carriage and advanced toward them. As he reached them the cloaked figure threw off the outer garment and appeared in a costume usual to women who practice fencing. Astonished as De Curler was, he was still more so when he recognized Mrs. Webster.

"Ah, monsieur," she said, glancing at the newcomer, "you are late. My husband not returning in time, I am obliged to take his place."

Without waiting for preliminaries, she attacked Von Hollub.

Now, Count Herman von Hollub, who was a trusted servant of the king of Prussia, had spent his life in diplomatic work, ignoring those martial practices that have always pertained to the nobility of that kingdom. He knew very little about the art of self defense in any form. Astonished and chagrined at seeing the woman who had the grievance against him come to fight him instead of her husband, he lost his head. All he could do, all he tried to do, was to avoid the thrusts of his opponent.

In a few seconds his weapon had been wrenched from his grasp and, flying in an arc above his head, landed a dozen yards away from him. The woman then put the point of her foil against his breast.

"Count," she said, "you do not know me. I am the wife of Carl D., one of the leaders of the late revolution in Prussia. He married me in New York shortly before the revolution, and I have lived in your country. You have come here to secure the consent of the French government to take my husband back to Prussia to be tried for treason. You have him in prison and were to start today with him for Berlin. Give me your order for his release and your written word that you will not proceed further against him or I will kill you."

The count looked into the woman's eyes and saw a determination to act upon her words.

"Will he return to Prussia?" he asked.

"No. He will find a home in America."

"Then I consent."

The contract having been signed, De Curler rode with Frau D. to the prison where her husband was confined, and the revolutionist stepped forth a free man.

"Having learned a challenge on your behalf," said De Curler, "never having seen you, to a man I had never seen, I am happy to make your acquaintance."

Herr D. went with his wife to America. He became a German American citizen and a dozen years later took part in the great American struggle for government by the people.

The SILVER HORDE

Boyd, now thoroughly alarmed, took a launch and sped up the river to Cherry's house in the hope that she could prevail upon her own recruits to return.

He found the girl ready to accompany him, and they were about to embark when Chakawana came running from the house as if in sudden fright.

"Where you go?" she asked her mistress.

"I am going to the Indian village. You stay here."

"No, no! I no stop here alone. I go 'long too." She cast a glance over her shoulder.

"But, Chakawana, what is the matter? Are you afraid?"

"Yes." Chakawana nodded her pretty head vigorously.

"What are you afraid of?" Boyd asked, but she merely stared at him with eyes as black and as round as ox-heart cherries, then renewed her entreaty. When she had received permission and had hurried back to the house her mistress remarked, with a puzzled frown:

"I don't know what to make of her. She and Constantine have been acting very strangely of late. She used to be the happiest sort of creature, always laughing and singing, but she has changed entirely during the last few weeks. Both she and Constantine are forever whispering to each other and skulking about until I am getting nervous myself." Then, as the Indian girl came flying back with her tiny baby brother in her arms, Cherry added: "She's pretty, isn't she? I can't bear ugly people around me."

At the native village, in spite of every effort she and Boyd could make, the Indians refused to go back to work.

"Since they can't use your money at the store, they don't seem to care whether it is good or not," Cherry announced after a time. "Oh, but it's maddening!" She stamped her foot angrily. "And I was so proud of my work! I thought I had really done something to help at last. But I don't know what more we can do. I've reached the end of my rope."

"So have I," he confessed. "Even with those fifty Aleuts we weren't making more than half capacity, but we were making a shooting-at least. Now!" He threw up his hands in a gesture of despair. "George is in trouble, too. Marsh's men have cut out his claim, and the Yukon may arrive at any time."

"The Yukon! What for?"

"Mr. Wayland's yacht. She is making a tour of this coast with the other officers of the trust and Mildred."

"Is she coming here?" demanded Cherry in a strained voice.

"Yes."

"Why didn't you tell me?"

"I don't know. I didn't think you would be interested."

"So she can't wait? She is so eager that she follows you from Chicago clear up into this wilderness. Then you won't need my assistance any more, will you?" Her lids drooped, half hiding her eyes, and her face hardened.

"Of course I shall need your help. Her coming won't make any difference."

"It strikes me that you have allowed me to make a fool of myself long enough," said Cherry angrily. "Here I have been breaking my heart over this enterprise, while you have known all the time that she was coming. Why, you have merely used me and George, and all the rest of us, for that matter." She laughed harshly.

"You don't understand," said Boyd. "Miss Wayland"

"Oh, yes, I do. I dare say it will gratify her to straighten out your troubles. A word from her lips and your worries will vanish like a mist. Let us acknowledge ourselves beaten and beg her to save us."

Boyd shook his head in opposition, but she gave him no time for speech.

"It seems that you wanted to pose as a hero before her and employed us to build up your reputation. Well, I am glad we failed. I am glad Willis Marsh showed you how very helpless you are. Let her come to your rescue now. I'm through. Do you understand? I'm through!"

Her outburst had been so unexpected, so violent, that he realized that he would be unable to take command.

"Miss Wayland will take no hand in my affairs. I doubt if she will even realize that this trouble is all about," he said a trifle stiffly. "I suppose I did want to pay the debts, and I dare say I did use you and the others, but you know that all the time."

"Why won't she help you?" queried Cherry. "Doesn't she care enough about you? Doesn't she know enough to understand your position?"

"Yes, I do; this is my affair, and I've got to make good without her assistance. Society isn't the soft machinery of failure, and she has left me to make my own way. Besides, she would not understand. She is the father's wishes even if she does not. That's part of her education. Oh, Wayne Wayland's opposition isn't all I have had to overcome. I have had to show his daughter that I am one of her own kind, for she hates weakness."

"And you think that woman loves you! Why, she isn't a woman at all. She doesn't know what love means. When a woman loves, do you imagine she cares for money or fame or success? If I cared for a man do you think I'd go—to—to—father—if I might marry him or wait for my lover to prove himself worthy of me? Do you think I'd send him through the hell you have suffered to try his mettle?" She laughed outright. "Why, I'd become what he was, and I'd fight with him. I'd give him all I had—money, position, friends, influence. If my people objected I'd tell them to go hang. I'd give them up and join him. I'd use every dollar, every wile and feminine device that I possessed. In his service. When a woman loves she doesn't care what the world says. The man may be a weakling or worse, but he is still her lover, and she will go to him."

The words had come tumbling forth until Cherry was forced to pause for breath.

"You don't understand," said Boyd. "You are primitive; you have lived in the open. She is exactly your opposite. Conservatism is bred in her, and she can't help her nature. It was hard even for me to understand at first, but when I saw her life, when I saw how she had been reared from childhood, I understood perfectly. I would not have her other than she is. It is enough for me to know that in her own way she cares for me."

Cherry tossed her head in derision. "For my part I prefer red blood to sap, and when I love I want to know it. I don't want to have it proved to me like a problem in geometery. I want to love and hate and do wild, impulsive things against my own judgment."

"Have you ever loved in that way?" he inquired abruptly.

"Yes," she answered without hesitation, looking him squarely in the eye with an expression he could not fathom. "Thank heaven, I'm not the artificial kind! As you say, I'm primitive. I have lived!" Her crimson lips curled scornfully.

"I didn't expect you to understand her," he said. "But she loves me. And I—well, she is my religion. A man must have some God. He can't worship his own image."

Cherry Malotte turned slowly to the landing place and made her way into the launch. All the way back she kept silence, and Boyd, confused by her attack upon the citadel of his faith and strangely sore at heart, made no effort at speech.

"Flingerless" Fraser met him at the water's edge.

"Where in the devil have you been?" he cried breathlessly.

"At the Indian village after help. Why?"

"Bill Gregor is in for some trouble. He sent for it up two hours ago. I was just going to beat it down there."

"What's up?"

"There's six of your men in the bunk house all beat up. They don't look like they'd fish any more for awhile. Marsh's men threw their outfits overboard and they had to shoot them. Things are getting warm."

"We can't allow ourselves to be driven from the field," said Boyd quickly. "I'll get the shermen together right away. Find Alec and Ethelbert Sterling. We'll need every man we can get."

"Nothing doing with that party. He's about like a horse-thief gone to bed."

"Very well; he's no good anyhow. He's better out of the way."

He hurried through the building, now silent and half deserted, gathering a crew that, he knew, would be the envy of the camp. Then he went to the edge of the platform and looked his men into the boats and set out.

All that night and on through the long, murky hours of the night the battle raged on the lower reaches of the Kaiyuh. Boat crews clashed; half-sunk hulks cursed each other and fought with oars and boat hooks and clubs, and when these failed they drove at one another with wicked, cruel fish "clubs." All night the hordes of salmon swarmed upward toward the fatal waters of their birth, through sargasso beds that were to go and silt beneath keels that reeked to the lust of struggling, heedless bodies.

Yuletide Proverbs.

The wise man begs to express much more than proverbial wishes that his entire clientele may enjoy the merriest of merry Christmases.

The universal spread of dulcimer and drumdolon is infinitely preferable to that of the dolorous.

Our early days will not, indeed, come back, yet as Christmas an Indian summer evening to the venerable, a reviving reminiscence of youth.

"The horror of all recrecy" should be published on Christmas day.

"A royal trait, believe me," is the reindeer equipage of good old St. Nick.

A Christmas motto?

His heart and hand both open and free,
For what he has he gives, what things he shows
Yet gives no gift till judgment guide his bounty.

"Nature teaches beasts to know their friends," and why should they not share in the Christmas good will.

"Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge." Let us inwardly digest this truism with the Christmas cheer.

"Enough with overmeasure," will probably characterize the Christmas possessions of a majority of us.

Which does "mental day stand tiptoe on the misty mountain top" if not on merry Christmas?

Action.

Action does not always bring happiness, but there is no happiness without action.—Beaconsfield.

NOVEMBER LAMBS AT WEANING TIME.

As a rule, a healthy full mouthed ewe experiences little trouble in lambing, but there will be exceptions, writes J. Pickering Ross in Farm and Fireside. Their actual labor often extends over several hours, but no anxiety need be felt until signs of exhaustion are evident; then, and not until then, manual help should be offered.

When a ewe has been delivered of a lamb which soon gets on his legs to reach for the teat and is successful in his efforts, all that is needed is to see that the udder and teats are clean (if not, they should be bathed with fairly hot water) and a little of the milk drawn off to make sure that the flow is natural. If, however, the lamb fails to get on his legs it must be helped up and assisted to suck. If it is unable to do so it must be fed from a bottle with a rubber nipple or from a teaspoon. It's mother's milk is best. If it should turn out that from some trouble with the udder or the teats or from some other cause she is unable to supply it, milk must be drawn from a ewe that has more than her own lamb needs and be fed as above. The ewe must then be seen to, and if in a day or two she is still without a full supply of milk a foster mother, one which has lost her lamb or which has more than her own lamb needs, must be found and made to adopt this one. This is easily done if she is held a few times until she is used to the lamb.

Ewe's milk is always best, but if it is absolutely necessary that from a fresh cow warmed a little may be used. At the start a spoonful every half hour should be given, gradually increasing the quantity and lengthening the periods between feeding. This will be until a good foster mother is found or until the mother ewe begins to let down milk freely.

Oxford Down sheep are widely distributed in this country and Canada. They are the largest and heaviest of the Down breeds.

Young lambs are very liable to get chilled. When this occurs a bath of water as hot as the hand will bear it should be given at once, and followed by a thorough drying and hard rubbing. Some warm milk with a little spirits should be given and the lamb wrapped up in flannel blankets and laid in front of the fire-place.

Constipation is also a common trouble with young lambs. The best remedy for this is digestions with a syringe of warm milk or warm water gruel.

THE VALUABLE HOG.

Relation of Pork Production to the Farm Economy.

Hogs by nature are designed especially for the consumption of concentrated feeds, such as grain. Of late years more roughage in the form of pasture has been utilized. This, however, is only one of several important factors. The hog must have the principal part to do with the marketing of the concentrated foodstuffs and by-products, such as milk and wastes from the farm. Whole milk is produced in large quantities hogs are almost essential, except in unusual conditions.

Where much corn is grown hogs fit in well. In fact, the hog is a valuable adjunct in the disposition of all the grains and waste by-products. However, it must be remembered that hogs grown by silage and beets are not proportionately as profitable as when a smaller ration are grown. Many people have made the mistake of getting overenthusiastic as to the profits to be realized in pork production and have attempted far more than they could efficiently handle with the result that prospective profits were absorbed in expenses and losses. Here, as elsewhere, success depends on good judgment.

Remedy For Scratches.

Night time is correct: dry the skin of the horses legs after washing or when wet from rain or snow and allowing horse to stand in cool drafts after it thus tends to reduce scratches. Never wash the legs from November to May. Keep them dry. At time of trouble poultice the parts with warm bread for a few days, then apply freely twice a day an ointment composed of one dram each of spirits of camphor, one dram compound tincture of benzoin and two drams flowers of sulphur per ounce of lanolin or lard. In old cases where all treatments fail blistering thoroughly with cerate of cantharides often proves effective.

A Cumulative Mistake.

"How in the name of common sense did you come to buy so many eggs when I told you to buy only one dozen?" said Uncle Toby to her colored cook.

"Well, honey, you see, I went to get one dozen, but I got a countryman five dozen, but he was different from the rest, for he only had—"—Lippincott's.

ANNUAL CONVENTION HELD

point a committee to meet with Governor-elect Osborn and set forth our needs.

"Resolved, That all undersized trout, not to exceed fifteen per cent, taken in 2½ inch mesh gill net be placed on the market.

Resolved, That the law relating to meshes of pound nets read: "as manufactured" instead of, "as found in the water in use."

Resolved, That whitefish weighing one and one-half pounds dressed, shall be legal fish.

Resolved, That the law relating to the taking of blueback herring taken in pound nets read: "2 inch mesh in crib instead of 2½."

Resolved, That the part of Act No. 213, Sec. 3, relating to the setting of chub nets be stricken out of the present law. Be it further

Resolved, That the attention of the legislature be called to the fact that large appropriations are made for the purpose of propagating fish in the rivers and streams and from which source returns are meagre. Therefore be it

Resolved, That we petition the legislature to come to the aid of fishermen of the great lakes in establishing hatcheries at desirable points for the artificial propagation of fish. Under present conditions this great state produces not less than $2,000,000 worth of products, but this could be doubled or trebled. The ever increasing demand for brain food, in the line of fish, makes artificial propagation imperative. It has been demonstrated on Lake Erie by the state of Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania that hatcheries are a paying investment since the large catches of recent years are directly due to artificial propagation. Be it further

Resolved, That boats licensed to fish in Michigan waters be compelled to land their catch in Michigan, since the present license law has been abused by non-residents fishing with undersized nets and catching undersized fish and escaping prosecution by landing the catch in other states.

The fishermen were honored by having in attendance Senator-elect VanderWerp of Muskegon county and Representatives Giles of Muskegon county and Representative Clark and McBride from Ottawa county and Representative Murphy of St. Joseph, Berrien county.

Every effort was made to impress upon the minds of the visitors the injustice of present conditions. The president gave each a opportunity to talk to the delegates and the kindly words spoken by each gave evidence that their sympathies are with the men who brave all kinds of weather to make a livelihood for themselves and those dependent upon them.

The banquet at the Gildner Hotel tendered the visiting delegates was enjoyed by all. H. J. Dornbos acted as toastmaster and also offered the invocation. All the representatives were called upon for short speeches and also Hon. Peter Jensen of Escanaba president of the association a member of the last legislature, and who was returned again this year; G. C. Geiken of Charlevoix, R. F. Kleinke of Menominee, Arthur Habel of St. Joseph and Wm. Verduin of this city.

Then mention must be made of "Billy" Callister, who made his maiden speech, but was listened to with rapt attention and his friends predict that when the next convention meets two years hence, he will have developed into a full fledged after dinner speaker.

Jacob L. Dornbos, cashier of the People Savings Bank, spoke on the friendly relations relations which exist between the fishermen and the banker.

John J. Bolf, secretary of the local and state association also made a few remarks and the 6th annual convention of the Lake Michigan Fisherman Association came to a fitting close.—Grand Haven Tribune.

WESTERN FRUIT GROWER

Says Best Fruit Land is in Western Michigan

And Has Come to This State to Invest His Money.

H. E. Wells—a fruit grower of Bakersfield, Kern county, California who has recently located in Detroit, thinks that Michigan is the coming king of the world in commercial orchard raising, and has backed his decision by purchasing land to improve and cultivate as it is handled on the Pacific coast.

"Glowing accounts are given by the promoters of western irrigated districts, their large salesroom displays of fancy fruit, their beautifully arranged booklets and a corps of competent and trained salesmen brought here to tell of the vast fortunes to be made in apples and general fruit culture of the West and south," he says, "from $500 to $1,500 per acre is being asked for their raw lands. Compare the difference between their prices and those which prevail here at home. And the market is right at your door, where the choice fruit land can be bought at from $30 to $40 per acre, where irrigation is not necessary, even to grow small fruits, berries and vegetables, and where millions of feet of timber has been taken off the land, a positive proof that the land is naturally adapted to wood growth and where the apple tree bears fruit for 80 years which is not so of the life of the tree on irrigated lands.

"In our own orchard in California we have estimated that we have reset three times by filling in, the whole of our twenty acres of peaches and apricot trees since 1894, that being the year we purchased our land. The beautiful color and symmetry of size can be attained in Michigan if proper spraying, cultivating, pruning, etc., is carried out as it is in the west and south.

"Do you know that it will cost you $20,000 to bring a twenty acre apple orchard into bearing in Washington, Oregon or Idaho? Why not invest from $1,500 to $2,000 here in your own state and have the same rich fruit and at a less cost by ten times what you must pay out west.

"All you need do to attract this flow of gold into your own state is to point to such men and their paying orchards as the following: R. D. Graham of Grand Rapids; W. R. Roach of Hart; W. L. Thomas of Traverse City; Paul Rose of Frankfort; Oscar Braman of Kent county, and Rollin Morril, who is referred to as the peach king, and dozens of others who are getting annual fortunes right here at home. Such actual demonstrated facts taken with a little of the western spirit on the part of the people and their boards of horticulture and commerce, will soon turn the flow of investors from the west to the east, instead of vice versa as it now is going."

HO! FOR CHRISTMAS SPORTS OUTDOORS.

By UNCLE BOB

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Associations]

DID you ever wear snowshoes? Maybe not, but they're great fun if you know how to use them. Of course if you live in southern California or Florida or other really southern places you needn't ever hope to enjoy snowshoes unless you go a long way north, but it is interesting to read about them and know something about them anyhow. There are states in this big country where snowshoeing is popular away up in Michigan and Wisconsin, for instance, where the snow lies deep on the ground for months at a time. Over in Norway, far across the Atlantic ocean, is the place where snowshoes come in the most handy, for that is a land of deep snows and long winters.

NOT THE LEAST BIT AFRAID

The idea of the snowshoe is to keep you from breaking through the top crust of the deep snow and let you skim gracefully over the white surface. Snowshoes are much used in the big forests, where the snow falls several feet deep and then gets a frozen crust over the surface that will bear up any body on snowshoes, but would let a person wearing ordinary shoes or boots break through and flounder about up to his arms perhaps.

"SKATES FOR ME," SAYS SUSIE.

With a pair of snowshoes secured to your feet you can travel fast over the snow crust if you know how. It takes quite a little practice to learn how to travel on snowshoes. The little boy in the picture certainly looks as if his father had taught him how, for he doesn't appear to be the least bit afraid. His smile shows that he is enjoying the sport.

Snowshoes are not real shoes, of course. You must wear your real shoes and stockings to keep your feet warm, then fasten the snowshoes to your soles. They are really very much like little sleds, only that you have a sled on each foot instead of the "belly buster" that you use in coasting downhill. You can climb hills on snowshoes, and you can't do that on a sled, as you know. That's where lots of the fun comes in.

In northern Michigan and some other parts of the north the little boys and girls sometimes get a pair of snowshoes from Santa Claus, and they prove to be a very enjoyable Christmas present.

"Skates will do for me," says Susie. Oh, very well. Then we'll have Santa Claus leave a pair of skates for you beneath the mantel. They're too big and awkward to put into your stockings, and you want all the room there is in your stockings for candy and other smaller gifts, anyhow.

Every boy and girl who loves the outdoors—and what child doesn't?—wants to go skating. You'll agree to that, won't you? Of course, if you live far south, where the creeks and ponds don't freeze over, you can't expect ice skating, but then there are roller skates. Still, roller skates don't really suggest Christmas. A pair of them is a welcome gift from Santa Claus to a boy or a girl, but it is the ice skates that make us think of Christmas time.

Nowadays skates are nicer and cheaper than those we used to have, say, thirty years ago. Did any of you boys and girls ever see a pair of the clumsy looking wooden skates with steel runners which your fathers used to wear before the all metal skates came into fashion? Those wooden skates were strapped to heel and toe—no heel plates or toe clamps in those days. But they were mighty good skates all the same, and your father enjoyed them just as much as you'll enjoy the highly polished nickeled beauties which Santa Claus may leave for you this Christmas.

Here's a picture of the Christmas queen, the queen of outdoor sports in winter time. You will see that she is dressed very warmly, which is as she should be, for she is standing in a treetop—her throne, you know—and it must be pretty chilly up there when the wind blows. But you will notice also that the Christmas queen has wings, so she can fly down and join her subjects, the other boys and girls, in skating, snowshoeing or coasting downhill. The queen in this case is not a fairy, as you may imagine, but a dear little girl "made up" to play the part at a Christmas tournament that took place in an English town last year.

Pat, intent on emigrating, as he was out of work, stops before a newsdealer's store and reads a placard with "Situation in Egypt" upon it.

"Sure I've come about that situation you're advertising."

"What situation do you mean?"

THEATRICAL

The Nellie Peck Saunders Concert Company was given as the first number of the lecture course at the Charlevoix theater to a fair sized audience last Wednesday evening.

Miss Barney, one of the company, is the best pianist ever before the Charlevoix public. Her voice is vibrant and of the sweetest timbre. Her stage presence thrills the listeners to the utmost.

Mr. Bertoli, the baritone soloist, was a most satisfying artist and showed his great command of the art of singing, his enunciation being the finest calibre.

Mrs. Saunders is a rare entertainer in impersonations and renders the control of her voice in a way that makes one wonder if she is not a double. She makes her audiences laugh heartily and sigh with deep sympathy in her renditions of characters.

Saunders Co. is a rare sample of dramatic art and being the first number of a well selected lecture course, the other numbers should be well patronized by the Charlevoix people. The credit must be given to the committee who so ably selected the winter's entertainment in this city.

WHAT THE LAW PROVIDES FOR

Synopsis of the Same Relating to County Road System

FURNISHED BY COUNTY CLERK PAYTON

May be Submitted to the People in the Spring

Abundant Safeguards are Placed upon Work of Commission Supervisors are in Control at All Times.

At the present time the press and the people of this county, are agitating the question of good roads, and in some cases are asking the board of supervisors, to submit the question of the county road system to the people. We all understand the working of our present system, we know, we have fifteen townships in this county, with fifteen highway commissioners, building fifteen different roads, under fifteen different systems, with fifteen different kinds of material with fifteen different results. We all want good roads; we know good roads will enhance the value of our farms, the merchants know that good roads leading to his village or city are of a pecuniary interest to him. The question is, how can we derive the greatest benefit for the money expended.

A synopsis of the county road law of 1909 may be of some interest. The county road system, may be submitted to the electors of the county, to be voted upon, at a special or general election. If submitted, the county clerk shall give notice of said election and the question shall be stated on the ballots as follows, viz.

Shall the county road system be adopted by the county of Charlevoix:

Yes ( )

No ( )

If upon the canvass of the votes, it shall appear that a majority is in favor of the adoption, then the county road system shall be considered as adopted in the county. In any county, where the county road system shall be adopted, a board of county road commissioners, not exceeding five in number, shall be elected by the people of the county. In the first instance such commissioners, shall be appointed by the board of supervisors, or the supervisors may call a special election for that purpose; if appointed their successors shall be elected at the April election following the date of their appointment. If the commission shall consist of three members, one of said members shall be elected for a period of two years, one for four and one for six years. Any person so elected or appointed, shall within ten days after being notified of such election, or appointment, subscribe to the constitutional oath of office, and file a bond in such amount, as the board of supervisors may determine. Thereafter, one commissioner shall be biennially elected for the full term of six years. The board of supervisors shall fix the compensation of such commissioners, and a supervisor is not eligible to the office. A majority of the members of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Such board shall be known as the board of county road commissioners of the county of Charlevoix and by that name sue or be sued. The clerk of the county shall be the clerk of the board, and shall keep the records and accounts and preserve the files in the manner directed by the board. Neither the clerk nor any member of the board, shall directly or indirectly be pecuniarily interested in any contract entered into, or work carried on by, or for such board, or in the property purchased or sold by or, for such board.

Said board of commissioners may employ such superintendents, engineers and laborers, and purchase such machines, tools and material as shall in their judgment be necessary for the proper carrying on of their work.

Any road heretofore laid out, or any part thereof, shall become a county road if the board of county road commissioners shall at any time so determine, and in passing through, or on the line between townships and incorporated villages, any street or part of street of such village may be adopted as a county road with the consent of the proper authorities of such village. When such road has been so adopted the commissioners shall have sole and exclusive jurisdiction and control of such road, and the township or municipality within which the same is situated shall be relieved from all responsibility therefor. The board of county road commissioners are empowered to, at any time, abandon and discontinue any county road, or part thereof by a majority vote. After the proceedings to discontinue have been had, the jurisdiction and control of such road shall revert to the township or municipality within which the same is situated. Said board have authority to grade, drain, reconstruct, gravel or macadamize any road under their control which in their judgment may be best. In all cases involving the expenditure of an amount of over five hundred dollars, said commissioners shall advertise for sealed proposals for such work but they may reject such bids, and do the work by day labor, but in such case they shall file the plans and specifications, and their reason, in writing with the county clerk.

The said commission, shall on or before the first day of October in each year determine upon the amount of tax, which in their judgment, should be raised, specifying and itemizing the roads and parts of roads upon which such moneys are to be expended, and the amount to be expended on each road, such tax shall not exceed three dollars, on each one thousand dollars of the assessed valuation, in counties where such valuation does not exceed twenty millions of dollars. Said report shall be submitted to the board of supervisors, and if a majority of the board of supervisors think the amount asked for is correct, then they shall apportion such tax among the several townships and cities of the county, but if the majority of the supervisors do not approve of the amount determined on by the said commission, the supervisors shall decide upon the amount of tax to be raised, and the supervisors shall have power to reject in whole or in part any or all of the items for the section of roads thus submitted and it shall not be lawful for such commission, without the consent of such board of supervisors, to expend any moneys upon any other roads than as thus specified.

Said commissioners shall have no power to contract indebtedness in excess of the moneys credited to such commissioners and actually in the hands of the county treasurer.

All roads in townships, except county roads, shall be township roads, and shall be under the care of the township board and highway commissioner. The commissioner shall keep an accurate account of all moneys received and disbursed and a full and complete statement, in detail, of work done by it, and the same shall be submitted to the board of supervisors at their annual meeting. The board of supervisors shall audit all claims that the said commissioners may have against the county.

The board of supervisors of any county, having adopted the county road system may, upon the proper petitions being filed, submit the question of rescinding the vote, by which it was adopted. When any county shall rescind the vote by which it was adopted the county road system shall cease to be operative except, for the purpose of completing work under contract at the time as such rescission.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

Statistics for Last Year Show Considerable Increase.

Marriage and divorce statistics for Michigan which show the state's "Gretna Green," Berrien county, has established a "marriage industry" of considerable importance and that the number of divorces in the state increases each year are contained in the annual vital statistics bulletin issued by Secretary of State Martindale.

There were 27,533 marriages in the state last year, an increase of 1,587 over 1908, and 3,518 divorces, an increase of 500 over the previous year. Commenting on the marriage statistics Secretary Martindale says: "The number of marriages has increased by leaps and bounds since 1898, which no doubt is due to the fact that the enterprising clerks of Berrien have made a 'Gretna Green' of their county."

It is pointed out that the marriage rate in Berrien, centering at St. Joseph, has increased from 17.8 in 1898 to the high rate of 68.7 in 1908. The marriage rate of other counties per 1000 population is said to be uniform with the exception of Menominee which, because of its location on the border of Wisconsin, has a rate of thirty five. The number of divorces recorded corresponds, it is stated, to a rate of 2.6 persons per 1,000 population, which is about one-eighth the marriage rate for the year.

The total number of births of the year were 61,318 a decrease of 451 over the previous year. There were 36,313 deaths during the year a decrease of 148 from 1908. There were 2,518 deaths caused by violence, of which fifty-eight were homicides and 315 suicides.

FERRY CONTRACT LET

Sam Alexander will Remain at Ironton the Coming Year

Retention in Place will Be Generally Approved by Public

At the October session of the Board of Supervisors the county assumed the burden of operating the Ironton ferry which up to the present time has been in part borne by Evehue township, and Supervisors Grail of South Arm. Adams of Marion and McDonald of Evehue were appointed a committee to have charge of the ferry the coming year.

Last week the committee met at Ironton and awarded the contract for operating the ferry the coming year to Sam Alexander for sixty-five dollars a month which is approximately the cost of operating the same for the past five years.

Mr. Alexander has been in charge for a number of years, proving himself an efficient man, and his retention will meet with the general approval of the public.

FOURTH ANNUAL REUNION

Of Charlevoix High School Class of Nineteen-hundred and Seven

Held at Hotel Elston Tuesday Night—Plans for Re-union are Completed.

When President Emeritus, Lafayette Carey, called for order on the occasion of the fourth annual reunion of the Charlevoix High School Class of '07, at the Elston Hotel parlors last evening, thirteen of the original twenty-three members were present. From the greeting handshake to the last farewell there was not a dull moment. Singing, reminiscences and toasts were indulged in until the meeting was called to order for the discussion of business. Plans for the fifth reunion, to be held here in 1911, were formulated and a committee appointed to make arrangements for it at that time. It had been understood previously that the class was to have a return ten years after graduation, but nothing definite had been planned. Last evening it was not only formally decided to hold the re-union in Charlevoix during the month of August 1917, but a committee of three was chosen to take it in charge. At this time the class means to make especial effort to be present. It was the prevalent feeling last evening that at that time the class would be well represented.

The business having been attended to, the solemn atmosphere was thrown aside and all adjourned to the dining room where light, but delicious refreshments were served. At the table, President Emeritus, Lafayette Carey, introduced the toastmaster, Frank Campbell, who called on several of the members for short speeches and stories. These were responded to in a very lively manner, in fact, it was pretty unanimously agreed that some of the stories told would entitle the author to membership in the Arcanas club without any further qualifications.

The refreshments and stories having been finished, the gathering which is thought to be the best yet, ended and with the giving of the '07 class yell out of doors, the fourth annual reunion was formerly proclaimed adjourned.

Those present were Lafayette Carey, Mayfred Stacks, Frank Campbell, Winnie Weaver, Jennie Mitchell, Byron Cook, Maud Cross Clare Furman, Merle Feltz, Lee Scroggie, Mable Weed, Lola Cross and Forrest Kabe.

OLEOMARGARINE PRODUCTION

Less than Three Per Cent Paid Tax of Ten Cents per Pound.

The production of oleomargarine increased from 92,282,815 pounds in 1909 to 120,755,126 pounds in 1910. Of this latter amount 3,491,978 pounds were taxed at ten cents per pound. It will thus be noted that over 97 per cent of the oleomargarine manufactured during the last fiscal year was taxed at only one-fourth cent per pound. These figures are issued by the federal internal revenue commissioner and are authentic. They clearly demonstrate the fact that the oleomargarine business is not working under such a burden as many people think. People have heard so much about the ten cent tax on artificially colored oleomargarine that they have naturally associated this tax with all oleomargarine.

As a matter of fact less than three per cent of the total product is taxed at ten cents per pound, the remainder being taxed only a quarter of a cent per pound.

An effort will probably be made by the oleomargarine manufacturers to secure the repeal of the 10 per cent tax at the present session of congress. These statistics indicate that the claims advanced that the present law is a "burden upon the poor man because it taxes his butter ten cents per pound" is not founded upon fact.

ATTEMPTED MURDER

And Suicide at East Jordan Monday Morning

Edward Patterson Shoots Wife and Himself After Quarrel

The efforts of a remorseful husband to get back his wife from whom he had been separated ended Monday morning in a tragedy at East Jordan which may result in at least one death.

Two weeks ago Edward Patterson and his wife quarreled, and a separation was the result. Ever since Patterson has been trying to get her to come back to him, but she has refused. Early Monday morning he called again at her home and pleaded with her, but in vain.

Their baby's picture next attracted his attention and he demanded it. When she refused to give it to him, he drew a revolver and fired point blank. The ball entered her forehead just above the eye and glanced, coming out just below the nose. Mrs. Patterson, who was sitting on a chair, could do nothing to escape.

As soon as Patterson fired the shot he went outside on the veranda and attempted suicide. He fired three shots at himself but only one of them took effect, the other two burying themselves in the wall of the building. The third shot entered his head just below the ear and remained in his skull.

His chances of recovery are very slight, but Mrs. Patterson is not severely wounded, although she will be disfigured for life.

DESCRIBES WORK OF BUREAU

President D. H. Day Writes Letter to Chicago Packer

IN ANSWER TO RECENT ARTICLE

Interesting to the People of Western Michigan

Most Favored Locality that Sun Shines Upon Thousands of Acres Waiting to be Made Productive Farms.

The following letter was written to the Chicago Packer by D. H. Day president of the Western Michigan Development Bureau in regard to the workings of that organization, and is of particular interest to the people of this region.

Glen Haven, Mich., Dec. 5, 1910.

To the Packer: For several days I have been trying to get time to write you regarding an article which appeared in your journal of November 12, entitled "Booming Michigan Lands," from your Detroit correspondent of November 10 in reference to the workings of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, but owing to pressure of business have been unable to do so earlier.

It is not my intention to enter into a lengthy discussion of this subject but merely to correct in as few words as possible some of the statements that are detrimental to the interests of the bureau and that have no foundation of fact. Referring to the first part of the article which is descriptive and deals with climatic conditions, no particular fault having been found, I have to deal with that which follows.

The article says that within the described locations no land can be had for $8 to $15 per acre, with or without stumps; that unimproved lands find ready sale at $50 per acre and improved at $100 and upwards. This is erroneous. The best lands in the region described are selling from $10 to $20 to $30, according to location, nearness to markets, shipping facilities, etc., and thousands upon thousands of acres of even the best hardwood stump lands can be bought at these prices from lumbermen who have cut over these lands, not that they do not know their coming value, but rather on account of their realizing their duty to the state and to mankind to do so. They have gathered from these lands the bountiful first crop provided by nature, which has given them a great harvest, and they would be less than human to withhold from the masses these rich lands which will soon become of such great value in solving the coming question of the day, how our rapidly growing population is to be fed.

It is not claimed by the bureau that all lands in its territory are typical fruit lands. It has just published a booklet descriptive of its several counties, honestly giving statistics and information as to what is grown and what is best in different localities. It does claim that diversified farming can be practiced practically throughout its entire territory, properly selecting that which will produce the best results in its wide domain. It does claim that "light sand lands," from which grew the stately pines so thick that several cuttings were necessary to remove them, will grow fruit trees or other crops properly handled.

Michigan, less than 100 years ago was declared by our government experts as a barren waste, swamp etc., and not fit for habitation man north of Fort Detroit. W these men to come back to now what excuse could they h for such short sightedness shame would be theirs. Light lands have always been consi because plenty of what was ered rich was to be had t cally nothing. Conditi changed every foot of gro be improved to feed t They are public bene solved this question f the people how it ca at a profit.

CHILDREN NEED VERY BEST ROADS

Bad Highways Prevent Regular Attendance at School.

SOCIAL GATHERINGS A TASK.

National Grange Is Urged to Work For Better Highways as a Help to Youngsters and Greater Interest In Church and Civic Improvement.

One of the advantages that good roads are to a community that are often lost sight of is the prevention of children attending school regularly, thus furthering the ambition of every parent that his or her child shall be well educated, and another is the prevention of social intercourse, which is only fully developed when the "going" is easy over well cared for highways.

In an article written for the national grange by Logan Waller Page he says:

"The advantages of good roads extend to every citizen, whether he lives in city or country, and to every enterprise, whether it be agricultural, manufacturing or mining. All are more or less dependent on the common highways as an avenue of the commercial transportation, and in proportion as these highways are improved so as to facilitate transportation are they benefited thereby. These benefits have been carefully computed and estimated in dollars and cents and so enormous have they been that they constitute a convincing argument to any thinking man of the importance of a necessary for road improvement.

CHAPTER XVII.

As the sun slanted up between the southward hills out from the gossamer haze that lay like filmy forest smoke above the ocean came a snow white yacht.

To Boyd Emerson she seemed like an angel of mercy, and he stood forth upon the deck of his launch searching her hungrily for the sight of a woman's figure. When he had first seen the ship rounding the point he had uttered a cry, then fallen silent watching her as she drew near, heedless of his surroundings. His heart was leaping; his breath was choking him. It seemed as if he must shout Mildred's name aloud and stretch his arms out to her. Of course she would see him as the Grande Dame passed. She would be looking for him, he knew. She would be standing there, wet with the dew, searching with all her eyes. Doubtless she had waited patiently at her post from the instant land came into sight. Seeing a sudden panic lest she pass him unnoticed, he ordered his launch near the yacht's course. His eyes roved over the craft, but all he saw were a uniformed officer on the bridge and the bronzed faces of the watch staring over the rail. He saw close drawn curtains over the cabin windows, indicating that the passengers were still asleep. Then as he stood there heavy hearted, drooping with fatigue, his wet body chilled by the morning's breath, the Grande Dame glided past, and he found the shell beneath his feet rocking in her wake.

George Balt hailed him and brought his own launch alongside.

"What craft is that?" he inquired.

"She is the company's yacht with the N. A. P. A. officers aboard."

"Some of our boys is hurt pretty bad," he observed. "I've told them to take his gear nets and go back to the plant."

"We all need breakfast."

"I don't want nothing. I'm going over to the trap."

Emerson shrugged his shoulders listlessly; he was very tired. "What is the use? It won't pay us to lift it."

"I've watched that point of land for five years, and I never seen fish act this way before." Balt growled stubbornly. "If they don't strike in today we better close down. Marsh's men cut half our nets and crippled more than half our crew last night." He began to rumble curses. "Say, we made a mistake the other day, didn't we? We'd ought to have put that feller away. It ain't too late yet."

"Balt, Wayne Wayland is aboard that yacht. I know him. He's a hard man, and I've heard strange stories about him, but I don't believe he knows all that Marsh has been doing. I'm going to see him and tell him everything."

"S'pose he turns you down?"

"Then there will be time enough to—to consider what you suggest. I don't like to think about it."

"You don't have to," said Balt, lowering his voice so that the helmsmen could not hear. "I've been thinking it over all night, and it looks like I'd ought to do it myself. Marsh is coming to me anyhow, and—I'm older than you be. It ain't right for a young feller like you to take a chance. If they get me you can run the business alone."

Boyd laid his hand on his companion's shoulder.

"No," he said. "Perhaps I wouldn't stick at murder—I don't know. But I won't profit by another man's crime, and if it comes to that I'll take my share of the risk and the guilt. Whatever you do, I stand with you. But we'll hope for better things. It's no easy thing for me to go to Mr. Wayland asking a favor. You see, his daughter is— Well, I—I want to see her very badly."

Balt eyed him shrewdly.

"I see! And that makes it dead wrong for you to take a hand. If it's necessary to get Marsh I'll do it alone. With him out of the way I think you can make a go of it. He's like a rattler—somebody's got to stomp on him. Now I'm off for the trap. Let me know what the old man says."

Boyd returned to the cannery with the old mood of self disgust and bitterness heavy upon him. He realized that George's offer to commit murder had not shocked him as much as upon its first mention. He knew that he had thought of shedding human blood with as little compunction as if the intended victim had been some noxious animal. He felt, indeed, that if his love for Mildred made him a criminal she, too, would be soiled by his dishonor, and for her sake he shrank from the idea of violence, yet he lacked the energy at that time to put it from him. Well, he would go to her father, humble himself and beg for protection. If he failed then Marsh must look out for himself. He could not find it in his heart to spare his enemy.

At the plant he found Alton Clyde tremendously excited at the arrival of the yacht and eager to visit his friends. He sent him to the launch and after a hasty breakfast joined him.

On their way out Boyd felt a return of that misgiving which had mastered him on his first meeting with Mildred in Chicago. For the second time he was bringing her failure instead of the promised victory.

Willis Marsh was ahead of him, standing with Mr. Wayland at the rail. Some one else was with them. Boyd's heart leaped wildly as he recognized her. He would have known that slim figure anywhere. And Mildred saw him, too, pointing him out to her companions.

With knees shaking under him he came stumbling up the landing ladder, a tall, gaunt figure of a man in rough clothing and boots, stained with the sea salt. He looked older by five years than when the girl had last seen him. His cheeks were hollowed and his lips cracked by the wind, but his eyes were aflame with the old light. His smile was for her alone.

He never remembered the spoken greetings nor the looks the others gave him, for her soft, cool hands lay in his hard, feverish palms, and she was smiling up at him.

Alton Clyde was at his heels, and he felt Mildred disengage her hand. He tore his eyes away from her face long enough to nod at Marsh, who gave him a menacing look, then turned to Wayne Wayland. The old man was saying something, and Boyd answered him unintelligibly, after which he took Mildred's hands once more with such an air of unconscious proprietorship that Willis Marsh grew pale to the lips and turned his back. Other people, whom Boyd had not noticed until now came down the deck—men and women with field glasses and cameras swung over their shoulders. He found that he was being introduced to them by Mildred, whose voice betrayed no tremor and whose manners were as collected as if this were her own drawing room and the man at her side a casual acquaintance. The strangers mingled with the little group, leveled their glasses and made senseless remarks after the manner of tourists the world over. Boyd gathered somehow that they were officers of the trust or heavy stockholders and their wives. He led Mildred to a deck chair and seated himself beside her.

"At last," he breathed. "You are here, Mildred. You really came, after all?"

"Yes, Boyd."

"And are you glad?"

"Indeed I am. The trip has been wonderful."

"It doesn't seem possible. I can't believe that this is really you—that I am not dreaming, as usual."

"And you? How have you been?"

"I've been well—I guess I have. I haven't had time to think of myself. Oh, my lady!" His voice broke with tenderness, and he laid his hand gently upon hers.

She withdrew it quickly.

"Not here! Remember where we are. You are not looking well, Boyd. I don't know that I ever saw you look so bad. Perhaps it is your clothes."

"I am tired," he confessed, feeling anew the weariness of the past twenty-four hours. He covertly stroked a fold of her dress, murmuring: "You are here, after all. And you love me, Mildred? You haven't changed, have you?"

"Not at all. Have you?"

His deep breath and the light that flamed into his face was her answer. "I want to be alone with you," he cried huskily. "My arms ache for you. Come away from here; this is torture. I'm like a man dying of thirst."

No woman could have beheld his burning eagerness without an answering thrill, and, although Mildred sat motionless, her lids drooped slightly and a faint color tinged her cheeks.

"You are always the same," she smiled. "You sweep me away from myself and from everything. I have never seen any one like you. There are people everywhere. Father is somewhere close by."

"I don't care—"

"I do."

"My launch is alongside. Let me take you ashore and show you what I have done. I want you to see."

"I can't. I promised to go ashore with the Berrys and Mr. Marsh."

"Marsh!"

"Now don't get tragic! We are all going to look over his plant and have lunch there. They are expecting me. Oh, dear!" she cried plaintively. "I have seen and heard nothing but canneries ever since we left Vancouver. The men talk nothing but fish and packs and markets and dividends. It's all deadly stupid, and I'm wretchedly tired of it. Father is the worst of the lot, of course."

Emerson's eyes shifted to his own cannery. "You haven't seen mine—ours," said he.

"Oh, yes, I have. Mr. Marsh pointed it out to father and me. It looks just like all the others." There was an instant's pause before she ran on: "Do you know, there is only one interesting feature about them, to my notion, and that is the way the Chinamen smoke. Those funny crooked pipes and those little wads of tobacco are too ridiculous." The lightness of her words damped his ardor and brought back the sense of failure.

"I was down with the fishing fleet at the mouth of the bay this morning when you came in. I thought I might see you," he said.

"At that hour? Heavens! I was sound asleep. It was hard enough to get up when we were called. Father might have instructed the captain not to steam so fast."

Boyd stared at her in hurt surprise, but she was smiling at Alton Clyde in the distance and did not observe his look.

"Don't you care even to hear what I have done?" he inquired.

"Of course," said Mildred, bringing her eyes back to him.

Heshathingly he told her of his disappointments, the obstacles he had met and overcome, avoiding Marsh's name and refraining from placing the blame where it belonged. When he had concluded she shook her head.

"It is too bad. But Mr Marsh told us all about it before you came, Boyd. I never thought well of this enterprise. Of course I didn't say anything against it, you were so enthusiastic, but you really ought to try something big. I am sure you have the ability. Why, the successful men I know at home have no more intelligence than you, and they haven't half your force. As for this well, I think you can accomplish more important things than catching fish."

"Important!" he cried. "Why, the salmon industry is one of the most important on the coast. It employs 10,000 men in Alaska alone, and they produce $10,000,000 every year."

"Oh, let's not go into statistics," said Mildred lightly; "they make my head ache. What I mean is that a fisherman is nothing like an attorney or a broker or an architect, for instance; he is more like a miner. Pardon me, Boyd, but look at your clothes." She began to laugh. "Why, you look like a common laborer!"

"I might have slicked up a bit," he acknowledged humbly, "but when you came I forgot everything else."

"I was dreadfully embarrassed when I introduced you to the Berrys and the rest. I daresay they thought you were one of Mr Marsh's foremen."

Never before had Boyd known the least constraint in Mildred's presence, but now he felt the rebuke behind her careless manner, and it wounded him deeply. He did not speak, and after a moment she went on with an abrupt change of subject:

"WHY, YOU LOOK LIKE A COMMON LABORER!"

"So that funny little house over there against the hill is where the mysterious woman lives?"

"Who?"

"Cherry Malotte."

"Yes. How did you learn that?"

"Mr. Marsh pointed it out. He said she came up on the same ship with you."

"That is true."

"Why didn't you tell me? Why did not you write me that she was with you in Seattle?"

"I don't know; I didn't think of it." She regarded him coolly.

"Has anybody discovered who or what she is?"

"Why are you so curious about her?"

Mildred shrugged her shoulders. "Your discussion with Willis Marsh that night at our house interested me very much. I thought I would ask Mr. Marsh to bring her around when we went ashore. It would be rather amusing. She wouldn't come out to the yacht and return my call, would she?" Boyd smiled at her frank concern at this possibility.

"You don't know the kind of girl she is," he said. "She isn't at all what you think. I don't believe you would be able to meet her in the way you suggest."

"Indeed!" Mildred arched her brows. "Why?"

"She wouldn't fancy being 'brought around,' particularly by Marsh."

From her look of surprise he knew that he had touched on dangerous ground, and he made haste to lead the conversation back to its former channel. He wished to impress Mildred with the fact that if he had not quite succeeded he had by no means failed, but she listened indifferently, with the air of humoring an insistent child.

"I wish you would give it up and try something else," she said at last. "This is no place for you. Why, you are losing all your old wit and buoyancy; you are actually growing serious, and serious people are not at all amusing."

Just then Alton Clyde and a group of people, among whom was Willis Marsh, emerged from the cabin, talking and laughing. Mildred arose, saying:

"Here come the Berrys, ready to go ashore."

"When may I see you again?" he inquired quickly.

"You may come on this evening."

His eyes blazed as he answered: "I shall come!"

As the others came up she said:

"Mr Emerson can't accompany us. He wishes to see father."

"I just left him in the cabin," said Marsh. He helped the ladies to the ladder, and a moment later Emerson waved the party adieu, then turned to the saloon in search of Wayne Wayland.

CHAPTER XVIII.

In Mr. Wayland's stiff greeting there was no hint that the two men had ever been friendly, but Emerson was prepared for coolness and seated himself without waiting for an invitation, glad of the chance to rest his tired limbs.

"I have a great deal to say to you, sir," Emerson began, "and I would like you to hear me through."

"Go ahead."

"I am going to tell you some things about Mr. Marsh that I dare say you will disbelieve, but I can verify my statements. I think you are a just man, and I don't believe you know or would approve the methods he has used against me."

"If this is to be an arraignment of Mr Marsh I suggest that you wait until he can be present. He has gone ashore with the women folks."

"I prefer to talk to you first. We can call him in later if you wish."

"Before we begin may I inquire what you expect of me?"

"I expect relief."

"You remember our agreement?"

"I don't want assistance; I want relief."

"Whatever the distinction in the words, I understand that you are asking a favor."

"I don't consider it so."

"Very well. Proceed."

"When you sent me out three years ago to make a fortune for Mildred it was understood that there should be fair play on both sides."

this bureau are lands just as good and better at what are today ridiculously low prices, which common sense farming will bring up the soil and if done properly the price is not prohibitive, until they will become productive to compete with any. The plowing under of cheap crops while working these lighter soil lands in a cropping way soon brings them up both for orchards and general farming purposes. What successful farmer today tills his soil without a liberal course of fertilization? He who be littles these land conditions today will in less time very much be in the position of our government experts eighty-four years ago.

The article says the taxpayers helped the bureau last year, but did not this. The fact is five counties gave last year the time being short to plan it before the several boards while this year fourteen out of the twenty aided, and the other six are provided for from other sources.

The bureau is organized under the laws of Michigan, but not for profit. It does not deal in real estate nor does it countenance the actions of those who are dishonest in real estate transactions. It advises prospective settlers to see the land to satisfy themselves as to its value before purchasing it. It also invites them to write to the bureau's head office at Traverse City, where all information will be given as to the lands, integrity of seller, etc. Its organization is made up of men who think too much of the fair name of the state and themselves to do that which is not just and honest. Refrence is made to the man in charge referring, I presume to the secretary, John I. Gibson. Mr. Gibson has for many years been secretary of the Battle Creek board of trade, and is as high class a man as there is along these lines in our state, and for this reason I mention his name to refute such charge as unjust reference made to those behind project—railroad men, lumbermen, real estate men, etc. Who settled the west if not these same men and whoever considered it a sin to be classed among the progressive and prosperous men of the country who, though much maligned by space writers and others, are the fountains from which springs much good to this great commonwealth of ours.

The Western Michigan Development bureau is here to stay. It has a great work and future before it. It will be maligned, criticised and condemned, but it realizes that this must be expected and is too broad to take notice of all broad criticisms but an answer for once should be made, hence this reply. It may be that the opportunities of this bureau are not fully appreciated. Twenty counties located as are these in the great state of Michigan a gift of providence in that there are no locality in the world more favorably situated as to climate, nearness to market and many other advantages. As it is today, it is not a wilderness, but a country of great wealth and resources, thickly settled with all the improvements of modern civilization within its borders, good roads, churches, rural service, schools, telephones, banking institutions, large manufacturing interests, with the best markets containing 20,000,000 people within six to forty hours from our doors, against a much boasted west, thousands of miles away, where they cannot reach the same markets in less than four or five days and whose freight rates are four to five times as much as ours. The bureau is not sensitive. It invites the closest scrunity of its manner of operation.

Michigan Beats the West.

J. H. Byers, a farmer located near Lake Ann, reports that he settled there about nine years ago after having spent nearly eleven years in the west. He says that he is making a bigger per cent of profit on his capital invited in his sixty acre farm than can be made in the west, except from speculation. He is very enthusiastic over the producing power of the western Michigan soil, practicularly that in Benzie county. He was one of the early settlers at Glendale in the Salt River valley, Arizona, and in spent nine years of his life farming at that point, then started eastward eventually landing where he now is.

At Glendale he had experience with the irrigation problem and to believes that he is thoroughly posted upon the possibilities of the western river valleys.

Here he is raising beans, potatoes chickens and is working into the dairy business. He says that he is able to grow finer garden products than in the West and with less effort. His chickens, for fifty weeks of the year 1910, have produced 531 dozen eggs, which eggs have been marketed at a good profit. This is in addition to the eggs used for raising 150 young chickens which he expects to produce better than one thousand dozen eggs in 1911.

He finds the producing of white beans a profitable industry, these doing well upon the Benzie county lands. He is nicely started in the dairy industry and intends to build up a herd of short horns. His small garden patch produced $3 worth of vegetables last summer.

Mr. Byers lives within half a mile of the school house, enjoys rural mail service and is on the telephone line. He is partial to the idea that the real garden of Eden is to be found in Western Michigan.

LAND FOR SALE.

Having been appointed administrator of the estate of Austin C. Newman, deceased, and duly licensed to sell the real estate belonging to said estate, consisting of about eleven acres partly planted to orchard and situated within forty rods of the west boundary line of the city of Charlevoix, I am ready to receive proposals for the whole or any part of said land.

5212 Administrator.

ROAD DRAINAGE.

Necessity of Replacing Plank Culverts With Proper Pipes.

Pennsylvania's state highway commissioner gives the following advice on the question of road drainage:

"Where water must be diverted from one side to the other of a road it should be carried beneath the surface by means of pipes or culverts of capacity ndequate to carry the maximum amount of water which ever will demand passage. Pipes of suitable material when properly laid cost little or nothing to maintain beyond an occasional cleaning out. Water breaks require constant attention and are frequently inadequate to prevent the flood water from overflowing down the surface of the road. They are also serious obstacles to travel, increasing very materially the steepness of the hills where they are used and making necessary the hauling of proportionately smaller loads.

"In the majority of the townships in which any attempt is made to carry water across below instead of above the road surface it is done by means of plank culverts, usually constructed in the most primitive manner, while the large water courses are spanned by structures consisting in part, if not wholly, of wood. In some instances stone has been used in a very commendable manner, but it is found that many of the bridges, culverts and drains which have been built of stone have been laid up in an inefficient manner, which has led in a few years to the necessity of expensive repairs. For the smaller culverts and drains in which smoothness of interior surface is desirable four kinds of pipe are available—vitrified clay, cast iron, corrugated iron and concrete. The use of wood for such purposes is to be discouraged, and all existing plank culverts should be replaced by some other material as rapidly as practicable. Vitrified clay pipes are much cheaper than iron, but unless very carefully protected are very liable to breakage. Except in rare cases this material is not recommended by the department."

FILL ELIMINATES GRADE.

Macadam Road From Cortland to Ithaca Nears Completion.

The above cut gives one an idea of the vast amount of work that has been accomplished at the Gulf hill, changing a steep, crooked road to a straight macadamized highway with a grade of about 7 per cent.

This is on the road known as No. 083, Dryden-Cortland, extending from the Dryden village line, in Tompkins county, N. Y., to the Cortland county line, a distance of 3.850 miles. The contract was let to J. McCormick of East Providence, R. I. The engineering was in charge of A. L. Northrop of Dryden, the division engineer's assistant for Tompkins county. The engineers on the work were L. F. Snyder of Syracuse and Harold Fox of Canajoharie.

The change of grade has been effected by cutting away the tops of the hills on either side and filling in the valley between. The fill at the culvert is twenty-five feet high, eighteen feet above the old road bed. The culvert at the base of the fill is a hundred feet long, with a throat five feet across both ways. In making the fill, which is about 500 feet in length, 11,000 yards of earth were moved.

This is said by state road men to be the largest job of filling that has ever been attempted on a state road in New York, says the Dryden (N. Y.) Herald. When the road was first surveyed the engineers planned a different route, not seriously considering the possibility of filling the valley but after a later survey the highway commission directed that this plan be used.

Those who have used the road in the past will appreciate the change of grade, as this was the only bad hill between Dryden and Cortland, and the automobilist will make it on the "high" without a bit of worry. When this and the two sections of the Dryden-Ithaca road are done there will be a macadam road all the way from Cortland to Ithaca, an important link in the system connecting central New York with the southern tier.

The curves on this road are being banked, which is a new scheme in macadam construction. The outer side of the curve is raised a little higher than the inner edge like a race track.

The Need of Road Specialists.

After years of investigation the office of public roads has come to the conclusion that the chief cause of bad roads in this country, first, extreme localization of road administration; secondly, the payment of road taxes in labor, and; thirdly, lack of skilled supervision.

These are days of specialists. We do not have our houses built by the doctor or call a carpenter to treat us for pneumonia. We think schoolteachers should be required to take examinations, and we approve of military and naval schools to teach military discipline. We believe in the civil service and competency for civil employees. We require skill and experience in almost every line of human endeavor. Why not, then, insist that our road taxes be expended under competent supervision? — Maurice O. Eldridge.

Good Road Truths.

Good roads bear about the same relation to the commercial welfare of a country that a good circulation does to the physical welfare of the individual. As long as there are bad roads, hilly, muddy and impassable, there will be a certain and inevitable depression from a normal and healthy commercial tone. The circulation of crops will be retarded, the cost of production will be increased and the full vigor and potential power of the community will not be realized. The truth of these facts has become more and more generally accepted throughout the country at large and millions of dollars are being spent in the movements for good roads.—Selected.

Oil Imprisons Birds.

Because the birds of River forest get their feet entangled in the oiled surface of Hale avenue and fall victims to automobiles citizens of the suburb are going to try another plan for ridding the fast evil, says the Chicago Tribune. River forest is proud of its feathery songsters, and the slaughter this summer is said to have been enormous. A dry compound which, it is said, will draw moisture from the air and keep the dust down will be used.

Must Educate People.

During the next few years the most engaging topic and the most acute situations in the body politic are to result from good roads and the attendant transportation over them. Unless the people are educated to an appreciation of them they cannot solve the questions of the future.—Selected.

A GOOD POSITION.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or Railway Telegraphy. Since the eight-hour law became effective and since the Wireless Companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $50 to $90 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R. HEAD ON COLLISION

On Pere Marquette Near Alden Saturday Night

None of Passengers or Crew Seriously Injured.

A small wreck on the Pere Marquette Saturday night just north of Alden caused considerable damage to the engine of passenger train No. 3, which was due to leave Traverse City at 6:23 and the engine of an extra stone train. No. 3 was considerably late and had heavy business from Traverse City and the south. The stone train stopped a mile north of Alden, believing that when No. 3 reached Alden it would wait. No. 3 left Alden and the trains came together head-on. The lighter engine of the stone train was lifted upon the front of the passenger engine by the impact.

None of the crew of the extra were injured. There were a few shake-ups on No. 3, but no serious injury. Engineer Mike McNerney saw the collision was inevitable and after putting on the brakes, jumped out of the cab window, but owing to depth of the snow alongside of the track, was not hurt other than receiving a severe jolting.

Walter Wiers, the fireman was not fortunate enough to be able to leave the engine, but miraculously escaped serious injury. Baggageman Ray Bliss was also badly shaken up but was not severely hurt. The damage to the engine of No. 3 was not great.

AFTER NEW LAWS

Sheriffs of Michigan are Anxious for Legislation

Limiting Them Would Abolish Two Terms.

The sheriffs of the state, eighty-three in all, will be one of the forces to be reckoned with by the next legislature. The sheriffs want certain laws passed and they are going to wage a concentrated campaign ul Lansing this winter to get them through. Such is the plan decided upon at a meeting of Michigno sheriffs at Kalamazoo, December 5. The crusade was first discussed at the convention of the sheriff's association at Bay City last July.

The sheriffs are going to complain of the law limiting them to two terms in office; they are going to make their duties more simple in some respects; and they are going to tighten up the criminal laws and widen their scope, if they can make the law-makers see the questions as they view them.

"The law limiting a sheriff to two terms should be repealed," says a circular issued by Sheriff A. B. Campbell, of Kalamazoo county, president of the Sheriff's association. "If a public officer is bad, one term is too long. If he is faithful, honest and efficient, and the people of his county desire his services for a longer period than four years, they are entitled to them."

The sheriffs also believe that the present extradition laws are designed to make life miserable to them, and they favor the simplification of the present medley of laws, with the end that they may be made more certain and swift.

One of the most irksome tasks of the sheriffs at present is to travel throughout the city and county and give personal service to all those called for jury duty, the number running up into hundreds each term of two months. The sheriffs recommended that this service be performed by mail, as it is already in some of the counties of the state.

It is also recommended that the non-support law be amended to so define "non-support" as to include within the offenders husbands who while able and capable, dissipate their earnings without complete abandonment of their families.

One proposed law will undoubtedly bring to Lansing the lobby of the hotel keepers and livery keepers. This is the contention of the sheriffs that these two interests have secured class legislation to protect themselves against "dead beats," and that the "county is being made a collection agency" for liveries and hotels.

The sheriffs will also have some recommendations to make to the state association of probate judges with regard to the reformation and correction of the juvenile law, but these suggestions are not specified.

The sheriffs have fault to find with the bonding system and believe it could be improved. They suggest that all deputy sheriffs be compelled to file substantial bonds the cost of such bonds to be borne by the county. Further, they believe that the cost of all bonds furnished by county officials should be borne by the county.

The sheriffs count upon the support of the prosecutors of the state for their measures, as well as that of the city police departments and the officials of penal institutions.

PLUM---RIPLEY

Popular Charlevoix Young People Married Thursday.

Thursday evening, December 22, Charles L. Plum and Addie V. Ripley were married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wright Ripley, on Park Avenue, Rev. F. M. Taylor, pastor of the Methodist church officiating.

The home was most beautifully decorated with smilax, roses and wedding bells. After the ceremony light refreshments were served to the fifty guests who were present.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Plum are graduates of the Charlevoix High School and are very popular in social circles where they are highly esteemed for their sterling traits of character.

They will be at home to their friends after January 15, on Mason street.

Russia, the worst plague stricken, is also one of the worst rat ridden countries in the world. Added to this there is widespread illiteracy, all of a combination which goes hand in hand with unrest and makes a terrible situation.

If looked into a few many a case of so called luck will be found to be traceable to pretty good ahead work and a good deal of energy and application, while many a case of bad luck is due to shiftlessness and bad management.

Probably the biggest cheese ever made has lately been "cast" by a Wisconsin cheese factory. It weighs 2,400 pounds, required one milking of 2,104 cows to make it and is to be on exhibition at the national dairy show to be held soon at Chicago.

No higher word of commendation can be given of any home than to have said of it that the boys and girls of the neighborhood like to gather there to spend some of their evenings. It is an accomplishment, by the way, of which any homemaker may well be proud. The country needs more homes of this kind.

Greeley county, Neb., has a Red Polled cow that has the unique distinction of being the mother of two sets of triplet calves, all of which are at present alive and thrifty, or were a short time ago, when her picture was taken with the entire bunch about her. From the standpoint of numbers, at least, this strain would seem to be worth while perpetuating.

There are reports of late to the effect that a gang of tree peddlers, claiming to be working in cooperation with the forest service in distributing hardy catalpas, are circulating among the farmers of the country and taking large orders for these trees. They have been looked up, have been branded grafters, and many of them should have the brass to come on your premises set the dog on him.

It's all right to trust in Providence, but such trust should be hooked up with a fair amount of good horse sense. A concrete illustration of this thought is to be found all too frequently in the case of the fellow who delays selecting his seed corn until husking time in November, after there have been several heavy freezes, and in the spring blames the good Lord, ill luck or the party in power because his seed corn won't sprout.

From reports which seem to be very general it is a fair deduction that twice as many new silos are being filled this fall as in any previous season. It's a mighty good sign and shows that a whole lot of farmers are finally getting their eyes open. The day is not far when any man who makes serious pretense at engaging in the stock raising or dairy business will not think of being without this great aid to economical meat and milk production.

A friend who has fifteen or twenty acres in potatoes this fall has several mornings of late been finding a bushel or so of the tubers pulled out of the hills and lying exposed to the sun. While he has not, so far as we know, set a watch at night to see just who these "diggers" are, he has found the most hills undisturbed where the fat white grubs have been very plentiful. Putting two and two together, it is probably safe to assume that this field was in meadow or sod last season and that the disturbance of the hills is the work of skunks or badgers, which view the white grub as a very luscious morsel.

Notwithstanding that it will be late in the season and will not prevent seed distribution it will be well worth while to take a couple of hours off some afternoon and cut those weeds along the roadside that escaped attention during the busy days of July and August, for by so doing the trouble incident to drifting snows will be considerably reduced.

The poinsetta, which was named after Joel Poinsett of South Carolina, is a shrub of Mexican origin which makes a very interesting and attractive house plant. The leaves are remarkably large and smooth and show a most interesting variation in outline, while the bloom is equally unique, the yellow blossom being borne just above a circle of beautiful crimson bracts or small leaves. The plant thrives under average conditions and has no pests which molest it.

During the past month cotton has seen the highest prices recorded since the civil war, a price of $18.90 per bale being bid therefor on the New York Cotton Exchange. This unusual price level was in part due to a general price inflation characteristic of all commodities, but even more to the issuance of the government cotton crop report, which showed a decided deterioration—about 5 per cent—in the condition of the crop from the showing of the month.

The man who knocked the a four dollar barrel of apples down beneath found a message put in by the grower, "I got 75 cents for this barrel of apples—please let me know what you had to pay for it," uncovered in very simple manner two of the factors that are chiefly responsible for the present high cost of living—the profits exacted by the transportation companies and middlemen. The problem is certainly one that deserves investigation of a very thorough type.

For those who may not have had the fact brought to their attention it may be of interest to know that, while one may sell a relinquishment of his claim to a homestead, such sale does not convey title to the purchaser, but merely gives him first chance to enter the claim as a homestead. In case one does thus sell he forfeits thereby the right of entering another homestead, but he does not lose this right if he simply abandons the claim and allows the title to revert to the government.

As showing the capacity of some of the well known pests to reproduce themselves may be cited the San Jose scale. A single female, which gives birth at one time to an average brood of 400 young and produces several such generations in a season, is estimated to be responsible as progenitor of 1,000,000,000 females. In view of such an outpouring of spawn as this, it would not be surprising if the horticulturist lost heart notwithstanding the aids at hand in the shape of parasitic bugs and spraying concoctions.

A number of farmers who had the foresight to sow rape in their cornfields this season are going to have an easy job of husking this fall simply by turning in fattening sheep or hogs. Best results will be had if the area "sheeped" or "hogged" down is somewhat limited, letting the animals clean this up and then giving them a new patch. If sheep are turned in alone it will require some little time for them to get on to cutting the corn, and if a real clean job is required hogs should be turned into the field after them.

Azoturia, a disease to which horses are subject and some of the effects of which are shown in the permanently swollen legs of so many otherwise good horses, is due to a clogging of the system—particularly the kidneys—with more albumen than they can oxidize and eliminate. Some horses seem to be more prone to the trouble than others, but in the main attacks of the disease are induced by the continuation of a hearty ration during a period of idleness of horses which have been doing heavy work, and acute cases are often precipitated by driving too fast or putting too hard work horses which have been standing in the stable. The disease is much more likely to occur with horses fed a ration of clover, alfalfa or other feed containing considerable amounts of protein. It is for this account that wild hay, timothy and oats are preferable to other feeds.

In an instance that came under our notice the other day a county turned down a consignment of $20,000 worth of cement draintiles, large size, for the simple fact that quite a portion of the first thousand feet collapsed shortly after being covered with earth without waiting for frost, wet weather or other disintegrating cause. This failure was not due to the fact that cement tile may not be made so that they will be satisfactory and durable, but that the tile in question were not thus made. The incident simply emphasizes a suggestion made in these notes not long ago that there are a number of incompetents engaged in the manufacture of cement tile who not only use gravel with dirt or clay in it—and hence until—or screen in the amount of cement which goes into the mixing machine. Cement manufacturers need more thorough organization, not for the purpose of meeting the competition of the clay tile men, but to put out of business cement tile manufacturers, either greenhorns or knaves, who cannot or will not make cement tile that will stand up and do the business. As we have said before, a good cement tile is as durable as a good clay tile, but a poor one isn't worth a continental.

Two years ago, following attendance at a big state fair where there was a fine display of pure bred beef cattle, the writer of these notes commented upon the fact that prevalent standards adhered to in the judging of the beef breed seemed to result in both sires and dams being put in a condition of flesh not only abnormal, but entirely detrimental to their continued usefulness as breeders and producers. A thick blanket of fat, like charity, can cover several bovine weaknesses; hence breeders of the heavy types would compete on a far fairer basis were their show animals not only expected to be, but required to be, in average breeding condition. More recently the need of the adoption of this more rational standard has been expressed concretely by a leading breeder who has won many blue ribbons at stock shows and who asserts that "three-fourths of the finest bulls in the country are ruined for breeders by being fattened for the show ring; fat cattle should be shown only in the steer class." This puts the thing in a nutshell. It is strange that breeders have been so slow in awaking to the importance of this simple fact.

NOT WORTH THE CANDLE.

The tendency mentioned in these notes some little time ago of an overtaxing of immature girls in school as a result of too much study and too little recreation and exercise was brought to our notice the other day. A fine little lady of sixteen had taken an auto trip from a nearby town, yet notwithstanding the trip was in the early part of an outing she was in a hurry two hours each day so that she could study. Found it to be the case. On inquiry we found two bright, intelligent girls, sister of same class and of about the same age, who stood neck and neck in their grades, each being possessed with the desire to excel the other. When we asked the girl in question if her brother ever brought his books home to study she replied, "Yes, but that is all it amounts to, for he seldom opens them." This in a nutshell explains the difference between boys and girls, and it is a fact that thoughtful parents ought to take into account. However, in all too many instances parents are shortsighted and, instead of discouraging overstudy on the part of their ambitious daughters, take a different view in their study rivalry and encourage and urge them on to still greater effort. Sometimes her constitution is strong enough so that the [illegible] girl finishes her high school and perhaps a college course, but at the cost of that time she is all too often done for—a wreck physically and spent nervously, when those powers should have been so guarded that she would be strong and vigorous and able to meet the duties and responsibilities of living, instead of being a broken down, miserable invalid. The pupil herself should try to look this situation squarely in the face, and if she does not possess that maturity of judgment which will enable her to take the right course she should be assisted by both parents and teachers. This wanton sacrifice of health and vital force to secure grades that will only adorn the pages of musty school records is a travesty on education and an insult to the Giver of life. It is a species of rivalry in which the sacrifice entailed is too great and in which the game is not worth the candle.

ISOLATION AN AID.

Many an antiluetic husbandman could reduce the losses sustained from tuberculosis and other diseases in his hogs and cattle if he would practice the simple precaution of isolating individuals which have the appearance of being diseased, whatever the cause of the trouble. We are led to make the above apparently trite suggestion from visiting not long since a herd of mixed feeding and dairy cattle kept under decidedly nasty and insanitary conditions, among which were circulating a number of animals that were very plainly in well advanced stages of tuberculosis. Experimenters have proved conclusively that an animal thus affected may discharge not only virile feces, but nasal discharges. On another farm we know of a steer that was far along with lumpy jaw being allowed to mingle freely with other cattle, the exudation from the open sore befouling not only the ground, but the feed which the other cattle in the yard ate. Many a serious epidemic of hog cholera could be prevented or considerably lessened were dummy pigs isolated at the start and kept so until they recovered or died. The type of precaution referred to costs little and has a merit entirely apart from medicine or veterinary attendance which should also be made use of if occasion requires.

MULCH VERSUS COVER CROPS.

That a method of orchard care which gives good results in one section may not be suited to conditions prevailing in another locality is nicely shown in reports from the North Dakota and Nebraska experiment stations relative to the use of orchard cover crops. In experiments conducted in the former state it has been found that cover crops growing during the latter part of the season take moisture out of the soil to such an extent as to greatly increase the danger to the tree from winter killing because of a too dry and loose condition of the soil. In the latter state cover crops are strongly recommended because they tend to dry out the soil and hasten the ripening process in the new wood, there being enough moisture for the growing of the cover crop and to keep the soil in proper condition during the winter months. To take the place of the cover crop the Dakota station recommends mulching about the roots of the trees with a light covering of straw, which holds the snow and answers the same purpose as some growing crop.

THE TERRAPIN SCALE.

The terrapin scale, closely allied in both appearance and habit and the injury which inflicts to the San Jose or Chinese scale, is quite generally distributed over the east half of the United States. Like the latter, it is imported, coming from Europe, its original home, on nursery stock. The most valuable parasite aid in keeping the pest in check is a small four winged fly. Somewhat strangely, the lime-sulphur wash, so effective in keeping the San Jose scale in check is worthless when used for the terrapin scale. Experiments which have been made show that the only effective spray is the kerosene emulsion made after the usual formula and applied under good pressure as a fine spray.

Neighborhood Notes

Sheriff Frank L. Shuter of Grand Traverse county was formally admitted into citizenship in the United States district court last week, and is now enabled to hold the office of sheriff, to which he was elected.

Sheriff [illegible] upon his second [illegible] about to enter Grand Traverse County sheriff of unaware that he was not a [illegible] of the United States until last winter, when he was informed of the fact. He based his belief of his citizenship on the fact that his father brought him to this country when he was but two years old, and he supposed that his father had taken out full citizenship papers, which proved to be not the case.

Shuter, when he grew to manhood enlisted in the state militia, from which he has an honorable discharge. He served in various capacities on the city and county tickets of Grand Traverse, and was just starting in on his second year of his first term as sheriff when informed that his father had never taken out full citizenship papers, and he was an alien.

On January 1, it is understood, the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway company will increase the pay of employes in all departments four per cent. This is said to be the result of the recent conference in Grand Rapids between the representatives of the labor union and the road officials. The reason the rise was not granted at that time was because the earnings would not warrant it, statements having been shown the men to that effect.

Grand Traverse county is at last to have an infirmary, and the plans are now under way in the office of Architect Jens C. Peterson, in the State bank building. The structure will be 85x62 feet in dimensions, consisting of two stories and a basement, and will contain, when completed, thirty-three bed-rooms, besides the bedrooms of the keeper. The living rooms for the men and women will each be 25x15 feet, while there will be seperate dining rooms for the men and the women inmates each 15x21. The keeper will also have a private dining room.

Mr. Mark E. Johnson has shown us some well preserved and interesting relics of the days immediately following the Civil war. One is an internal revenue collector's receipt for a tax on animal slaughter by Mr. Johnson's father, and the other is a notice from the similar source that the same gentlemen had not paid a revenue tax for doing the same sort of business, and tersely states that unless payment is promptly made the said official will proceed to distrain upon his property to collect same. Both are dated 1866 and hark back to the days when internal revenue collectors were thicker than fleas on a dog, and when many a patriot had a soft snap and a good salary for holding these sinecure positions; also when there was a revenue tax on almost everything but breathing to pay the appalling burden of indebtedness that had been incurred in putting down the rebellion.—Kalkaska Leader.

Because Miss Maude Graham, a high school teacher, of Cadillac, has resigned her position to accept a place at Sioux Falls, S.D., an order has been issued forbidding Clerk Johnston from paying her $80, her last month's salary. The board of education notified the teacher that she would be expected to carry out her contract and complete her school year and when she would not promise to do so, the salary was held up. The outcome of the case will probably determine whether a teacher can be held to a contract.

According to the annual report of the state land commission which will be presented Governor Warner before he retires from office, the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1910, has been the most successful in the history of the department.

At the close of the fiscal year in 1909 the state was in possession of 601,172 acres of land. Since that time the auditor general deeded to the state under the provision of the tax homestead law 215,555 acres and there reverted to the state for noncompliance with the homestead law and other sources 2,061 acres, a total of 827,588. This leaves a balance of 324,111 acres that has been disposed of by the state or set aside for forestry reserve purposes.

LADIES OF THE MODERN MACCABEES

The SILVER HORDE

"Have you played fair?" quickly interposed the old man.

"I have. When I came to Chicago I had no idea that you were interested in the Pacific coast fisheries. I had raised the money before I discovered that you even knew Willis Marsh. Then it was too late to retreat. When I reached Seattle all sorts of unexpected obstacles came up. I lost the ship I had chartered; machinery houses refused deliveries; shipments went astray; my bank finally refused its loan, and every other bank in the northwest followed suit. I was harassed in every possible way. And it wasn't chance that caused it; it was Willis Marsh. He set spies upon me; he incited a lock strike that resulted in a riot and the death of at least one man; moreover, he tried to have me killed."

"How do you know he did that?"

"I have no legal proof, but I know it just the same."

Mr. Wayland smiled. "That is, not a very definite charge. You surely don't hold him responsible for the death of that striker?"

"I do, and for the action of the police in trying to fix the crime upon me. You know, perhaps, how I got away from Seattle. When Marsh arrived at Kalvik he first tried to sink my boilers; failing in that, he ruined my iron Chinks; then he 'corked' my fish trap, not because he needed more fish, but purely to spoil my catch. The day the run started he bribed my fishermen to break their contracts, leaving me short handed. He didn't need more men, but did that simply to cripple me. I got Indians to replace the white men, but he won them away by a miserable trick and by threats that I have no doubt he would make good if the poor devils dared to stand out.

"His men won't allow my fellows to work. We have laid our nets out and our fish thrown out. Last night we had a bad time on the banks, and a number of people were hurt. The situation is growing worse every hour, and there will be bloodshed unless this persecution stops. All I want is a fair chance. There are fish enough for us all in the Kalvik, but that man has used the power of your organization to ruin me not for business reasons, but for personal spite. I have played the game squarely, Mr. Wayland. But on my life this enters 'Tis through."

"You are through?"

"Yes. The run is nearly a week old, and I haven't begun to pack my salmon. I have less than half a boat crew, and of those half are laid up."

The president of the trust stirred for the first time since Boyd had begun his recital. The grim lines about his mouth set themselves deeper, and, staring with cold gray eyes at the speaker, he said:

"Well, sir, what you have told me confirms my judgment that Willis Marsh is the right man in the right place."

Completely taken aback by this unexpected reply, Boyd exclaimed:

"You don't mean to say that you approve of what he has done?"

"Yes, of what I know he has done. Mr. Marsh is pursuing a definite policy laid down by his board of directors. You have shown me that he has done his work well. You knew before you left the east that we intended to crush all opposition."

Emerson's voice was sharp as he cried, "I understand all that, but am I to understand also that the directors of the N. A. F. A. instructed him to kill me?"

"Tut, tut! Don't talk nonsense. You admit that you have no proof of Willis' connection with the attempt upon your life. You put yourself in the way of danger when you hired scab labor to break that strike. I think you got off very easily."

"If Marsh was instructed to crush the Independents, why has he centered all his efforts on me alone? Why has he spent this summer in Kalvik and not among the other stations to the south?"

"That is our business. Different methods are required in different localities."

"Then you have no criticism to make—you upheld him?" Boyd's indignation was getting beyond control.

"None whatever. Your complaints do not appeal to me. Even granting your absurd assumption that Marsh tried to put you out of the way, it seems to me that you have more than evened the score."

"How?"

"He is still wearing bandages over that knife thrust you gave him."

Emerson leaped to his feet.

"He knows I didn't do that—everybody knows it!" he cried. "He lied to you."

"We won't discuss that," said Wayne Wayland curtly. "What do you want me to do?"

"I want you to end this persecution. I want you to call him off."

"In other words, you want me to save you."

Emerson swallowed. "I suppose it amounts to that. I want to be let alone. I want a square deal."

"Well, I won't." Wayland's voice hardened suddenly; his sound, white teeth snapped together. "You are getting exactly what you deserve. You betrayed me by spying upon me while you broke bread in my house. I see nothing reprehensible in Mr. Marsh's conduct, but even if I did I would not censure him. Any measures are justifiable against a traitor."

Boyd Emerson's face went gray beneath its coating of tan, and his voice threatened to break as he said:

"I am no traitor, and you know it. I thought you a man of honor, and I came to you not for help, but for justice. But I see I was mistaken. I am beginning to believe that Marsh acted under your instructions from the first."

"Believe what you choose."

"You think you've got me, but you haven't. I'll beat you yet."

"You can't beat me at anything." Mr. Wayland's jaws were set like iron.

"Not this year perhaps, but next. You and Marsh have whipped me this time, but the salmon will come again, and I'll run my plant in spite of hell!"

Wayne Wayland made as if to speak, but Boyd went on unheeding: "You've taken a dislike to me, but your conduct shows that your fear me. You are afraid I'll succeed, and I will."

"Brave talk!" said the older man. "But you owe $100,000, and your stockholders will learn of your mismanagement."

"Your persecution, you mean!" cried the other. "I can explain. They will wait another year. I will raise more money, and they will stand by me."

"Perhaps I know more about that than you do."

Emerson strode toward the desk menacingly, crying in a quivering voice:

"I warn you to keep your hands off them. Don't try any of your financial trickery with me, or I'll"—

Wayne Wayland leaped from his chair, his face purple and his eyes flashing savagely.

"Leave this yacht!" he thundered. "I won't allow you to insult me. I won't stand your threats. I've got you where I want you, and when the time comes you'll know it. Now, get out!" He stretched forth a great square hand and closed it so fiercely that the fingers cracked. "I'll crush you—like that!"

Boyd turned and strode from the cabin.

Half blinded with anger, he stumbled down the ladder to his launch.

"Back to the plant!" he ordered, then gazed with lowering brows and defiant eyes at the Granite Dame as she rested swanlike and serene at her moorings. His anger against Mildred's father destroyed for the time all thought of his disappointment at her own lack of understanding and her cool acceptance of his failure. He saw only that his affairs had reached a final climax where he must bow to the inevitable or—Big George's parting words came to him—strike one last blow in reprisal.

It was the hour of his darkest despair—the real crisis in his life. There are times when it rests with fate to make a strong man stronger or turn him altogether to evil. Such a man will not accept misfortune tamely. He is the reverse of those who are good through weakness. It is his nature to sin strongly.

But the unexpected happened, and Boyd's black mood vanished in amazement at the sight which met his eyes. Moored to the fish dock was a lighter awash with a cargo that made him stare and doubt his vision. He had seen his scanty crew of gill netters return empty handed with the rising sun, exhausted, disheartened, depleted in numbers, yet there before him were thousands of salmon. They were strewn in a great mass up on the dock and inside the shed, while from the scow beneath they came in showers as the fishermen tossed them upward from their "pans." Through the wide doors he saw the backs of the butchers busily at work over their tables and heard the uproar of his cannery running full for the first time.

"WE'VE WON, MY BOY! WE'VE WON!"

Before the launch had touched he had leaped to the ladder and swung himself upon the dock. He stumbled into the arms of Big George.

"Where—what those—fish come from?" he cried breathlessly.

"From the trap," George smiled as he had not smiled in many weeks. "They've struck in like I knew they would, and they're running now by the thousands. I've fished these waters for years, but I never seen the likes of it. They'll tear that trap to pieces. They're smothering in the pot, tons and tons of 'em, with millions more milling below. Oh, 'tis a sight you'll not see once in a lifetime."

"That means that we can run the plant—that we'll get all we can use?"

"Say, we've got fish enough to run two canneries. They've struck their gait, I tell you, and they'll never stop now, night or day, till they've through. We don't need no gill netters. What we need is butchers and slimers and handlers. There never was a trap site in the north till this one. I told Willis Marsh that years ago." He flung out a long, hairy arm, bared half to the shoulder, and waved it exultantly. "We built this plant to cook 40,000 salmon a day, but I'll bring you 3,000 every hour, and you've got to cook 'em. Do you hear?"

"And they couldn't cork us after all?" Emerson leaned unsteadily against a pile, for his head was whirling.

"No! We'll show that gang what a cannery can do. Marsh's traps will rot where they stand." Big George shook his tight clinched fist again. "We've won, my boy! We've won!"

"Then don't let us stand here talking!" cried Emerson sharply. "Hurry! Hurry!" He turned and sped up the dock.

He had come into his own at last, and he vowed with tight shut teeth that no wheel should stop, no belt should slacken, no man should leave his duty, till the run had passed. At the entrance to the throbbing, clanging building he paused an instant and with a smile looked toward the yacht floating lazily in the distance. Then, with knees sagging beneath him from weariness, he entered.

OLD FASHIONED DESSERTS.

How to Make a Thanksgiving Indian Pudding and Pumpkin Pie.

The Thanksgiving dinner would seem incomplete to many a New England family if among the desserts which close the feast Indian meal pudding and pumpkin pie were not to be found. Tradition has given these dainties a place second only to the turkey among the essentials of the real old fashioned good time.

Baked Indian pudding has to be baked for six hours, and the recipe for it is as follows:

Three and one-half quarts of milk, three heaping tablespoonfuls of cornmeal, one tablespoonful of butter, one-half pint of molasses, one teaspoonful of salt and ginger to taste. Scald one quart of milk, add to it the molasses, butter, salt and spice. Stir enough milk into the cornmeal to make it smooth, then add this to the milk mixture. Cook the whole together for five minutes, then turn into a greased baking dish. Have this dish large enough to allow for the increased bulk of the pudding after the cornmeal has cooked and the milk has been added. Put the pudding in a moderate oven and when a crust forms on top stir it from the bottom of the dish and add one pint of cold milk. Be sure that this is thoroughly blended. Continue cooking, and repeat this process every half hour—if necessary at more frequent intervals if it browns too rapidly. The pudding should bake six hours in all, and the entire quantity of milk should be taken up by the meal in the manner described. Serve the pudding hot with sauce. This sauce may consist of butter and sugar, creamed and flavored. A favorite mixture for this purpose consists of maple sugar stirred into rich cream and kept cold until poured over the pudding.

Boiled Indian pudding is a somewhat heavier dish than the baked article because of the suet added, and once it has cooled it cannot be heated to advantage. It is more easily prepared, however, as all the ingredients are put in at first, and it does not require the constant watching which the baked pudding receives. For these reasons it is frequently made to complete the menu of a "boiled dinner." For boiled Indian pudding the ingredients required are one quart of milk, one pint of Indian meal, five tablespoonfuls of dark molasses and two tablespoonfuls of suet chopped fine. Scald the milk and pour it over the meal. Add the other ingredients and mix thoroughly. Put in pudding bag or mold and boil four hours. Serve with any hard or liquid sauce.

The ingredients for pumpkin pie are one and a half cupfuls of pumpkin pulp, two cupfuls of milk, one teaspoonful each of salt, butter, cinnamon and ginger, one tablespoonful of molasses, two eggs and sugar to taste.

Cut the pumpkin into small pieces; remove the soft part and seeds. Cook in a steamer until tender, then remove cover and cook until the water has evaporated. This will require some care, as pumpkin burns easily. When it has become sufficiently dry press the pulp through a colander and it is ready to be mixed with the other ingredients. Stir in the salt, butter, cinnamon, ginger, molasses and sugar. When the mixture has cooled beat the eggs and stir them in. Line a deep pie dish with pie crust and fill with the mixture. Bake forty minutes in a moderately slow oven.

Two men of West Philadelphia were exchanging greetings the other day when one of them exclaimed:

"Why, Edward, old chap, you're in fine trim! You're positively beaming! I've never seen you look so satisfied with yourself and with the world. Any particular reason?"

"Yes," answered Edward. "The fact is, I've just succeeded in signing up our leading lady for another season."

Back to the Land.

The census report just issued does not indicate that the people are getting back to the land with any great rapidity. About one-half the counties in this state have fewer people on the land than they had ten years ago. This report is somewhat disappointing as the high price of farm products within recent years has made farming a profitable business. If these high prices continue, and the indications are that they will there will certainly be a great revival in agriculture within the next few years.

A conservative prediction places the population of this country at two hundred million people at a time considerably less than fifty years hence. As practically all of our public domain, which can be made reasonably productive, has been settled upon by farmers, the great increase in production which will be necessary to take care of the rapid increase in population must come from the land now under cultivation. This means that each state must practically double its output within the next forty or fifty years if future generations are to be fed as we are fed at present. This can only be done by the development of a greater degree of skill on the part of the farmer. He can no longer attempt to grow everything that he needs for family use. He must concentrate his energies on special lines of production. The skillful farmer of the future must be a specialist—an expert in some particular line. The farmer of today who is carrying a good bank account is, in almost every instance, a specialist. He makes his money from fruit, dairying or some other particular branch of agriculture.

The young farmer, if he is ambitious to succeed, should prepare himself for the special line of work for which his farm is best adapted. It is easy to secure this special instruction. Our state has wisely provided for the needs of young men who wish to succed as practical farmers. They can secure at the Michigan Agricultural College, East Lansing, during the winter months, training which will enable them to become experts in fruit growing, dairying, poultry raising, creamery management, or general agriculture. By writing to the college one may secure, without cost, a circular giving information concerning these special lines of instruction.

DILLAWAY'S CISTERN.

It Played a Telling Part In a Love Affair.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"Then you're going to make Stella wait another year before she gets married?" asked Stella's mother anxiously.

Samuel Dillaway stroked his little gray beard with one sunburned hand and flourished a pipe with the other. "I look at it this way," he said didactically. "The time has come for us to have a cistern on the roof of the extension, and Joe Mellen seems to think the time's proper for him and Stella to get married. Now they can wait another year or two until I can better afford to have a wedding. In the meantime, I've got to have that cistern. Some time they we'll be running out of water, then what will you do?"

"Nonsense, Samuel," protested Mrs. Dillaway earnestly. "We've used the well for twenty-five years and it's never showed no signs of getting dry."

"I can't afford a wedding, Celia," said Samuel decisively.

"It won't cost you anything to speak of. Most of Stella's clothes are made and we'll have just a quiet little wedding with nobody here"—

"That's just the kind," interrupted Mr. Dillaway jocosely. "If there's a wedding before I say so, there won't be nobody to it, and no Dillaway was married without style."

"Without diddlesticks!" snapped Mrs. Dillaway. "Something's got to be done. I shan't have Stella's life spoiled just so's you can experiment with a cistern. There's money and to spare for her to be married right now—this very week."

"They won't be married in my house," exploded Stella's father, dancing with excitement, "and I'll forbid the banns anywhere's else."

"Stella'll be married to home here, and you'll give her away. Just put that in your idjo and smoke it!" said Mr. Dillaway's spouse, bustling back to her kitchen.

Stella, a tall, pale girl, with tired eyes and pretty, pathetic face, looked up wistfully as her mother entered the room.

"What did he say, mother?"

"Same old story, Stella. Don't you care. I've got an idea." Mrs. Dillaway rolled up the sleeves of her crisp gingham gown and fell to work among the baking dishes with vigor. "You get ready to be married next Wednesday evening at 6 o'clock, and I'll guarantee your pa'll give you away fast enough."

TIME CERTAINLY DRAGGED.

"You're the best mother!" cried Stella joyfully. "Now I'll run down and tell Joe."

On Wednesday afternoon of the following week, the very day set for Stella's marriage, Samuel Dillaway came flaming up the walk to the kitchen door very much like one of his own belligerent cockerels.

"Scout, Stella!" warned her mother. "Your pa's heard about the wedding. Well, I should have told him in a few minutes anyway. He's got to have it broke to him, but not till I get ready."

When Mr. Dillaway reached the kitchen door and flung it wide open he rushed straight into the arms of his excited wife.

"Samuel, what the land's up in the cistern? I've heard the queerest sounds up there. Seems like something alive in there. If there is it ought to be got out, for the wind's around to the east, and we're bound to have rain tomorrow."

Mr. Dillaway, attacked on his weakest point, looked up at the great round cistern perched freakishly on the kitchen roof, with long leaden pipes running from the main roof of the house into the covered top. It had been completed the day before, and Samuel was waiting impatiently for the first rains to fall and enter the cistern that he might prove that his idea for supplying water to kitchen and bathroom would work successfully to the utter confusion of the village water company, whose yearly water rates were much lower than the cost of Dillaway's cistern.

From within the cistern there came queer, scratching, metallic noises and strange shrill cries of distress.

Mr. Dillaway removed his hat and coat and then climbed the ladder that led to the kitchen roof. Mrs. Dillaway panted [illegible] up the back stairs and [illegible] her ample form through a bathroom window and came out on the roof beside her husband.

"What you doing, Celia?" demanded Mr. Dillaway testily. "You'll fall and break your neck, that's what you'll do. Go in the house." Quite confident that he had been obeyed, Mr. Dillaway walked across the creaking, rattling tin roof to the cistern, whose top rose three feet above his head. Leading up to the top of the cistern was a narrow iron ladder. One-half of the circular lid of the cistern was propped open. From this opening there proceeded the strange sounds heard from below.

"What is it?" asked Mrs. Dillaway anxiously.

"I don't know. Maybe it's the cat."

"The cat's in the kitchen, Samuel. Now, be careful," for Mr. Dillaway was propelling his small, round person up the ladder with dangerous rapidity.

"Hello!" exclaimed Mr. Dillaway fiercely, peering inside.

"What is it?" pleaded his wife.

"Nothing much," returned Mr. Dillaway sarcastically. "Only one of my prize-ep kerels chasing its tail around down there. He's got to get out of there tonight or he'll run himself to death. Can you get the stepladder out to me, Celia? I've got to climb down beside here."

"I'll fetch it in a minute, Samuel. The telephone's ringing. I'll be right back. You might just drop down that three feet and be catching your bird; I can get the ladder over to you."

With that she was gone, and Mr. Dillaway waited in vain for her return, each moment growing more peppery as to temper. Having requested his wife to bring the stepladder Mr. Dillaway would not demean himself by fetching it himself, so after a period of impatience he threw himself gingerly over the edge, clutched tightly the rim and swung down inside the cistern. Then he dropped with a clanging thud to the dry, zinc lined floor of his cistern.

Around this slippery surface he chased the elusive cockerel in narrowing circles until in some inexplicable manner he found that he was pursuing himself frantically around the well while the cockerel leaned exhausted against the side. It was an easy matter to capture the bird and tie his legs securely with a handkerchief.

"Celia!" called Mr. Dillaway in a commanding voice. He looked up at the semicircular opening overhead and saw the deep blue of the sky and nothing else. "Celia," he called again. "Where is that ladder?"

His voice echoed with a hollow metallic boom and seemed thrown back upon him. The cockerel squawked feebly.

Steps creaked slowly across the tin roof without and some one laboriously climbed the iron ladder and peered rosy faced over the opening. It was Mrs. Dillaway.

"Where is the stepladder?" demanded Mr. Dillaway irascibly.

"In the house."

"Why don't you bring it out here? I've got to get out of this."

"I should think you'd like to stay in it—it's a dreadful nice cistern. You think a lot more of it than you do of your own daughter," returned Mrs. Dillaway quietly.

"Nonsense, Celia! I won't listen to such talk. You get that ladder down here at once."

"Not yet," said Celia. "Not till you give your consent to Stella's marrying Joe Mellen tonight."

"I'll do no such thing," roared Mr. Dillaway wrathfully. "I see now, Celia. You put this cockerel in here yourself. It's a shameful imposition!"

"You coming to the wedding?" demanded Celia.

"No!" bellowed Mr. Dillaway. "I'll stay here till doomsday first."

"Very well, Samuel. I'll drop you down some wedding cake. The minister's coming now. They'll be married at 6 o'clock, and Stella hoped you'd give her away—the Dillaways was always married in style, you know!" she flung back over her shoulder as she backed down the ladder.

If Mr. Dillaway had not been too busy working himself into a rage he might have noted the strained anxiety in her voice. When her steps had creaked away into the house he peered at his watch. It was 5:30 now, and in a half hour, if Celia kept her word, Stella would be Joe Mellen's wife. He had been nicely duped.

When several hours had passed Mr. Dillaway again consulted his watch and found it to be 5:45. Time certainly dragged in a zinc lined cistern with no companion save a draggled cockerel.

There were distant sounds of arriving guests. Once he heard his name mentioned. They were asking for him, expecting him to give Stella away. Let the ungrateful hussy give herself away!

Another hour dragged, and it was five minutes before 6. Steps creaked across the roof and climbed the ladder. This time it was Stella's fair head outlined against the pale evening sky.

"Pa, won't you come out and give me away? I don't want to be married without you're there," faltered the bride tearfully. A hot drop splashed on Samuel's upturned face, and it seemed to melt some hard little knot in his heart.

"I'm coming up, Stella, just as soon as your ma fetches the stepladder. I been waiting for her this last two hours. I got my clothes to change, you know. Tell your ma to hurry up."

"Oh, yes, pa; I'm so glad," cried Stella, disappearing from Mr. Dillaway's view.

"And, Stella!"

"Yes, pa."

"Don't you dare get married till I get there!"

MICHIGAN HAS NEW GOVERNOR

Chase S. Osburn Takes Oath of Office Monday

BEST WISHES OF PEOPLE WITH HIM

Fred M. Warner has Served State for Fourteen Years

Little Change in Staff of County Officials—Retiring Officers Have Been Faithful and Efficient Public Servants.

Chase S. Osborn was inaugerated governor of Michigan Monday, succeeding Fred M. Warner who has held the office three terms, a longer period than any other man in the history of the state.

Governor Osborn takes the governor's chair with the best wishes of every body in the state. He has outlined an ambitious program and will have the co-operation of every body, who has the best interests of the state at heart, in wishing he may be able to accomplish what he has set out to do. Whether successful or not they are in full sympathy with his ideas of government which are in line with the progressive sentiment of the people.

Fred M. Warner has served the people of Michigan fourteen years, the last six as governor, and while no governor in recent years have been more severely criticized then he, we beleive that as time goes on and the bitterness of political strife wears away, history will do him justice and Fred M. Warner will occupy his just place in the history of the state, as a man who used his position to secure for the people the things which they demanded and during his administration of the executive office secured the enactment of more popular legislative acts than any other governor of Michigan.

John Q. Ross, who succeeds Patrick Henry Kelley as lieutenant governor, also has the example of a predecessor to fellow who labored in the interests of the people.

In the state senate we are represented by a new man, Frank D. Scott of Alpena, who impresses all by his personality and who we believe will be found on the right side in the upper house.

Representative Pearson enters upon his second term with the earned reputation of being one of the real leaders in the house of representatives, a prestige which will mean much to the many and diversified interests of Charlevoix county.

In the county there are few changes. Sheriff McWain and staff are succeeded by Ford P. Robbins and a new force of deputies and Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas by Dwight H. Fitch. Largely through the adoption of local-option, but, in a measure, also to the vigilance of our out going officials, charged with the maintainence of the peace of the county, Charlevoix county is one of the most lawabiding sections of the country. The only other changes are in the office of coroner, Dr. Marshall being succeded by Dr. Armstroog, and drain commissioner, William R. Cowan being chosen to succeed E. S. Stacks.

We can express no heartier wish for the success of our new officials than to say that at the close of their offical service we hope they can retire with a record equal to those who now retire as faithful, efficient servants of the people.

IMPORTANT BUSINESS CHANGE

J. R. Cooper Successor to Ward & Ward in Implement Business.

An important business change took place last week when E. B. Ward disposed of the stock of farm implements, small tools and repairs which he has conducted under the name of Ward & Ward to J. R. Cooper. The firm of Ward & Ward still retains the contract lines which Mr. Ward has previously carried and the garage business, with their office where it is now located. Mr. Cooper has rented the part of the building formerly occupied by Benjamin Brown, and the three story ware house.

Mr. Ward's reason for selling is a desire to be able to give more personal attention to his other business interests.

Mr. Cooper needs no introduction to the people of Charlevoix and he will be a welcome recruit to our circle of business men. It is his intention to put in a stock of feed which he will carry in addition to the present business.

WELL ATTENDED MEETING HELD

Of Newly Organized Charlevoix County Chamber of Commerce

AT THE COURT HOUSE LAST NIGHT

Supervisors Requested to Submit County Road System to People

Advertising Booklet to Be Issued—Every Part of County to Take Part in Working for Charlevoix County.

Last night the Charlevoix County Chamber of Commerce held its first meeting since organization, at the Court House, and not withstanding the infensly cold weather a good crowd was present, thirty-seven being on hand when President Nicholls called the meeting to order, including a number of supervisors who took an active part in the discussion on the principal topic which the meeting was called to discuss—the county road system—bringing out many important phases of the subject.

J. E. Cunverse of Boyne City, the first speaker, explained the county system in detail and an animated and thourough discussion followed. By an unamious vote it was decided to ask the board of supervisors to submit the question to the people.

The subject of advertising the county was brought up and on motion of George H. VanPelt it was unamionsly voted that an advertising booklet of the county be issued, the cost of the same to be paid in part by advertising and in part by the different boards of commerce. Each supervisor was appointed a committee to bring the matter before their respective township boards and secure such sums as they see fit to use in advertising the county.

A get-together spirit was manifested throughout the entire meeting and the wisdom of the formation of the county organization was most forcibly proven.

With the ball now started rolling the Charlevoix County Chamber of Commerce will prove one of the most important factors now at work for the development of Charlevoix County.

NEW TAX SYSTEM

Proposed by Attorney General Kuhn at Meeting of Prosecutors

Wayne County Prosecuter Believe Saloons Will Sooo Be Thing of the Past.

In a paper by Attorney General Frank Kuhn, read before the Michigan Association of Prosecuting Attorneys, the state's chief legal adviser presented views on taxation not in accord with the system now in use in Michigan, but which met with unanimous approval.

The proposition that Kuhn made and which he declares that the state must soon meet, is the separation of state and county finances. He advanced the idea that any system that seeks to maintain an equitable system of uniform taxation throughout the state must necessarily fail because of the innumerable bases of valuation in vogue and the inability of a central equalizing board to arrive at an absolutely just valuation in all cases.

The attorney general would leave the question of local taxation entirely in the hands of county officers and maintain a state government by the corporation tax, now credited to the primary school fund which permits the accumulation of unnecessary funds in certain districts that cannot be used in any legitimate way.

Philip Van Zile of Detroit expressed the belief that the saloon will, within a few years, be a thing of the past, but he did not believe the liquor business would ever be wiped out. "But we cannot rid ourselves of the saloons in this country except as we do it by the advance of public opinion," he said.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year; President R. R. McPeck of Charlotte, vice president, David H. Crowley of Cheboygan, secretary and treasurer, Arthur P. Hicks, assistant attorney general.

THEATRICAL

The Henderson Kids at the Charlevoix theater last Thursday evening for the benefit of the K. of P. lodge was not largely patronized. The play was well executed by the members of the troupe. The country sketch was weak in its story and detail and was farcical in its technical reality. The people of the company would make an extreme hit in a strong rural comedy, where life on the farm is strengthened by the practical use of a dramatic situation now and then.

The G. Ed. Brown Vaudeville and Performing Dog Show at the Majestic theater last week Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights scored another hit to this popular playhouse. The dogs that were used were well trained and showed some clever tricks. Hall & Hall gave a clever playlet which they neatly executed. Ed. Brown, as the blacktace comedian and trombone soloist, was a clever soloist. Had Mr. Brown used the colored dialect in his comedian work, he would have captured his whole audience, as he smoothly delivered his jokes. We hope Mr. Hoffman will be able to secure such able attractions in the future.

Baker Elected Speaker.

Hon. H. F. Baker of Cheboygan, well-known in this county, was elected speaker of the house of representatives today, receiving 59 out of the 87 votes in the Republican caucus.

BUMPER FRUIT CROP

Looked for this Season in Western Michigan

Quality Rather than Quantity to be Motto of Growers.

If the 1911 fruit crop in Western Michigan proves a bumper one, as many think it will, because of the rest that the trees have had, there will be need of more careful attention in the matter of grading and packing.

Several million fruit trees have been set out during the past five years and a fair sized fraction of these will come into bearing the coming season, increasing the ordinary crop yield by several hundred thousand packages.

It has been suggested that an effort be made to try to transform the quantity element of the 1911 crop into a quality factor. It is believed that a good crop of fruit of extra quality will bring as much wealth into the region as a bumper crop of only fairly good fruit. Considerable money has been expended getting the phrase, "Western Michigan Fruit With Flavor" before the people of the country and the time is soon to be here when it will be the duty of the fruit grower to prove the truth of the statement.

It is hoped that plans can be evolved so that only the truly creditable fruits will be sent to market that Western Michigan products may get the reputation they deserve.

Much can be accomplished along this line if the many local horticultural societies devote one or two meetings each, the present winter to the consideration of the topic, "Quality rather than Quantity." It would be well if emphasis were laid upon the value of pruning the trees and thining the fruits early in the season. Plans should also be considered for the establishment of canning factories which would absorb the fruits failing to come up to a high standard.

Western Michigan can produce fruits that are superior to the fruits grown by the far Western states and with the shorter haul to the consumers these are good reasons for believing that we should exert ourselves sufficiently to get and hold the markets.

ASKS MANY CHANGES

Superintendent of Public Instruction Wright's Annual Report

Contains Several Recommendations for Changes in Present School Laws.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wright has filed his annual report. Concerning advisable legislation he suggests a law providing that no person be permitted to teach in rural schools unless having had a course in some normal school.

The report also says it is the opinion of the department that the legislature shall consider some form of text-book uniformity. There are many people who move from place to place, from district to district, and from township to township, and in many cases these people are required to purchase new books every time. The department is of the opinion every county should have a uniform list of books and these books should be purchased at a reasonable price.

In dealing with the primary school money and the apportionment Superintendent Wright had the following to say: "I believe that so long as any district has enough primary money on hand to pay teachers and tuition for two years in advance it should not share in the apportionment."

Another subject which the report deals with in relation to proposed legislation is the tuition law. "It is the opinion of this department that the legislature should determine who is an eighth grade graduate. I believe that anyone who has finished the eighth grade in a graded district and received the county eighth grade diploma should be entitled to have its tuition paid.

"A change from the present district system would lead to an equalization of the distribution of the primary money, a decreased cost per capita, and at the same time better school conditions, a one unit taxation, a one unit primary fund, a single board of education, and a uniformity of efficiency for a township.

BOND OF NEW OFFICIALS APPROVED

Judge Mayne Delivers Address to the Members of the Board

Supervisor Hoyle of Peaine the Only Absentee Supervisor Carson of Boyne Valley New Member.

Tuesday the supervisors met in special session. Judge Mayne appeared before the board and explained the qualifications nessecary for jurors and how the county was put to considerable expense each year by the lack of care exercised by the proper officials in making up their lists.

The judge also explained the workings of the probation law stating that in nearly every case, out of the large number of probationers under his charge, good results had followed. He ask that he might be allowed to send some of his boy probationers to the county infirmary for a short time if a case should arise where he thought it advisable.

This forenoon the bonds of the new officials were accepted. A. B. Nicholas was retained to assist Prosecuting Attorney Fitch in the Swift cases.

A motion to submit the question of the county road system to the people at the April election was laid on the table until tomorrow.

PETOSKEY PIONEER DEAD

Was the Father of Mrs. Minnie Smith of Charlevoix.

At the age of seventy-four years, Joseph Gray, an old-time resident of Petoskey, passed away at two o'clock Tuesday morning at 602 Rush street, where he and his wife were living. Mr. Gray had been sick for some time, and the end was not entirely unexpected.

The deceased was born in Canada and moved to Petoskey about thirty years ago, having made his home here ever since. He is survived by a wife and several children; among the latter: Mrs. Minnie Smith of Charlevoix; Nellie Gray and Edward Gray, the latter of whom is an inmate of Petoskey hospital, where he is confined with serious illness. Another son, Fred Gray, died some time ago in this city.

The funeral services will be held Thursday morning at ten o'clock from the house, 602 Rush street with Rev. C. Louis Berry in charge.—Petoskey News.

GUILTY AS CHARGED OUR VERDICT

Jury Return Verdict in Case of People vs. Swift

AFTER AN ELEVEN HOUR SESSION

Case was Hard Fought from Start to Finish

Motion for New Trial Will be Heard Friday—Appeal Will Probably be Made to Supreme Court.

As we went to press last week a jury had just been secured in the Swift case, both sides announcing themselves satisfied with the following gentlemen; Samuel Pearson, Will Johnson, Charles Morehouse, Conrad Sneider, Grant Hammond, Frank Smith, John McLellan, John Walker, Ruben Walter, Henry Konkle, Walter Kahler and George Meggison. Case went to the jury Saturday noon and a verdict of guilty was returned about one o'clock Sunday morning. A stay of sentence was secured and Swift returned home Sunday, being under the same bonds.

The Swift case was the most celebrated case in the criminal annals of Charlevoix county. Herman L. Swift, manager of the Beulah Home Farm for Boys was arrested December 1, 1909, charged with gross indecency with the inmates of that institution, four or five different charges being laid against him. After laying a few weeks in the county jail he was released on heavy bonds. After being put over several times the case wherin Murrel Griffin was the complaining witness was finally brought to trial at the August term, E. N. Clink of East Jordan and F. O. Gaulfey of Cadillac appearing for the defendant and Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas looking after the interests of the people. After a hard fought legal contest the case went to the jury who, after remaining out several hours, reported themselves unable to agree.

The next move was to ask for a change of venue which was denied and the case came to trial last Tuesday with the result above stated. E. N. Clink and Lisle Shanahan appearing for Mr. Swift and Mr. Nicholas in his official capacity. With the best attorneys in Northern Michigan pited against each other the case from the beginning has been a legal contest of the highest order and Mr. Nicholas, who closed his official career with the closing argument to the jury, is receiving congratulations on every hand for the victory which he won over his antagonists who proved themselves formen worthy of any man's steel, while the other side are none the less to be congratulated over the magnificent fight which they put up for their client in the face of an overwhelming public sentiment against their client and an antagonist of the ability of Mr. Nicholas.

We understand the case will be appealed and next Friday has been set for a hearing on the case when sentence will probably be passed.

The case has been watched with interest by the people of the whole state there being hardly a community in which Swift has not appeared and solicited aid for the home, and a strong feeling has been aroused both for and against him, and the verdict will be received with mingled feelings, one of sadness that a man of the great abilities of Swift should be found guilty of such a crime and also a feeling of congratulation that the Charlevoix County officials were not swayed from their duty by the high standing of the defendant, but did their duty and brought him to trial before a jury of his peers.

In the meantime probably the legal struggle will continue as his attorneys are not content to give up until they have exhausted every effort to prove their client not guilty.

The civil cases growing out of the property rights in the Beulah Home are still awaiting a decision from Judge Mayne.

Nearly Anyone May Secure a Splendid Growth of Hair.

We have a remedy that has a record of growing hair and curing baldness in 93 out of every 100 cases where used according to directions for a reasonable length of time. That may seem like a strong statement—it is, and we mean it to be, and no one should doubt it until they have put our claims to an actual test.

We are so certain Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will cure dandruff, prevent baldness, stimulate the scalp and hair roots, stop falling hair and grow new hair, that we personally give our positive guarantee to refund every penny paid us for it in every instance where it does not give entire satisfaction to the user.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is as pleasant to use as clear spring water. It is delightfully perfumed, and does not grease or gum the hair. Two sizes 50c and $1.00. With our guarantee back of it, you certainly take no risk. Sold only at our store "The Rexall Store." The Ivy-Drug Store, E. N. Metcalf, proprietor.

Neighborhood Notes

The rural delivery system is to undergo some changes. The post office is investigating the plan of using light automobiles in the service, thus reducing the number of carriers, but not the service. Of course the pay of the carriers will not permit their purchasing their own automobiles, but it is Mr. Hitchcock's idea to have the government purchase the machines and by putting on each carrier more territory and reducing the number of carriers they will get better service at less expense. Postmasters all over the country are reporting that rural carriers in their offices are vying with each other to improve the service and that the rural service has reached high plane of efficiency.

The Ward estate in Antrim county has sold 1,700 acres of timber to the firm of Buckley & Douglas in Manistee. This firm being the owner of the Manistee & North Eastern railroad, the sale means the extension of that road into a new tract, and further means a new lease of life on the part of the saw mills in Manistee.

D. H Day of Glen Haven, president of the Western Michigan Development bureau is preparing a booklet for the purpose of calling the attention of the public to country that lies around Glen Lake and that section of Leelanau county. The booklet will contain a good description of the locality and what it is capable of producing in the line of fruit and farm crops, and great care will be exercised in collecting facts which can be proven to be true in every respect.

The work will be illustrated with many cuts of scenes around the lake and Sleeping Bear which will give an excellent idea of the country which Mr. Day wishes to call attention to at the present time. While the booklet is being published by Mr. Day the general interests of the county will be helped by its publication.

There is some excellent timber in this part of the county and Mr. Day says that any land that can raise such hardwood trees as are grown there will certainly make ideal fruit land. Some of the land that is for sale is well developed, but there is still something like 75,000 acres that is still in the wild state that will in time be developed into some of the best fruit farms in western Michigan.

The town board of Calumet township, Houghton county, has called a special session for January 12, when the matter of increasing the salaries of the clerk and his assistant and returning to the fee system for the compensation of the treasurer will be discussed. The general state law gives to township treasurers one per cent for making collections, but in view of the fact that this amounted to about $4,000 annually objection was made and a special act of the legislature was secured placing the treasurer on a salary basis and he was allowed $1,800 a year. Out of this the treasurer has to pay an assistant and go to the expense of providing bonds in the sum of $500,000, which leaves him but a comparatively small sum for his personal services. The board is willing to go back to the old fee system for his remuneration.

A STEADY BRAIN.

Sick Kidneys Weaken the Whole Body—Make You Ill Languid and Depressed.

Sick kidneys weaken the body through the continual drainage of life-giving albumen from the blood into urine, and the substitution of poisonous uric acid that goes broadcast through the system, sowing the seeds of disease. Loss of albumen causes weakness, languor, depression. Uric poisoning causes rheumatic pain, nervousness, nausea, cricks in the back, gravel and kidney stones. The proper treatment is a kidney treatment, and the best remedy is Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is good proof in the following testimonial:

R. Kluwe, 119 South D. St., Cheboygan, Michigan, says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills far superior to any other kidney medicine I have ever taken. My back was very painful and I had many other symptoms of kidney trouble. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved the backache and other difficulties, in fact helped me in every way. I am always glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills and I willingly give you permission to refer to me at any time as one who praises them highly."

The history of the Michigan state library during the the last decade has been one of progress and development, according to the last annual report of the state librarian. The law of 1901 unlocked the doors of the library and permitted free use to the taxpayers of the state. Subsequent legislation has liberalized still more the policy of the management. It is now a state library in every sense of the word. The library also owns a collection of 700 unframed pictures which are loaned for exhibition to clubs and other organizations.

Michigan stands second in introducing the traveling library plan, the initiative having been taken by New York in 1893. This department is perhaps the most useful from a sociological standpoint.

The books bought with money especially appropriated are selected with the greatest care under the the personal supervision of the librarian and sent into the rural districts through applications from granges farmers' clubs, school districts and to any community which unites in asking a library. There are 33,000 books in the traveling libraries.

In 1891 the library contained 60,000 books. Today there are, including the reserve stock, nearly 170,000 volumes and all open to the public through different methods of distribution.

The law department, including the collection of statute laws, consists of 25,000 books and is primarily for the use of the bench and bar of the state. The great value of this department is the complete collection of English, Irish, Scotch, and foreign colonial laws and reports.

The general department contains 83,000 volumes and covers, books usually found in other libraries, fiction only excepted. The idea of a library as an education institution has been kept in the mind and the books are selected with that purpose. From this department are drawn books which are loaned to study clubs and to individuals in all parts of the state.

During the last year 125 special libraries of 30 to 50 books each were sent to the club women of the state. These libraries follow as closely as possible the work of the clubs and the splendid resources of the state library are shown by the fact that it has been able to do this and still keep on the shelves all books needed for reference.

CHAPTER XIX.

"I'VE heard the news!" cried Cherry later that afternoon, shrieking to make herself heard above the rattle and jar of the machinery.

"There seems to be a Providence that watches 'over fishermen," said Boyd.

"I am happy, for your sake, and I want to apologize for my display of temper. Come away where I won't have to scream so. I want to talk to you."

"It is music to my ears," he answered as he led her past the rows of Chinamen bowed before their soldering torches as if bushed with some heathen rites. "But I'm glad to sit down just the same. I've been on my feet for thirty-six hours."

"It's too much for one man," she declared.

"Oh, I'll sleep tomorrow."

"Did you see—her?" questioned Cherry.

"Yes!"

"She must be very proud of you," she said wistfully.

"I—I—don't think she understands what I am trying to do or what it means. Our talk was not very satisfactory."

"She surely must have understood what Marsh is doing."

"I didn't tell her that."

"Why not?"

"What good would it have done?"

"Why"—Cherry seemed bewildered—"she could put a stop to it; she could use her influence with her father against Marsh. I expected to see your old crew back at work again. Oh, I wish I had her power!"

"She wouldn't take a hand under any circumstances—it wouldn't occur to her—and, naturally I couldn't ask her." Boyd flushed uncomfortably. "Thanks to George's trap, there is no need." He went on to tell Cherry of the scene with Mr. Wayland and its stormy ending.

"They have used all their resources to down you," she said, "but luck is with you, and you mustn't let them succeed. Now is the time to show them what is in you. Go in and win her now against all of them."

He was grateful for her sympathy, yet somehow it made him uncomfortable.

"What was it you wished to see me about?" he asked.

"Oh! Have you seen Chakawana?"

"No."

"She disappeared early this morning soon after the yacht came in. I can't find her anywhere. She took the baby with her, and—I'm worried."

"Doesn't Constantine know where she is?"

"Why, Constantine is down here, isn't he?"

"He hasn't been here since yesterday."

Cherry rose nervously. "There is something wrong, Boyd. They have been acting queerly for a long time."

Just then Constantine came sauntering round the corner of the building.

"Thank heaven!" cried Cherry. "He will know where the others are."

But when his mistress questioned him Constantine merely replied: "I don' know. I no see Chakawana."

"There is something queer about this," said Emerson. "Where have you been all day?"

"I go sleep. I tired from fighting last night. I come back now and go work. Bime'by Chakawana come back, too, I guess."

"Well, I don't need you tonight, so you'd better go back to Cherry's house and stay there till I send for you."

As she passed Marsh's cannery Cherry saw a tender moored to the dock and noticed strangers among the buildings. They stared at her curiously, as if the sight of a white girl attended by a copper hued giant were part of the picturesqueness they expected. As she drew near her own house she saw a woman approaching, and while yet a stone's throw distant she recognized her. A jealous tightening of her throat and a flutter at her breast told her that this was Mildred Wayland.

Cherry would have passed on silently, but Miss Wayland checked her.

"Pardon me," she said. "Will you tell me what that odd looking building is used for?" She pointed to the village church.

"That is the Greek church."

"How interesting! Are there many Greeks here?"

"No. It is a relic of the Russian days. The natives worship there."

"Do you live here?"

"Yes. In the log house yonder."

"Indeed! I tried to find some one there, but—you were out, of course. You have it arranged very cozily, I see." Mildred's manner was faintly patronizing. She was vexed at the beauty and evident refinement of this woman whom she had thought to find so different.

"If you will go back I will show it to you from the inside, Miss Wayland." Cherry enjoyed her start at the name and the look of cold hostility that followed.

"You have the advantage of me," said Mildred. "I did not think we had met. You are"— She raised her brows inquiringly.

"Cherry Malotte, of course."

"I remember. Mr. Marsh spoke of you."

"I am sorry."

"I beg your pardon?"

"I say I am sorry Mr. Marsh ever spoke of me."

Mildred smiled frigidly. "Evidently you do not like him."

"Nobody in Alaska likes him. Do you?"

"You see, I am not an Alaskan."

"Do you know that Mr. Marsh is to blame for all of Boyd's misfortunes?"

"Boyd's?"

"Yes, Boyd's, of course. Oh, let us not pretend. I call him by his first name. I think you ought to know the truth about this business, even if Boyd is too chivalrous to tell you."

"If Mr. Emerson blames any one but himself for his failure I am sure he would have told me."

"Then you don't know that."

"I never knew him to ask another to defend him."

"He never asked me to defend him. I merely thought that if you knew the truth you might help him."

"I? How?"

"It is for you to find a way. He has met with opposition and treachery at every step. I think it is time some one came to his aid."

"He has had your assistance at all times, has he not?"

"I have tried to help wherever I could, but—I haven't your power."

Mildred shrugged her shoulders. "You even went to Seattle to help him, did you not?"

"I went there on my own business."

"Why do you take such an interest in Mr. Emerson's affairs, may I ask?"

"It was I who induced him to take up this venture," said Cherry proudly. "I found him discouraged, ready to give up. I helped to put new heart into him. I have something at stake in the enterprise, too—but that's nothing. I hate to see a good man driven to the wall by a scoundrel like Marsh."

"Wait! There is something to be said on both sides. Mr. Marsh was magnanimous enough to overlook that attempt upon his life."

"What attempt?"

"You must have heard. He was wounded in the shoulder."

"Didn't Boyd tell you the truth about that?"

"He told me everything," said Mildred coldly. This woman's attitude was unbearable. It would seem that she even dared to criticise her, Mildred Wayland, for her treatment of Boyd.

"NOBODY IN ALASKA LIKES HIM. DO YOU?"

"I shall ask him about it again this evening," she continued. "If there has really been persecution, as you suggest, I shall tell my father."

"You won't see Boyd this evening," said Cherry.

"Oh, yes, I shall."

"He is very busy, and—I don't think he can see you."

"You don't understand. I told him to come out to the yacht!" Mildred's temper rose at the light she saw in the other woman's face.

"But if he should disappoint you?" Cherry insisted. "Remember that the fish are running, and you have no time to lose if you are going to help."

Mildred tossed her head. "To be frank with you, I never liked this enterprise of Boyd's. Now that I have seen the place and the people—well, I can't say that I like it better."

"The country is a bit different, but the people are much the same in Kotlik and in Chicago. You will find unscrupulous men and unselfish women everywhere."

Mildred gave her a cool glance that took her in from head to foot.

"And vice versa, I dare say. You speak from a wider experience than I." With a careless nod she picked her way toward the launch, where her friends were already assembling. She was angry and suspicious. Her pride was hurt because she had not been able to feel superior to the other woman. Instead she had descended to the weak resource of humanity, while Cherry had been simple and direct. She had expected to recognize instantly the type of person with whom she had to deal, but she found herself baffled. Who was this woman? Who was she doing here? Why had Boyd never told her of this extraordinary intimacy? Boyd must either give up Cherry or—

During the talk between the two young women Constantine had kept at a respectful distance, but when Mildred had gone he came up to Cherry with the question:

"Who is that?"

"That is Miss Wayland. That is the richest girl in the world, Constantine."

"Humph!"

"And the pity of it is she doesn't understand how very rich she is. Her father owns all these canneries and many more besides and lots of railroads. But you don't know what a railroad is, do you?"

"Mebbe him rich as Mr. Marsh, eh?"

"A thousand time richer. Mr. Marsh works for him the way you work for me."

"She more han'sumer than you be," he added with reluctant candor. "Mebbe that'n lie 'bout Mr Marsh, eh? White men all work for Mr. Marsh. He no work for nobody."

"No; it is true. Mr. Marsh knows how rich she is, and that is why he wants to marry her."

The breed wheeled swiftly, his soft soles crunching the gravel.

"Mr. Marsh want marry her?" he repeated, as if doubting his ears.

"Yes. That is why he has fought Mr. Emerson. They both want to marry her. That is why Marsh broke Mr. Emerson's machinery and hired his men away from him and cut his nets. They hate each other. Do you understand?"

"Me savvy!" said Constantine shortly, then strode on beside the girl. "Me think all the time Mr. Emerson gota marry you."

Cherry gasped. "No, no! Why, he is in love with Miss Wayland."

"S'pose he don' marry her?"

"Then Mr. Marsh will get her, I dare say."

After a moment Constantine announced with conviction "I guess Mr. Marsh is bad man."

"I'm glad you have discovered that. He has even tried to kill Mr. Emerson. That shows the sort of man he is."

"It's good thing—get marry!" said Constantine vaguely. "The father say if woman don' marry she go to hell."

"I'd hate to think that," laughed the girl.

"That's true," the other affirmed stoutly. "The pries' he say so, and pries' don' lie. He say man takes a woman and don' get marry they both go to hell and burn forever. Bimeby little baby come, and he go to hell too."

"Oh, I understand! The father wants to make sure of his people, and he is quite right. You natives haven't observed the law very carefully."

"He say Indian woman stop with white man, she never see Jesus' house no more. She go to hell sure, and baby go too. You s'pose that's true?"

"I dare say it is, in a way."

"By 'gosh! That's tough on little baby!" exclaimed Constantine fervently.

CHAPTER XX.

ALL that night Boyd stayed at his post, while the cavernous building shuddered and hissed to the straining toil of the machines and the gasping breath of the furnaces. As the darkness gathered he had gone out upon the dock to look regretfully toward the twinkling lights on the Grande Dame, then turned doggedly back to his labors. He would have sent Mildred word, but he had not a single man to spare.

At 10 o'clock the next morning he staggered into his quarters more dead than alive. In his heart was a great thankfulness that Big George had not found him wanting. The last defective machine was mended, the last weakness strengthened, and the plant had reached its fullest stride. The fish might come now in any quantity; the rest was but a matter of coal and iron and human endurance. Meanwhile he would sleep.

He met "Fingerless" Fraser emerging, decked royally in all the splendor of new clothes and spotless linen.

"Where are you going?" Boyd asked him.

"I'm going out into society."

"Clyde is taking you to the yacht, eh?"

"No. He's afraid of my work, so I'm going out on my own. He told me all about the swell outfits at Marsh's place, so I thought I'd land up there and look them over. I may 'cop an heiress.' He winked wisely. "If I see one that looks gentle I'm liable to grab me some bride. He says there ain't one that's got less than a couple of millions in her kick."

Boyd was too weary to do more than wish him success, but it seemed that fortune favored Fraser, for before he had gone far he saw a young woman seated in a patch of wild flowers, plucking the blooms with careless hand while she drank in the beauty of the bright arctic morning. She was simply dressed, yet looked so prosperous that Fraser instantly decided:

"That's her! I'll spread my checks with this one. Good morning!" he began.

The girl gave him an indifferent glance from two fearless eyes and nodded slightly.

"If you don't mind, I'll rest a minute. I'm out for my morning walk. It's a nice day, isn't it?" As she did not answer he ran on glibly: "My name is De Beerille. I'm one of the New Orleans branch. That's my cannery down yonder." He pointed in the direction from which he had just come.

"I thought that was Mr Emerson's cannery," she said.

"Oh, the idea! He only runs it for me. I put up the money. You know him, eh?"

The girl nodded. "Yes. I know Mr. Clyde also."

"Who—Alton?" he queried with re

"I say, ain't he an awful thing? He ain't anything like Emerson. There's a ring tailed swallow all right, all right! I like him."

"Are you very intimate with him?"

"Am I? I'm closer to him than a porous plaster. When Boyd ain't around I'm him, that's all. Is that your yacht?"

"No. My father and I are merely passengers."

"So you trailed the old skeezicks along with you? Well, that's right. Make the most of your father while you've got him. If I'd paid more attention to mine I'd have been better off now. But I was wild." Fraser winked in a manner to inform his listener that all worldly wisdom was his. "I wanted to be a jockey, and the old party cut me off. What I've got now I made all by myself, but if I'd stayed in Bloomington I might have been president of the bank by this time."

"Bloomington! I understood you to say New Orleans."

"My old man had a whole string of banks," Fraser averred hastily.

"Tell me—is Mr. Emerson ill?" asked the girl.

"Ill enough to lick a den of wildcats."

"He intended coming out to the yacht last night, but he disappointed us."

"He's as lousy as an ant hill. I met him turning in just as I came out for my constitutional."

"Where had he been all night?" Her voice betrayed an interest that Fraser was quick to detect. He answered cheerily:

PROTECTION OF TOWN BLOCKS

Scheme to Beautify Brooklyn by Small Societies.

RESIDENTS BANDED TOGETHER

Community of Interest Idea Promises Good Results—Several Improvements Obtained and Grievances Redressed—Neighborly Feeling Shown.

Organize a block improvement society. In this way sometimes more can be accomplished than through a larger organization. A neighboring block or one in another part of the town may see your good work and profit by your example. Thus the good work will spread from one section to another. The plans of an organization in Brooklyn are herewith given and are well worth considering:

Brooklyn, which has long been known as the city of homes and churches, bids fair to become the city beautiful if an idea which has taken practical shape in one section spreads throughout the borough, as it seems likely to do. The residents of one block in the Bedford section have banded together to bring about certain ideals and to combat everything annoying or objectionable to any or all of the members. The block is now a desirable residential one, and the property owners want to keep it so.

They have formed the Grand Avenue association, elected officers, an executive committee and adopted bylaws. These bylaws state that the object of the organization is "to improve, beautify and protect the block in Grand avenue between Putnam and Gates avenues."

The association was started through the attempt of a builder to erect a large apartment house on the block. The property owners got together, and the project was blocked. They got the consent of the owners of another plot not to sell to anybody without giving them a chance to buy.

While the members stand ready to contribute to a common fund any money necessary to carry out the objects of the association, they pay only $3 a year dues and meet only when called together to act on some proposition that the executive committee does not wish to finally decide.

The intention of the members is to secure the embellishment of the block by planting trees and giving proper care to those now growing, to see that the lawns and gardens are kept in good condition, that unsightly obstructions be removed and that the city officials do not neglect them in the matter of public improvements.

The association is giving a large share of its attention to getting relief from the flood which occurs on the avenue after a heavy rain. They want to get a more adequate sewer in the street.

"This community of interest idea is a fine one," said Mr. Kingman, chairman of the executive committee, "and should be adopted generally by house owners of the borough. Of course we now have taxpayers' and property owners' associations all over the borough, and they are good things, but they are of necessity large and rather unwieldy bodies and represent a more or less large section where interests are not always the same.

"But the interests of the property owners in one block are usually alike, and the members are naturally more intimately associated, so that much more can be accomplished for the general good. We get along without a jar, and there is a much more neighborly feeling among the residents of the block than ever before. I am a firm believer in block organizations and would advise that they be formed in every part of the borough. By united action the taxpayers can accomplish much more than they could as individuals, and in this way they can get improvements which have heretofore been missing and help make the borough beautiful."

While this block organization is a new thing in Brooklyn, there are already several well established organizations of property owners in certain suburban sections. Notable among these is the Prospect Park West association, in a suburb just below Prospect park. Every resident of the suburb is a member, and there are certain rules and regulations laid down which all must abide by. Out of a common fund flower gardens in the streets, lawns, shrubbery and hedges are cared for, and every member is pledged to keep up the tone of the neighborhood. No private garages are allowed, and no fences except those absolutely necessary are permitted. And these must be ornamental and of a prescribed height. One resident who recently erected an ornamental fence near Church avenue had to cut it down because it was too high. The association recently began a crusade for a uniform telephone rate of 5 cents in Greater New York.

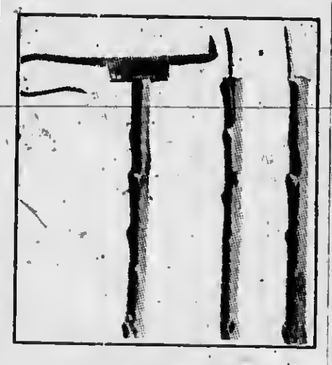
CLEFT GRAFTING.

Directions For Performing This Useful Operation on Fruit Trees.

Cleft grafting is practiced on the tops of trees which are more or less matured. Wild apple trees of good size are often grafted, so that they will produce desirable fruit. It should be practiced on branches not over two inches in diameter. It is best to graft only one-third or one-half of a tree in a single season, so as to have enough top to leave out well. A saw, a pruning hook, a knife and a hammer are necessary, as well as scions and grafting wax. The process is thus described by H. E. Hemenway of Hampshire county, Mass., for the state board of agriculture:



SETTING A CLEFT GRAFT.

With a fine, sharp saw remove the end of the branch to be grafted at a point where the stub will not be over two inches in diameter. Much care should be taken to prevent the bark from splitting down on one side when the branch is cut off.

Place the grafting hook so that the chisel part is over the center of the cut and drive it down with the hammer, splitting the stub into two parts through the center. Remove the tool and drive the wedge part into the end of the split stub, so as to hold the edges open. Select a scion and make a double wedge shaped cut on the lower end of it. Make it wedge shaped lengthwise, so as to fit into the cleft, and wedge shaped horizontally, so that the inside of the scion inserted in the cleft is almost cut away, while the outside, which comes in contact with the cambium layer of the stub forms an arc of the original circle of the twig.

When the stub is more than two inches in diameter place a scion on each edge of the cleft, so that the inner bark of the scion and of the stock will coincide. Remove the grafting hook. When the stub springs back it will hold the scions firmly in place. All exposed surfaces should be well covered with grafting wax to prevent evaporation. Let the wax cover the upturned bark below where the scion is inserted, as well as the top of the cut. When the stub is one inch or less across but one scion should be inserted. In the second season one of the branches should be removed if both scions grow. If both were allowed to grow a fork would be formed, which would weaken the tree. The scions should be wrapped in moist cloths to prevent them from drying out. Cleft grafting is successfully done in the spring when the buds are swelling. It is most successful on bright, warm days, free from cold or drying winds.

Our Farm Machinery Abroad.

Scarcity of labor in many countries is forcing the farmers to adopt labor saving machinery, according to the bureau of manufactures. A bulletin it has issued shows that nearly $30,000,000 worth of agricultural machinery was exported from this country in the fiscal year recently ended, Russia and Argentina being the best markets.

Good Advice.

Any good words you can say for your home town and for its people trading at home and keeping their money there, say them now and as often as no opportunity presents itself. If there is nothing good you can say about your home place seek a home somewhere else.

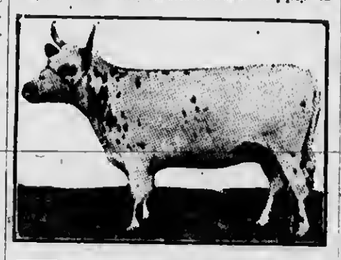
STRONG POINTS OF AYRSHIRE CATTLE.

The Ayrshire, while the youngest of the four great dairy breeds, occupies a position pre-eminently unique in that she is the dairy rustler and fills that position greatly to her credit. Her ability to occupy this position results first from her origin. Springing from the native white cattle of Scotland, she has been improved by judicious crossing and careful selection, but always compelled to endure the most rigorous exposure and to obtain her food as best she could. This exposure through long generations has developed in the Ayrshire cow the necessary strength of constitution to enable her to take up her abode in any climate and under the most adverse food conditions and still maintain her position as the profitable dairy cow, giving the largest return possible for the food supply.

The second reason why the Ayrshire cow may well be designated the dairy rustler is her physical formation and mental characteristics. She is of medium size, weighing about 1,000 pounds at maturity, with the perfect dairy conformation of a clean, bony head, strong jaws, broad muzzle, large, full eyes, slim neck, strongly attached to head and shoulders; fine shoulders at the withers, straight back, well arched ribs, giving abundant room for heart and lungs, and a large receptacle for roughage.

It is perhaps these points that show the marked characteristic of the Ayrshire cow as a dairy rustler. She is quick and active in her movements, has a large mouth and strong jaws, is not at all dainty in her appetite and eats with a relish whatever is easiest and most quickly obtained—good grass, poor grass or browse—and her large paunch is soon filled.

While the Ayrshire has always been kept where the natural food supply is limited and where the chief object in keeping her was to receive profit at the pail above cost of production, she has never until within a few years fallen into the hands of liberal feeders whose pride was to see what was in the Ayrshire cow when fed for a record for milk and butter. The official records in dairy tests have proved her ability to respond to liberal feed. Today there are a number of records of from 12,000 to 15,000 pounds of milk in a year and from 500 to 700 pounds of butter in a year.



The Ayrshire breed of dairy cattle is noted for its hardiness and ability to thrive under adverse conditions.

The Farmer's Lawyer.

Ignorance of the law excuses no one.

Notes bear interest only when so stated.

Contracts made on Sunday cannot be enforced.

An agreement without consideration of value is void.

Principals are responsible for the acts of their agents.

If a note is lost or stolen it does not release the maker. He must pay it if the consideration for which it was given and the amount can be proved.

A note obtained by fraud or from a person in a state of intoxication cannot be collected. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud. Signatures made with a lead pencil are good in law. The acts of one partner bind the rest.

The maker of an "accommodation" bill or note gone for which he had received no consideration, having lent his name or credit for the benefit of the holder) is not bound to the person accommodated, but is bound to all other parties, precisely as if there was a good consideration.

Liberal Feeding Pays.

It never pays to "rough" stock through the winter. The best beef that can be put on any animal is the baby beef. It has been thought by many farmers that it is a matter of economy to rough animals through the winter and then fit them with the aid of pasture in the spring. This, however, simply serves to set them back and has never been found to pay. This same statement would apply to hogs equally well. If there is not enough feed on the place to carry the hogs through and fit them quickly and if prices do not seem to warrant the purchase of feed, then it is much better to market them at once rather than stunt them by short feed in the winter. A stunted animal never made anybody money.

Grain For the Colt.

A fair allowance of grain for the colt measured in oats is as follows: Up to one year of age, two to three pounds; one to two years of age, four to five pounds; two to three years of age, seven to eight pounds.

The people of Charlevoix may expect a rare treat in the next number of the lecture course. Judge Alden who comes on the 27th, is creating a sensation wherever he goes. He is undoubtedly the most popular lecturer on the American platform at the present time. The bureau urges everybody to come to the lecture with the understanding that the price of admission will be refunded to any one who may feel that he has not received good value for his investment. Judge Alden is as entertaining as he is instructive.

At the present time alfalfa growing is being considered in many parts of the country, particularly in Northern Michigan, and it is claimed that good alfalfa land is worth $100 per acre. M. M. Burnham raised it for some years while he was living on his old farm near East Jordan and was successful, although the land was about as poor quality as any in this section. Mr. Burnham is going to furnish the Petoskey Record, for publication, a series of articles on alfalfa growing in Northern Michigan.

UNION GOSPEL SERVICES

Are Being Conducted Nightly By the Local Pastors

Complete Religious Census of the City Is Being Made To-day.

Beginning with the first day of the New Year, according to previous arrangments, the united churches of our city, began a series of union evangelistic services to continue at least for three weeks, being held one week in each church. Tho just in the beginning of the series a good interest and attendance is already in evidence; and the desire is that this will increase, and that this expression of united spirit and endeavor of the Christian church of our city will be productive of a genuine and thorough religious awaking which shall be felt for good in every home in the community. To this end the call and invitation goes out to every person, young and old, regardless of church affiliations, to give the largest possible attendance sympathy, might and prayers to the spirit, service and purpose of this effort, in behalf of the highest welfare of our fellow-men.

The services this week are being held in the Congregational church. Next week they will be in the Baptist church.

This afternoon a systematic house to house canvas of the entire city is being made by thirty workers, ten from each church. The purpose of this canvas is three-fold; first to give a personal invitation to every family to attend the present series of union services; second, to get the religious census of the city; and third to introduce the home department Sunday school work when desirable.

BOOSTING YOUR HOME.

Boosting One's Own Town Is a Step Toward Business Success.

"Town boosting" is a phase of advertising that has been developed in comparatively recent years. It is true that many years ago there were a few enterprising cities that spread broadcast alluring statements of their advantages, but this advertising was done more in the interest of real estate dealers than for the general good of the community. These efforts, too, were sporadic and without system. Today there are hundreds of cities all over the country that are conducting systematic, thoroughgoing advertising campaigns, and they are getting big returns from the money spent.

Aside from getting new residents and industries, the advertising of a town is a mighty good thing in another way. It develops a loyalty and enthusiasm and a pride in home institutions that are worth a good deal to the merchants of the city. When a lot of enthusiastic business men keep hammering away at the fact that "this is the best town in the state or the United States" people after awhile absorb some of the "boosters'" enthusiasm—they begin to see the doughnut instead of the hole.

They find many virtues where before they saw only faults, and before long a lot of chronic "knockers" are transformed into "boosters." A well developed local pride among all citizens is one of the most valuable assets a town can have. It is the strongest possible antidote for the mail order complaint: It keeps money at home and benefits every one in the town, the merchant most of all. By all means every town, no matter how large or how small, should have a "booster club."—Merchants' Record and Show Window.

YOUNG STREET CLEANERS.

Milwaukee's Mayor to Offer Prizes to Enlist the Children.

Prizes for children in connection with keeping the streets of Milwaukee clean and the elevation of the "white wings," giving trustworthy ones power of arrest for violation of health ordinances, are among the recommendations embraced in a special message of Mayor Emil Seidel of Milwaukee.

"The place to begin is with the child," says the mayor. "The boy and girl can be our auxiliary to our street cleaning force. Let us reward the child that adds to the greatest extent in removing litter from the streets, alleys and vacant lots."

As prizes he suggests monthly outings, picnics, a souvenir medal or other recognition.

Hood River Woman Active.

The Woman's club of Hood River, Ore., has for the past year devoted one session each month to civic matters—this along educational lines. In a practical way the club has looked after the improvement of the cemetery and assisted in employing a caretaker; it co-operated with the county officials in grading and seeding the courthouse grounds, in planting flowers and laying walks; it has been instrumental in having many trees labeled with warnings against tying horses or in other ways injuring them; it has established an annual clean-up day, which has been accompanied by a campaign of education along sanitary lines, and the club is now "chief rooter" for a public library, to which end it has raised several hundred dollars. In Hood River, as throughout Oregon, the women are the leaders in most of the civic improvement work.

"You can search me! I don't keep cases on him. As long as he does his work I don't care where he goes at quitting time." He resolved that this girl should learn nothing from him.

"There seem to be very few white women in this place," she said after a pause.

"Only one, till you people came. Maybe you've crossed her trail?"

"Mr. Emerson told me about her. He seems quite fond of her."

"I've always said they'd make a swell looking pair."

"One can hardly blame her for trying to catch him."

"Oh, you can make book that she didn't start no lovemaking. She ain't the kind to curl up in a man's ear and whisper. She don't have to. All she needs to do is look natural. The men will fall like ripe persimmons."

"They have been together a great deal, I suppose."

"Every hour of the day, and the days are long," said Fraser cheerfully. "But he ain't crippled. He could have walked away if he'd wanted to. It's a good thing he didn't, though, because she's done more to win this bet for us than we've done ourselves."

"She's unusually pretty," the girl remarked coldly.

"Yes, and she's just as bright as she is good looking. But I don't care for blonds." Fraser gazed admiringly at the brown hair before him and rolled his eyes eloquently. "I'm strong for brunettes, I am. It's the creole blood in me."

She gathered up her wild flowers and rose, saying:

"I must be going."

"I'll go with you." He jumped to his feet with alacrity.

"Thank you. I prefer to walk alone."

"Declined with thanks!" he murmured. "I'd need ear muffs and mittens to handle her. I think I'll build me some bonfire and thaw out. She must own the mint."

At the upper cannery Mildred found Alton Clyde with the younger Berry girl. She called him aside and talked earnestly with him for several minutes.

"All right," he said at length. "I'm glad to get out, of course. The rest is up to you."

Mildred's lips were white and her voice hard as she cried:

"I am thoroughly sick of it all! I have played the fool long enough!"

"Now, look here," Clyde objected weakly, "you may be mistaken, and it doesn't look like quite the square thing to do." But she silenced him with an angry gesture.

"Leave that to me. I'm through with him."

"All right. Let's hunt up the governor." Together they went to the office in search of Wayne Wayland.

A half hour later when Clyde rejoined Miss Berry she noticed that he seemed ill at ease, gazing down the bay with a worried, speculative look in his colorless eyes.

Boyd Emerson roused from his death-like slumber late in the afternoon, still worn from his long strain and aching in every muscle. He was in wretched plight physically, but his heart was aglow with gladness. Big George was still at the traps, and the unceasing rumble from across the way told him that the fish were still coming in. As he was finishing his breakfast a watchman appeared in the doorway.

"There's a launch at the dock with some people from above," he announced. "I stopped them, according to orders, but they want to see you."

"Show them to the office." Boyd rose and went into the other building, where a moment later he was confronted by Wayne Wayland and Willis Marsh. The old man nodded to him shortly. Marsh began:

"We heard about your good fortune. Mr. Wayland has come to look over your plant."

"It is not for sale."

"How many fish are you getting?"

"That is my business." He turned to Mr. Wayland. "I hardly expected to see you here. Haven't you insulted me enough?"

"Just a moment before you order me out. I'm a stockholder in this company, and I am within my rights."

"You a stockholder? How much stock do you own? Where did you get it?"

"I own 35,000 shares outright." Mr. Wayland tossed a packet of certificates upon the table. "And I have options on all the stock you placed in Chicago. I said you would hear from me when the time came."

"So you think the time has come to crush me, eh?" said Emerson. "Well, you've been swindled. Only one-third of the capital stock has been sold, and Alton Clyde holds 35,000 shares of that."

The old man smiled grimly. "I have not been swindled."

"Then Clyde sold out!" exploded Boyd.

"Yes. I paid him back the $10,000 he put in, and I took over the 25,000 shares you got Mildred to take."

"Mildred!" Emerson started as if he had been struck. "Are you insane? Mildred doesn't own— Why, Alton never told me who put up that money!"

"Don't tell me you didn't know!" cried Wayne Wayland. "You knew all the time. You worked your friends out and then sent that whipper snapper to my daughter when you saw you were about to fail. You managed well. You knew she couldn't refuse."

"How did you find out that she held the stock?"

"She told me, of course."

"Don't ask me to believe that. If she hadn't told you before she wouldn't tell you now. All I can say is that she acted of her own free will. I never dreamed she put up that $25,000. What do you intend to do now that you have taken over these holdings?"

"What do you think? I would spend ten times the money to save my daughter." The old man was quivering.

"You are only a minority stockholder. The control of this enterprise still rests with me and my friends."

"Your friends!" cried Mr. Wayland. "That's what brings me here, you and your friends! I'll break you and your friends if it takes my fortune."

"I can understand your dislike of me, but my associates have never harmed you."

"Your associates! And who are they? A lawless ruffian, who openly threatened Willis Marsh's murder, and a loose woman from the dance halls."

"I'LL STRIP YOUR BACK AND LASH YOU TILL YOU HOWL LIKE A DOG."

"Take care!" cried Emerson in a sharp voice.

The old man waved his hands as if at a loss for words. "Look here! You can't be an utter idiot. You must know who she is."

"Do you? Then tell me."

Wayne Wayland turned his back in disgust. "Do you really wish to know?" Marsh's smooth voice questioned.

"I do."

"She is a very common sort," said Willis Marsh. "I am surprised that you never heard of her while you were in the 'upper country.' She followed the mining camps and lived as such women do. She is an expert with cards. She even dealt faro in some of the camps."

"How do you know?"

"I looked up her history in Seattle. She is very—well, notorious."

"People talk like that about nearly every woman in Alaska."

"I didn't come here to argue about that woman's character," broke in Mr. Wayland. "You have said enough now, so that you will either prove your words or apologize."

"If you want proof, take your own relation with her. It's notorious. Even Mildred has heard of it."

"I can explain to her in a word."

"Perhaps you can also explain that affair with Hilliard. If so you had better do it. I suppose you didn't know anything about that either. I suppose you don't know why he advanced that loan after once refusing it. They have a name for men like you who take money from women of her sort."

Emerson uttered a terrible cry, and his face blanched to a gray pallor.

"Do you mean to say—I sent—her—to Hilliard?"

"Hilliard as good as told me so himself. Do you wonder that I am willing to spend a fortune to protect my girl from a man like you? I'm going to break you. I've got a foothold in this enterprise of yours, and I'll root you out if it takes a million. I'll kick you back into the gutter where you belong."

Boyd stood appalled at the violence of this outburst. The man seemed insane. He could not find words to answer him.

"You did not come down here to tell me that," he said at last.

"No. I came here with a message from Mildred. She has told me to dismiss you once and for all."

"I shall take my dismissal from no one but her. I can explain everything."

"I expected you to say that. If you want her own words read this." With shaking fingers he thrust a letter before Emerson's eyes. "Read it."

The young man opened the envelope and read in a handwriting he knew only too well:

Dear Boyd—The conviction has been growing on me for some time that you and I have made a serious mistake. It is not necessary to go into details. Let us spare each other that unpleasantness. I am familiar with all that father will say to you and his feelings are mine; hence there is no necessity for further explanations. Believe me this is much the simplest way. MILDRED.

Boyd crushed the note in his palm and tossed it away carelessly.

"You dictate well," he said quietly, "but I shall tell her the truth, and she will"—

"Oh, no, you won't. You won't see her again. I have seen to that. Mildred is engaged to Willis Marsh. It's all settled. I warn you to keep away. Her engagement has been announced to all our friends on the yacht."

"I tell you I won't take my dismissal from any one but her. I shall come aboard the Grande Dama tonight."

"Mr. Marsh and I may have something to say to that."

Boyd wheeled upon Marsh with a look that made him recoil.

"If you try to cross me I'll strip your back and lash you till you howl like a dog."

Marsh's florid face went pale. His tongue became suddenly too dry for speech. But Wayne Wayland was not to be cowed.

"I warn you again to keep away from my daughter!" he cried furiously.

"And I warn you that I shall come aboard the yacht tonight alone."

The president of the trust turned and, followed by his lieutenant, left the room without another word.

* * * * * * * *

Cherry Malotte, coming down to the cannery on her daily visit, saw Willis Marsh and Mr. Wayland leaving it. Wondering, she hurried into the main building in search of Boyd. The place was as busy as when she had left it on the afternoon before, and she saw that the men had been at work all night. Many of them were sprawled in corners, where they had sunk from weariness, snatching a moment's rest before the boss kicked them back to their posts. The Chinese hands were stolidly performing their tasks, their yellow faces haggard with the strain. At the butchering tables yesterday's crew were still slitting, slashing, hacking at the pile of fish that never seemed to grow less. Some of them were giving up, staggering away to their bunks, while others with more vitality had stood so long in the slime and salt drip that their feet had swelled, and it had become necessary to cut off their shoes.

Boyd was standing in the door of the office. In a few words he told her of Mr. Wayland's threat.

"Do you think he can injure the company?" she inquired anxiously.

"I haven't a doubt of it. He can work very serious harm at least."

"Tell me, why did he turn against you so suddenly? What made Miss Wayland angry with you?"

"I—I would rather not."

"Why? I'm your partner, and I ought to be told. You and George and I will have to work together closer than ever now. Don't let's begin by concealing anything."

"Well, perhaps you had better know the whole thing," said Boyd slowly. "Mildred does not like you. Her father's mind has been poisoned by Marsh. It seems they resent our friendship. They believe all sorts of things."

"So I am the cause of your trouble after all."

"They blame me equally—more than you. It seems that Marsh made an inquiry into your—well, your life history—and he babbled all the gossip he heard to them. Of course they believed it, not knowing you as I do, and they misunderstood our friendship. But I can explain, and I shall, to Mildred. Then I shall prove Marsh a liar. Perhaps I can show Mr. Wayland that he was in the wrong. It's our only hope."

"What did Marsh say about me?" asked the girl.

She was pale to the lips.

"He said a lot of things that at any other time I would have made him swallow on the spot. But it's only a pleasure deferred. With your help I'll do it in their presence. I don't like to tell you this, but the truth is vital to us all, and I want to arm myself."

Cherry was silent.

"You may leave it to me," he said gently. "I will see that Marsh sets you right."

"There is nothing to set right," said the girl wearily. "Marsh told the truth, I dare say."

"The truth! My God! You don't know what you're saying!"

"Yes, I do." She returned his look of shocked horror with half hearted defiance. "You must have known who I am. Fraser knew, and he must have told you. You knew I had followed the mining camps. You knew I had lived by my wits. You must have known what people thought of me. I cast my lot in with the people of this country, and I had to match my wits with those of every man I met. Sometimes I won, sometimes I did not. You know the north."

"I didn't know," he said slowly. "I never thought—I wouldn't allow myself to think"—

First Christmas Observance.

Christmas gets its name from the mass celebrated in the early days of the Christian church in honor of the birth of Christ, its first solemnization having been ordered by Pope Telesphorus. This was in or before the year 138, for in that year Pope Telesphorus died.

At first Christmas was what is known as a movable feast, just as Easter is now, and owing to misunderstandings was celebrated as late as April or May. In the fourth century an ecclesiastical investigation was ordered, and upon the authority of the tables of the censors in the Roman archives Dec. 25 was agreed upon as the date of the Saviour's nativity. Tradition fixed the hour of birth at about midnight, and this led to the celebration of a midnight mass in all the churches, a second at dawn and a third in the later morning.

To Show Their Work.

The G. T. Newell company of Birmingham, Ala., has been given permission by the board of revenue of that county to build at its own expense a mile of improved road between the villages of Powderly and Bessemer. The road is to be completed before the meeting of the Alabama good roads convention meets in the fall. It is understood that the company is taking this action to bring to the attention of the Good Roads association the road machinery which it manufactures.

CIVIC CLEANLINESS.

How Women Can Advance the Work of Municipal Housekeeping.

More than thirty years ago the chief of the bureau of health in Glasgow, Scotland, a city of the worst slums the world has ever known, saw that it would be impossible to relieve the situation unless women could be appointed to help in the work of municipal housekeeping. The women are the home makers and keepers, and it needed women to teach them sane living and make them acquainted with sanitary laws and regulations.

Lord Derby said, "Of what use is sanitary legislation if it cannot be practically applied?" The co-operation of the general public is needed to make such laws effective. After much effort women were appointed and called health visitors. They went from house to house, inspecting and educating the housekeepers in simple laws of sanitation. So much benefit was derived from this innovation that soon the large cities of Great Britain followed the example of Glasgow. Sanitary institutes have been established where men and women are trained to teach public and domestic hygiene. Yonkers, N. Y., was the first city in America to have a woman inspector appointed by the board of health. Such good results were obtained that many other cities in the United States followed the example, and many more would do so if public opinion could be aroused to the absolute necessity of such work.

STORY OF A BRASS BUTTON

It Decided In a Matter of Life and Death.

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

In the class of 18— at West Point were two cadets, the one from the north, the other from the south, who became great chums. Donald Dargan was the southerner, Edwin Chandler the northerner. It is seldom that two young men, each possessing such stirling qualities, are to be found bound together by the ties of friendship. Without being aware of the fact, they both were claimants for the hand of the same girl. She decided in favor of the southerner. When Chandler congratulated Dargan on his having obtained the prize the latter did not know that he had won it from his friend.

Having been graduated, Dargan in the cavalry and Chandler in the artillery, they served at their respective stations till the civil war came on. There were two sets of United States army officers from the south during the war—those who went over to the Confederacy and those who remained in the Federal army. Dargan elected to fight under the stars and stripes. He came to this decision after long thought and great anguish. Ranging themselves under the stars and bars were his two brothers, his relatives and the friends of his youth. To espouse the northern cause would render him to them a renegade, traitor—all that is hateful and contemptible.

He reached his decision without a word of conference with any one, not even his wife, who sympathized with the Confederate cause. She was disappointed, but respected her husband's motives.

One of the Federal armies in the field was in a critical position. A council of war was convened, and the general commanding called for the opinions of those present. One of the generals rose and said:

"We must send a man in among the different divisions of the enemy who will not fail to be able to bring us information of his numbers and condition, but who has the ability to form a plan for us of extricating ourselves."

"WE MAY NOT GET OUT OF THIS."

"What officer of rank capable of forming such a plan will be willing to place himself in the position of a spy?" asked the commander.

"Leave that to me, general. I will see that the plan is executed."

The next morning an officer of rank, dressed in the uniform of a Confederate colonel, attended by a single orderly also wearing the gray, rode into the Confederate lines and announced himself as having been sent on by the inspector general at Richmond to ascertain the condition and requirements of the army and make a report thereof. He was received by the general commanding with the respect due his rank and given every facility for the execution of his work. An officer was directed to ride with him through the various divisions of the army, and the officers of the staff were ordered to prepare reports of the condition of their departments.

All day the spy rode through the Confederate camps, inspecting the troops and taking notes of their requirements. While doing this he was observing the position, its strength or weakness, the amount of artillery—indeed, all such information as could enable him to form a plan for getting the Federal army confronting the Confederates from its perilous position. When he returned to the Confederate headquarters he called his orderly aside and said to him:

"We may not get out of this, and if we don't and you find an opportunity to transmit any information let it be this:

"Send a brigade around by the road to G. and strike their left in rear. When you hear their guns attack their right with all your remaining force."

The orderly wrote this on a piece of paper and committed it to memory, then destroyed the memorandum.

After supper the so called inspector announced that, having finished his work, he would set out for Richmond. He was taking leave of the general commanding when a Confederate officer rode up to headquarters and dismounted. Entering the general's tent, seeing the inspector, he stood in mute surprise. As for the inspector, he turned a shade paler. The newcomer was an old army acquaintance in ante bellum days, both having served at the same post.

"Chandler, what are you doing here and in this uniform?"

"I came here to benefit the cause I serve or die. I'll tell you in meeting you turns the scale for death."

There was a commotion in the Confederate camp at this discovery that the "inspector" and his orderly were spies and that had it not been for untimely arrival they would have got away with ample information to insure the defeat and possibly the capture of their whole force. They were both arrested, a drumhead court martial convened and within an hour after their detection were sentenced to be hanged at daylight the next morning.

Owing to their former acquaintance and service together as brother officers Colonel Albert, the officer who had recognized Chandler, made a strong effort to save him. He appealed to Richmond in his behalf by telegraph, but the authorities there seemed to think that if either should be spared it was the orderly, who was little more than a boy.

Meanwhile both men, being under sentence of death, were permitted to communicate and to write letters to those who would mourn them. When Colonel Chandler had signified his willingness to undertake the mission the officer who had arranged it suggested that he take with him an orderly, both as becoming his supposed rank and because if the principal were detected the orderly might possibly carry the information he had acquired. Volunteers were called for, and the young man who was now awaiting execution had been selected from among those who had volunteered. Up to this time Colonel Chandler was ignorant even of his orderly's name. The young man wrote a farewell letter to his mother, addressed it and laid it on the pine camp table on which he had penned it. Colonel Chandler noticed the superscription, and a look of anguish crossed his face.

Soon after midnight came news that but one of the two should be executed as a warning to spies and which was to suffer should be determined by lot. Colonel Chandler begged that he might be made invincible without resort to the wheel of fortune. His application was considered and a reply returned that inasmuch as the order from the secretary to determine by lot which should die was specific the general did not care to take the responsibility of disobeying it. The application was forwarded by telegraph, but no answer was received before the hour that had been fixed by the court for the execution. So Colonel Chandler was informed that the matter must proceed in conformity with the outstanding orders.

At daylight in the morning the provost marshal of the Confederate force entered the tent where the two spies were confined, carrying a hat in his hand. Having read to them the order bearing on their case, he said:

"In this hat are two brass buttons, the one with raised letters U. S. A. stamped on it, the other bearing the letters C. S. A. You will turn your backs, put out a hand in rear and take a button. He who draws the C. S. A. button will go forth to execution."

Colonel Chandler stepped up to the officer holding the hat, thrust in his hand, drew it forth, looked at the letters on a button he held in it and handed it to the officer. It was stamped U. S. A.

Any man thus imposing upon a fellow human being the task of deciding whether he shall live or die will naturally be under considerable emotion. The Confederate officer holding the hat was so moved that he threw it down without paying any attention to the remaining button. Later he returned for the hat to give it to its owner, and, feeling for the button, failed to find it. He hunted for it, turning up the lining, but it was not in the hat.

Colonel Chandler was taken out and hanged. When his body was let down his right hand was found to be tightly closed. The fingers were forced open and one rolled a button stamped with the letters U. S. A. He had taken out both buttons, giving up the one that meant death. Fearing that his intention to prevent his young comrade from sharing the chances with him might be discovered and thwarted, he had held the evidence of it tightly closed in his fist till the last moment.

The orderly was sent to Libby prison at Richmond. There he was informed that his superior had taken the chances of both and had died concealing the evidence of his act. The young man was in due time exchanged and soon after mustered out of the service, his term of enlistment having expired.

When he reached home and was clasped in his mother's arms he told her the sequel to the story she already knew—the story of the other button.

"Why, mother," he asked, "do you suppose he took my chance upon himself?"

"Because," she said, "he was a noble man."

The secret she kept from her son. She was the wife of Donald Dargon, and the man who had retained her son to her was he who had loved and lost her to his friend. But for the first time she told her husband that he and Chandler had been rivals and that Chandler had not only suffered his loss in silence, but had returned to her and him their son.

WINDOW CLEANING.

How the Panes Can Be Washed In an Economical Manner.

Strange as it may seem, there is a right and wrong way to wash windows, and as this operation is usually dreaded the following method will doubtless be appreciated, as it saves both time and labor: Choose a dull day or at least a time when the sun is not shining on the windows, for when the sun shines on the window it causes it to be dry streaked, no matter how much it is rubbed. Take a painter's brush and dust them inside and out, washing all the woodwork inside before touching the glass.

The latter must be washed slowly in warm water diluted with ammonia. Do not use soap. Use a small cloth with a pointed stick to get the dust out of the corners. Wipe dry with a soft piece of cotton cloth. Do not use linen, as it makes the glass linty when dry. Polish with tissue paper or old newspaper. You will find that this can be done in half the time taken where soap is used, and the result will be brighter windows.—Storekeeper.

How to Boil Milk Successfully.

The one sure way to count on heating milk correctly is to cook it in a double boiler. It takes longer, but the possibility of scorching is eliminated. These boilers are now so cheap as to be within reach of most housekeepers, but if cost must be considered a small saucepan inside a larger one answers every purpose. As most of us know how quickly milk burns when heating it is well to know what to do when such a calamity overtakes us and there is no time or no milk to begin over again. Remove the pan quickly from the stove and stand it in a bowl of cold water. Add a pinch of salt and stir well. While this may not entirely destroy the scorched taste, it lessens it so that it can scarcely be detected.

How to Preserve Butter.

To preserve butter any length of time, first, work out all the buttermilk; second, use salt; third, pack in air tight jars or cans; fourth, keep in a cool place, and you will have nice butter for years if desired to keep so long.

Standard Time.

Standard time was established by agreement in 1883, primarily for the benefit of the railroads.
